AN interview in London with Mr. Sidney R. Kent on the subject of stars and salaries includes the quotation: "There are not enough big people to go around. I can get plenty of cheap people but the people who can do things have to be made. . . . There is only a handful of good people."

And this set us thinking about "people who can do things" and the handful that were in the business when Mr. Kent came along out of the West. The handful of that era included: Miss Mary Pickford, Mr. Charles Chaplin, Miss Bessie Barriscale, Miss Theda Bara, Miss Marguerite Clark, Mr. William S. Hart, Mr. H. B. Walthall, Mme. Olga Petrova and Mr. Francis X. Bushman, just to name a few.

In that day there seemed to be enough box office names to go around. But in that era motion pictures were sold to exhibitors, not traded in blocks between chain buyers in Broadway. The loaning of players was unknown. There would have been bloodshed on Broadway if Triangle had suggested borrowing Miss Fannie Ward. There was competition in New York, Fort Lee, Jacksonville, College Point, New Rochelle, Hollywood, Santa Barbara and Long Beach, in the matter of production, and in exhibition all the way from Broadway to Bad Axe, Michigan; Wahoo, Nebraska, and Oskaloosa, Kansas.

The screen makes the stars. If the screen wants more there's a way.

THE CALL OF COLOR

THE steady march of the color appeal is recorded by a study just completed by the Ladies' Home Journal which finds that approximately forty per cent of all magazine advertising in 1932 was for space in color. One authority, Dr. Daniel Starch, is quoted as saying his researches indicate that color pulls 53 per cent more direct returns than black and white. Also Advertising Age finds an increasing use in the national media of bleed pages, both in black and white and color.

THE witch hazel is spreading its star twinkling blossoms in yellow clouds in the Connecticut swamps, closing the flowering season against the coming of the trout lilies on the far edge of the winter. DISTILLERS

Joseph P. Kennedy, of Boston, and formerly of FBO, Pathe Exchange, Inc., and sundry other film projects, who arrived back from a visit to Europe and the British isles with James Roosevelt, and some other guests, is currently said to be planning a large scale invasion of the liquor market, specializing on Scotch brands with which he has made connection through the offices of young Mr. Roosevelt. It is said Mr. Kennedy is now casting about for a general sales manager. As recorded in these pages some weeks ago, various members of Mr. Kennedy's onetime motion picture staff, including Clinton J. Scollard, Edward J. O'Leary and John McAloon, have gone into a project of surveying New England for outlets for the National Distillers Corporation. . . .

TALKIES' LINGO

Once again the "lingo" of the "talkies" is blamed—or given credit—for authoritative additions to the great Oxford English Dictionary, London-published, supreme arbiter on matters linguistic. Into a new 900-page supplement have gone words and phrases purely American, infiltrated, it is said, via the American film, become common usage. Among them: "debunk," "bump off," "wow," "wisecrack," "taken for a ride." The "talkies," merely an instrument, not an originator, receive gratuitous, not too desirable credit. . . .

IMPORTANT FEMININE

Lavish last week was Fred Wehrenberg, St. Louis, Eastern Missouri, Southern Illinois MPTO president, in praise of his feminine hearers, addressing St. Louis' Better Films Council. Appropriate at the moment was his suggestion that all showmen follow his successful example: 24-sheet Family Night shows. Convinced is Showman Wehrenberg of the commercial commonsense of supporting, taking advantage of the Council's work, cooperation. From him came the expressed wish every other exhibitor would be "wise" enough to realize that he should "get fully behind the efforts of you women to help him toward business success." No question is there of the importance of the feminine contingent. . . .

LEGISLATION

As perennially occurs, recently in Kansas up popped new censorship legislation: proposal of Legislator C. H. Palmer to rate films, A and B, for family and children; D and E only for those over 18. Commonsensible Kansas papers rose up editorially to squelch as far as possible. Respectively, the Hutchinson, "News," Newton "Kansan-Republican," Chanute "Tribune" squelched; ". . . would pack any theatre that could advertise an E rating guaranteed by the state board of censorship . . . people are that way"; " . . . Is it possible that the member is merely growing old and losing interest . . . ;" " . . . the trouble with such a law would be that occasionally a film would be branded as so clean that even a college sophomore couldn't find a double meaning and it would play to empty houses." Legislating morals is like pushing skyscrapers—they just won't budge. . . .

20-YEAR LAUGHS

One day, some 20-odd years agone, Cecil B. DeMille was making his later famous "The Squaw Man." To his desk came a notation: a young cowboy extra suggested for a role, his price $5 per day. Penned DeMille: "Too much!" The extra, Hal Roach by name, started some time later to make comedies. He is still at it, and in January to come, will celebrate 20 years of it. Fittingly will the week be commemorated, many a star of today (Lionel Barrymore, Polly Moran, Jean Harlow, Jackie Cooper, Will Rogers, Janet Gaynor, etc.) having learned early cinematic lessons under the Roach tutelage. Also a celebrant will be MGM, Roach distributor. A long time, yet all too short, at short subjects. . . .

AGAIN—SURVEY

Again and yet again, educators, psychologists, and pseudos of various sorts concern themselves avidly, momentarily with the motion picture and the child, generally arriving most emphatically nowhere, but propounding many a long scientific-appearing screed on whys, wherefors. Now under California State Superintendent of Public Instruction Vierling Kersey has been launched the inevitable survey: to determine what is a good film for school children. For one year will the survey survey: sleep, rest, emotional reaction, conduct, constructive education. A marked film improvement, sees Supt. Kersey, in the past four years. And the now bewhiskered query goes on. . . .

PUNITIVE INVASION

In the nature of an American punitive invasion against Mexican history, truth, good taste, editorially proclaims Mexico City's "El Grafico," thus seriously indicting the intent of MGM's currently produced "Viva Villa," another company's "Viva Zapata." Calling on the government to refuse permission to make such as these "derogatory" films, "El Grafico" concludes its blast: "We shall see foreign companies picturing . . . in purely mercantile enterprises to please a foreign public that will not be able to imagine Mexico as other than murdering and robbing and in a condition of the most extreme misery." Thus are friendly relations not promoted. . . .

EAGLE ROMANCE

Antony Muto and Irene Crisp, both of the Washington office of the New York Film Board, who met incident to the struggles of motion picture code making at the hearings at the capital, were married at Rockeville, Maryland, last Saturday. Mrs. Crisp is secretary to Bert New of the Washington office of the Film Board, and Mr. Muto joined the organization in liaison and diplomatic capacities some months ago at about the time that Sol A. Rosenblatt was appointed deputy administrator in charge of motion picture affairs under the National Recovery Administration. This is the first Blue Eagle romance to flower into matrimony. . . .

HOLIDAY CRUISE

Eastward-hoing on a vacation, sailing leisurely via the Panama Canal, is coming Merian C. Cooper, producer plenipotentiary of the RKO studios in Hollywood. Riding the crest ahead of him had come "Little Women," current none-than-whomer at the Music Hall of Radio City, and before that Katharine Hepburn's "Morning Glory" and of course "King Kong." A vacation well-earned. . . .

OLD BLUE LAWS COSTING THEATRES MILLIONS ARE RETARDING RECOVERY

by FRED AYER

Exhibitors are losing millions of dollars annually through state and local Blue Laws which prohibit the Sunday showing of motion pictures in specific communities, and these laws are responsible for the closing down of a large amount of business in the industry for almost 15 per cent of the time and this in a period when every possible wellspring to general recovery is being tapped. This one-day-in-seven shutdown, which for years has barred to exhibitors in many sections a material increase of income, also closes the road to greater employment in many business directions as sought in the National Recovery Act and under President Roosevelt's program for more jobs and greater purchasing power.

America's motion picture theatre receipts would rise 14 per cent were the Blue Laws universally eliminated, in the estimation of Jack Cohn, vice-president and treasurer of Columbia Pictures Corporation, which is rapidly completing an investigation of the situation.

When Columbia began to check on Blue Laws several weeks ago, available lists of localities still retaining these antiquated regulations were found inaccurate and subsequently the company initiated its own survey.

Local Opinion Surveyed

Letters and questionnaires were sent to the 31 branch offices to sound out local opinion. To date, less than three weeks after the movement was begun, the returns are 50 per cent complete.

Early in October General Hugh S. Johnson, NRA Administrator, wrote to the chief executives of all film companies a letter outlining certain broad conclusions which the Administration had reached with regard to methods of increasing sales, and one of the principal conclusions pointed to the urgent need of aggressive and "intelligent advertising at this time, and to the increased effectiveness of your advertising dollar under present improved conditions."

"During the past few years the productivity of advertising has been reduced by three important factors: (1) millions of men and women were without employment, and consequently without purchasing power; (2) those still employed were greatly reduced in income, and, (3) everyone who had any money at all was deterred from spending it by fear and apprehension about the future," General Johnson's letter said. There followed helpful suggestions calculated to convince the consumer that he can save money by acting now to supply his needs for certain specific products, in which the motion picture is included, and to prove to the consumer that future price rises are not only inevitable, but for the good of all concerned.

Benefit to Many Enterprises

In answer to the Administrator's letter, Mr. Cohn advanced the theory that were Sunday Blue Laws repealed, the results would not only benefit the motion picture business, but other enterprises as well.

"In common with many other industries, we are confronted not only with national taxation, but with state taxation as well," Mr. Cohn wrote, "with no possibility at present of increasing our earnings sufficiently to offset this additional expenditure. It therefore seems to me that if the NRA encouraged the elimination of the old, Sunday Blue Law, the results would not only benefit the motion picture industry, but such enterprises, for example, as delicatessen and food establishments, drug, confectionery and cigar stores, etc."

Blue Laws, Mr. Cohn believes, are entirely out of keeping with the times, and are responsible for shutting out an enormous amount of motion picture business for 15 per cent of the week's showing time.

"In the motion picture field, that particular period has the greatest earning potentialities due to the fact that the public is idle, eager for recreation, yet without facilities to satisfy that demand in communities where Sunday closing is enforced," he told General Johnson. "You will probably be surprised to learn that this condition holds true in approximately one-quarter of the country, although in these same communities athletic or sport activities that afford little or no employment are permitted."

Taking Trade Out of Town

Mr. Cohn pointed out that it is a fact that at present many persons in those communities where Sunday showings are forbidden by Blue Laws will travel to nearby communities to see motion pictures. An example in point is Philadelphia, which finds many of its residents flocking to Camden, N. J., where theatres are open.

"Obviously," said Mr. Cohn, "the limited capacity in the latter city causes thousands of Philadelphians to stay home, whereas if Sunday movies were permitted, the theatres in Philadelphia would be crowded on that day of the week, with benefit to all concerned."

Under the NRA code, seven-day-a-week operation involves employment for additional personnel, the Columbia executive said. This is true not only on the part of the theatres themselves, but also for the film delivery companies, the express companies and other allied businesses. With the additional wear and tear on film, nationwide seven-day operation would also entail more film laboratory work, besides more advertising and advertising material, such as posters, heralds and more newspaper advertising.

"Furthermore, it means seven-day consumption of five-day production, which must have a favorable influence upon conditions," he said.

"The whole thing in a nutshell is simply this," Mr. Cohn said this week. "The main purpose of the NRA being to increase employment and spread opportunity as widely as possible, the elimination of Sunday closing is not to be overlooked as an instrument to that end. Under the restricted hours of individual employment a considerable increase in personnel will be involved in every theatre. Also seven days in operation would mean the consumption of more supplies of every kind, involving further employment, and, in addition, this operation of theatres for an additional day would add largely to government revenue, through increased amusement tax collections."

Results of Columbia's survey to date follow in alphabetical order, according to territories and exchanges:

ATLANTA (covering Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Florida)

Four hundred theatres are in operation in this territory, but only 125 are open on Sunday. No communities in any of these four states permit Sunday shows or sports, but the Florida law is not enforced and all can, and do, open that want to. In Birmingham, Ala., Sunday shows were voted for. In Atlanta Sunday shows are running, giving the net proceeds to charity. Old Blue Laws figure strenuously and churches are definitely opposed to Sunday showings. Most theatre owners in this section are themselves opposed to Sunday shows, and while the extent to which Sunday operation would increase the business of closed theatres is said to be problematical, Sunday shows in certain towns have shown a substantial increase even over Saturday business. Increased employment in theatres alone is estimated at 15 per cent, if the Blue Laws were to be repealed.

BUFFALO

Approximately 262 theatres operate in this territory, with only five doing business on Sunday. All communities permit athletic and sports diversions on Sundays and the New York state law with relation to Sunday showings is rele-

WILLIAM FOX BEFORE SENATORS ON HAZY TRAIL OF FILM FINANCE

$4,500,000 Profit from Wall St. Syndicates in $38,000,000 Write-up in General Theatres Equipment Stock Revealed

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Discussing intricacies of motion picture financing so involved as to be admittedly beyond the comprehension of any but the master minds of Wall Street, the United States Senate stock market investigating committee at Washington continued this week to drive through a maze of millions in pursuit of the details surrounding the manipulation by the financiers of motion picture companies and motion picture stocks during the heyday of prosperity, in the late 1920's.

The senators were lost more than once in the tangled web of testimony of Harley L. Clarke, public utility and motion picture financier, and Murry Dodge, former vice-president of Chase Securities Corporation, as they detailed the dramatic story of how William Fox "lost" control of his film "empire" in 1930—for the sum of $15,000,000, plus other valuable considerations, which were paid to him by General Theatres Equipment, Inc., financed by the Chase interests and a bankers' syndicate.

Legal Batteries Booming

Meanwhile, legal batteries of the various corporations of General Theatres Equipment, Fox Film and Fox Theatres, Chase Bank, Film Securities and Loew's were involved along other fronts in a series of court arguments, hearings and investigations.

While the fiery Ferdinand Pecora, counsel, and the senate finance committee were listening to testimony at the Capital on the participation of Chase and GTE in acquiring control of the Fox companies, a subcommittee was in Los Angeles hearing details of the events which led up to the bankruptcy of Fox West Coast and various theatre subsidiaries.

This senatorial group, however, suddenly called the hearing to a halt, nursing a "headache," and admitting it was bewildered by the fantastic corporate structure which traced control of Fox West Coast Theatres to Westco to Fox Film to Chase National Bank.

At Wilmington, Del., Senator Hastings, receiver for General Theatres Equipment and Fox Theatres' receivers, and others, were "burying the hatchet" in a dispute over certain stock assets.

In New York, Loew's, Inc., postponed its annual stockholders meeting until it can be learned who the stockholders are after the auction sale of 660,900 shares now held by Film Securities Corp.

William Fox Called to Washington

Reaching a point finally where a $38,000,000 write-up in the value of General Theatres Equipment stock and a $4,500,000 profit from Wall Street syndicates therein were revealed, the main senatorial investigating committee at Washington brought William Fox into the picture, ordering his appearance before it on Thursday, under subpena.

The write-up in the stock took place while negotiations were underway for acquisition by General Theatres of several equipment corporations controlled by Harley Clarke. These stocks, International Projector Corporation, National Theatre Supply Corp. and four lamp companies, had a book value of $4,756,000, but were taken over by General Theatres at a cost of $43,040,000, the committee at Washington learned during the questioning of Mr. Clarke.

So complex were the deals outlined by Mr. Clarke, and other witnesses, that it was almost impossible to trace the sinuous trail of profit. However, it was brought out that Mr. Clarke acquired all of the stock of the Nicholas Power Company for $150 a share and sold it for $215; that he bought the stock of the Mitchell Camera Company for $1,475,000 as an agent for General Theatres, organized Grandeur, Inc., to take over the physical assets of Mitchell, valued at $331,960, and sold them for $3,100,000, although he had told the committee he received only what they cost him.

Another profit of $9 a share was made by the bankers through the purchase at $90 of $6,000,000 of gold debentures issued by General Theatres which were sold to the public at $99.

Four syndicates operating in General Theatres stock in 1929 netted a profit of nearly $4,500,000. One syndicate obtained 350,000 shares at $20, turned it over a few days later at $25, and sold it to the public at $32. Before the Wall Street "crash," the committee was told by Murry W. Dodge, former vice-president of Chase Securities, the stock reached $65. The company went into receivership last year and the stock now is practically valueless, it was said.

Dodge Tells the Story

It was Mr. Dodge who told the tale which led up to the calling of William Fox. He outlined to the committee how Mr. Fox had bought heavily in Loew's, Inc., both for himself and his Fox Film Company, and how the decline of these holdings in 1929 left Mr. Fox "on the spot" with $90,000,000 worth of short-term notes coming due.

Efforts of Mr. Clarke to safeguard contracts held by General Theatres with Fox companies by attempting to assist in the reorganization of the Fox "empire" were related by Mr. Dodge, who also told how, when suits to oust Mr. Fox from his own companies were initiated, Mr. Clarke conceived the idea of securing control for himself and finally did secure for General Theatres the William Fox interests in the film and theatre companies for $15,000,000 and an annual salary of $500,000 for five years. This $500,000 was to be paid for the five-year period even if Mr. Fox died in the interim, testified Mr. Dodge, who also told the senate investigators that another consideration was that General Theatres agreed to continue to pay the premiums on $3,500,000 of life insurance policies carried on William Fox by Fox Film.

Another contract, it was said, indicated that General Theatres agreed to pay Mr. Fox $3,000,000 for assignment of his claim for salary from Fox Film.

Mr. Dodge testified that the $90,000,000 in short-term notes previously mentioned as coming due early in 1930, caused Fox Film to face "serious financial embarrassment," although the company had operated as a profitable concern.

Mr. Dodge's testimony brought out the fact, which is generally understood, that Chase National Bank financed the purchase of stock control of Fox Film by a loan to General Theatres of $15,000,000, which loan was secured by shares of Fox Film and Fox Theatres. This was repaid on April 18, 1930, by a new Chase loan of $27,000,000.

Chase Made Other Loans to G.T.E.

Continuing, Mr. Dodge said that, at the same time, General Theatres agreed to buy from Fox Theatres some 1,600,000 shares of Fox Film Class A common stock for $30 a share, or $48,000,000, and General then authorized the sale of $30,000,000 of debentures and 617,000 shares of common stock.

Digressing for a moment from the Fox situation, Mr. Dodge testified that in addition to the loans mentioned above, Chase made four

BULLETIN

Chase National Bank late Wednesday submitted a report to the Senate investigation committee at Washington saying it has written off as lost a total of $55,510,588 against the $77,351,076 which it lent to and invested in General Theatres Equipment, Inc. Other late Wednesday developments:

The committee was told that part of a $4,000,000 profit made within two weeks by bankers who acquired Fox Film stock at $16,000,000 less than market prices, went to Shermar Corp., personal company of Albert Wiggin, then chairman of Chase Bank. Division of profits: Pynchon & Co., $1,117,382; Chase, $798,130; West & Co., $638,504; Hammons, $638,504; Dodge, $266,043; Ingold, $88,681; Eric & Drevers, $394,138. Chase's $798,130 was divided with Mr. Wiggin's Shermar company.

Testimony showed the bankers made $2,850,000 from selling GTE within five days and without putting up a penny.

Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, said William Fox really got $21,000,000 for his holdings, the "other considerations" from GTE, in addition to the $15,000,000 in cash, totaling $6,000,000.

An exhibit placed in the record was a letter to Chase showing that Elisha Walker, president of Bancamerica-Blair, threatened legal action unless his group was permitted to share in the Fox financing. As a result, Mr. Walker's group was given a 45 per cent participation in a one-year note issue by Halsey, Stuart & Co.

Ohio Independent Association Names Schwartz Leader

The Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Ohio was formally organized at a meeting of exhibitors at the Deshler-Wallick Hotel in Columbus last week. It was decided that only independents would be admitted and that the organization would not affiliate with any other association.

The following officers were elected unanimously: Ernest A. Schwartz, Cleveland, president; Frank W. Huss, Cincinnati, vice president; George W. Erdman, Cleveland, recording secretary and Robert Menches, Akron, treasurer. Directors are: Phillip Semelroth, Dayton; Harry Abram, Lancaster; Charles Justus, Theodore Perkas, Columbus; Herbert Lind, Zanesville; Paul Ellis, Warren; H. L. Walker, Salem; John Schwartz, Painesville; Robert Menches, Akron; Henry Greenberger, M. B. Horwitz and John Kalafat, Cleveland; John Perkas, Elyria; P. O. Frederick, Norwalk; Leo Dwyer, Celina; Jack O'Connell and Howard Feigley, Toledo; Henry Levy and Frank W. Huss, Cincinnati, and Nat Charnas, Toledo. Mr. Erdman was named temporary business manager.

A resolution was adopted not to sign the industry code at this time, since it is not in completed form, but the organization went on record endorsing the action of independents at the recent Chicago meeting. Max Stearn, veteran Columbus exhibitor, urged consolidation with the MPTO of Ohio, but was voted down. No plans were formulated to fight the existing Ohio ten per cent admission tax, but the organization plans to take action looking to repeal when the legislature reconvenes in January.

The grand jury of Franklin County heard the testimony of seven men identified with the industry in Ohio late last week, in connection with the jury's investigation on lobbying activities in the state legislature at Columbus. Dan Hoskins, county prosecutor, declared he intends to conduct a further investigation before placing any additional evidence before the grand jury.

Ontario Amusement Revenue Is Seen Reaching $900,000

A preliminary report from E. A. Dunlop, provincial treasurer at Toronto, Canada, indicates revenue from the amusement tax in Ontario for the fiscal year now closing will approximate $900,000. He declared this was one item which was well above government estimates made at the beginning of the year, and that returns from theatres had mounted steadily in recent months, an indication of better business.

Always a Place in America For Good British Pictures

Since the re-establishment of the British producing industry in the difficult days following the World War there has persisted in the British trade, in varying degree from one time to another, an impression that there existed a virtual boycott against British pictures in the American market.

This writer has repeatedly asserted over a period of many years that no such condition has existed. Against this assertion was urged the fact that British pictures either could not obtain distribution in this market or else received only scant representation. The statement that the type of picture received was not suitable to the American market afforded only partial satisfaction, if any at all.

It may now be recorded that the argument is over—or at least there is every reason to assume that it is over. The cause of it all is "The Private Life of Henry VIII." This production, one of the best attractions of recent years, irrespective of source, and certainly the best British production, has not only been accepted in the American market, but has actually received a hearty welcome.

This comes as proof of our frequently repeated assertion that there is now and always has been a proper place for really good pictures in the American market, irrespective of where they may originate. It is true, of course, that the principal American companies have and are entitled to have an advantageous position because of their theatre affiliations. And further, when they are depended upon for distribution it is proper and natural that they should look first to returns on product in which they have invested and for the making of which they have set up vast producing organizations, together with distribution facilities.

But this does not mean and has never meant that the foreign picture, if of suitable quality, cannot play successfully the American market. The imported article, unlike the experience it undergoes in other countries, finds here no organized propaganda against it—no test with which it must conform other than that of merit.

Tax Threat Faces Theatres In California Revenue Need

Roland A. Vandergrift, California state director of finance, has declared that additional revenue is necessary to balance the budget. A special session of the legislature is proposed, with a tax on theatre admissions suggested among other new sources of revenue.

Tri-State Acquires Four

Tri-State Theatres Corporation, Des Moines, has purchased the Des Moines Theatre Company, operating four local houses. Tri-State, the formation of which was recently announced by A. H. Blank, will absorb all Midwest theatre properties available, it was announced. Several deals are pending, including some in Kansas City. The company now controls 22 houses.

Warner Opens Checking Branch

Warner has opened regional headquarters in Kansas City for its new checking service which has replaced Ross Federal Service on percentage engagements. W. W. Flynn is in charge as field supervisor.

New Kansas Amusement Tax Proposed at Topeka

A tax of five per cent would be levied on amusements in Kansas under a bill introduced in the senate at Topeka by Joseph McDonald of Kansas City, Kan. The measure calls for a graduated sales tax, ranging from two to five per cent on various classifications of merchandise and services.

Sales of electric current, gas, telephone and telegraph service would have a rate of 3 per cent, while theatre tickets and radio service come under the five per cent classification. The only exemptions are those for commodities already paying an excise tax to the state and on sales to the state or federal government. Stiff penalties are provided for failure to pay and for false returns. Kansas legislators are veering towards a sales tax as a means of relieving real estate of the tax burden.

Buffalo Film Board Elects New Officers

New officers of the Buffalo Film Board of Trade, picked at a recent meeting, include: Dave Miller, Universal, president; Harry T. Dixon, RKO, treasurer; Joe Miller, Columbia, vice president. Miss Emma C. Abplanalp, former secretary, who has been supervising the work of the organization while acting as secretary of the Chicago board, may return to Buffalo if the position is made full time under the NRA.

CODE IS AT "LITTLE WHITE HOUSE" WITH INDUSTRY INTEREST LAGGING

Visits of Joseph Schenck and Eddie Cantor Officially "Purely Social"; Department of Justice Reported Opposed to Penalty Clauses as Contrary to the Recovery Act

by TERRY RAMSAYE

This weekend, at last, the code of practice for the motion picture industry under the National Recovery Administration is admittedly, or shall we say confessedly, in the hands of President Roosevelt.

The President is presumed to be taking the code under consideration while on his recuperative vacation at Warm Springs, Georgia.

By coincidence, we are officially assured, Mr. Joseph Schenck of United Artists and Twentieth Century Pictures, went this week to see the President at the watering place merely on a social visit. Also Mr. Eddie Cantor, who previously had made quite a line of statements about going to the Springs to see the President about the code, was also due to go, but that, too, was by official announcement reduced to a merely social matter.

This was the first time that the nation had been made so aware of the President's wide social acquaintance and social interest in the motion picture industry.

What with the diverse statements that have exuded from the office of General Hugh Johnson, administrator of the NRA, and the assorted movements thereabouts since the delivery of the code to that establishment by Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator, the actual present content of the document is conjectural, and what it may contain after it has gone under the hand of the President is twice conjectural.

The code seems to have fallen athwart the Department of Justice concerning some penalty clauses. The status of the labor scale provisions, the subject of much debate, is also considerably in doubt.

The industry will not know with any certitude about any part of the code until such time as it is finally approved and issued. Meanwhile, in general through the industry it would appear that the subject has lost its interest and that there is no considerable anticipation that it will prove of exciting moment as an influence on operations.

Meanwhile Mr. Rosenblatt, in pursuit of a course of evangelistic travels in behalf of the cause, was in Milwaukee for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners convention there.

FEW CHANGES FROM THIRD DRAFT INDICATED

by FRANCIS L. BURT

Washington Correspondent

Assurance that the code was now in a condition in which he could recommend it for approval was given Tuesday by General Johnson. The document, with a dozen others, was taken South when he went to Atlanta to deliver an address on Thursday, and on Friday it is to be taken to the "little White House."

It was indicated that the code went to the President in practically the same shape as finally drafted by Sol A. Rosenblatt. One important change, however, will be recommended by Mr. Johnson—exclusion of the so-called salary penalty clause. The Department of Justice is understood to have held the penalty clause in violation of the National Recovery Act. The law provides $500 fine for each offence, whereas the penalty clause imposes a fine which may run as high as $10,000.

Distribution provisions also were examined by the Department of Justice.

While reports were current that the code had been held up in Mr. Johnson's office because of fights on the studio labor provisions, an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission, and further attempts by independent exhibitors to get additional concessions, NRA officials indicated the delay was due only to the desire to obtain the opinion of the Department of Justice on the penalty clause and on certain distribution provisions.

While representatives of producers and the labor organizations were in Washington they did not make the trip expressly to talk about the code. Pat Casey, producers' labor repre sentative, conferred with officials of the National Labor Board on complaints filed by the IATSE that sound men in Hollywood were being forced to join unions not of their own selection and, later, that they were being forced to join both the IATSE and the Brotherhood of Electrical Workers so that jurisdictional controversies would not tie up production. Mr. Casey denied these charges and left documentary evidence with the board, which later announced no action would be taken.

William Elliott, of the IATSE projectionists' union, also went to Washington and looked over the situation created by the demand of construction interests that the salary schedules of the code be deleted. These interests were attempting to obtain a 90-cent hour for trades which are given $1.16 2/3 in the film code.

Expressing no objection to salary scales by trades where already included in codes, General Johnson let it be known that he did not see in the Recovery Act any demand upon the Administration for the fixing of wage schedules and preferred to limit wage minima to flat coverage for unskilled and skilled labor.

It was held by Mr. Johnson that the fixing of occupational wages in codes was contrary to that provision of the law providing for collective bargaining since, he pointed out, the wages so set were in most cases those now paid under agreements with unions and, once fixed, could not be reduced even if the unions were willing, while difficulties would prevail if increases were sought.

All labor interests are thoroughly in accord in their approval of the code's wage provisions.

Visits "Purely Social"

Down Georgia way, President Roosevelt was seen driving his personal car on Tuesday on the road out of Warm Springs to his experimental stock farm nearby. In the front seat with him was Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, who left his New York headquarters for Warm Springs on a noon train Monday, with the reported purpose of talking code to the President. However, the regular official channels at the "little White House" in the South soon stifled these reports and made it very emphatic that Mr. Schenck's visit was "purely social" and that the code itself would not be permitted to enter into conversation with Mr. Roosevelt.

The same taboo on code discussion was declared for Eddie Cantor's visit Wednesday. Since Mr. Cantor left Hollywood some few days ago, he had been variously quoted all the way east that he was en route to Warm Springs to "set the President right" on certain code provisions. He made it clear that the salary-clause stipulation was the actors' center of contention, and that he was traveling as a representative of the Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood.

Mr. Cantor was to travel southward from Washington with Marvin H. McIntyre, a secretary to the President, who will take over secretarial responsibilities of Steve Early.

As to the Code Authority

Meanwhile in New York, socalled official observers thas week declared the code authority, as set up in the present motion picture code, to be of a materially less important nature than at first had been supposed. This, they say, is because the code language definitely specifying the functions of this body sets them up purely as an aid to General Johnson.

It is definitely believed, furthermore, that the code authority will not be empowered to make final decisions on any case of importance. Instead, it probably will make recommendations to the Administrator, who retains the right to make final disposition of all cases brought before the code authority.

The Department of Justice, it was learned this week, was not asked to render an opinion on the legality of boards set up in the code, as previously had been considered.

The Allied and MPTOA verbal outbursts against each other of 10 days ago simmered down this week to a mere announcement from Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, to the effect that all but three of his organization's 37 suggestions are incorporated in the code.

Mr. Kuykendall declined an invitation from Sidney Samuelson, New Jersey Allied president, to address a meeting of that organization "and settle code differences."

In New York, a review of the exceptions to the President's blanket re-employment agreement, previously granted to several independent theatres in the metropolitan area, was ordered this week by Grover A. Whalen, administrator of the New York City NRA. He said he had received numerous complaints that the theatre owners were working employees 52 or more hours a week. Notices of appearances were received Wednesday.

Four Omaha Theatres In New Blank Company

Four Omaha houses, the Orpheum, World, State and Paramount, have been included in the Tri-State Theatres Corporation, organized in Des Moines by A. H. Blank. The firm replaces the various operating companies necessitated by the Publix bankruptcy.

Stanley Brown, former manager of the Orpheum, has been promoted to the city managership at Des Moines. He was formerly a Publix district manager. A deal is said to be still pending between Mr. Blank and Ralph D. Goldberg of the World Realty Company of Omaha, holder of the leases on the World and State.

Survey Shows Increase In British Wired Houses

The number of wired theatres in the British Isles has increased substantially in recent months, it is indicated by a survey prepared by T. P. Drew, Western Electric sales chief abroad. Out of a total of 4,414 theatres, 4,156 are wired, of which 1,666 are Western Electric installations. The company reports 356 of their installations are replacements of other apparatus. Broken down into countries the analysis shows: England, 3,385 sound, 128 silent; Scotland, 494 sound, 72 silent; Wales, 326 sound, 27 silent; Ireland, 209 sound, 31 silent.

John Roach, manager of the Arcade theatre, Philadelphia, has been elected president of the Philadelphia Warner Club. Other officers for the year are: Earl Wolf, John Noble, Leonard Schlessinger, vice presidents in charge of welfare work, membership and entertainment, respectively; J. Ellis Shipman, treasurer, and Miss Hecht, secretary.

Drop Trans Lux Canada Plan

Joseph M. Franklin, holder of Canadian Trans Lux theatre rights, has indicated plans for a Dominion circuit of Trans Lux houses have been dropped. N. L. Nathanson, who has virtual control of Canadian short subject distribution, is understood now disinterested.

WHOSE DIRT?

by TERRY RAMSAYE

The appointment of the experienced Mr. J. J. McCarthy to execute a special assignment for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., with reference to the application of new regulations pertaining to motion picture advertising announced in this issue, throws into illuminated relief some considerable problems.

The very action of the Hays organization is obviously an admission that there have recently been some special provocations for attention to the subject.

A considerable portion of both production and advertising has been growing bold apace in bawdy ventures. Frantic pursuit of the box office dollar all too often has been leading the motion picture to do things that ought not to be done, even for a dollar and a half. This has been reflected inevitably in the merchandising efforts pertaining to the product. Advertising copy, lobbies, posters and ballyhoo in general may ever be expected to go as far as the show itself goes.

There is not, it would appear, very much intelligence or justice in a scheme to whitewash a situation by putting the advertising and promotion men on the spot.

As rough as some of the copy has been of late, there is available no instance in which it outspoke the content of the picture concerned. Some copy does at times promise more genius, more grandeur, more thrills than the film contains, but no copy has yet promised more dirt than was delivered.

One fails to discover what possible service can be afforded or constructive purpose attained if advertising is to be chastened, disciplined and ruled into a campaign of laying the enamel of euphemistic evasion over the merchandise.

It would appear that perhaps the exhibitor and his public, and of course all the rest of the industry, too, is best served by advertising which reveals just what the product is. It will get the motion picture nowhere except into trouble if it announces peach melba and the merchandise proves to be liederkranz.

Much joking has been done down the years about the practice of buying a story for the title and then changing both story and title. That is, however, not a bit funnier than the possibilities of a line of policy which contemplates loading a production with "hot stuff" for selling points and then setting up a rule and monitor to see that the points do not get into the selling.

Some slight argument may be offered that at least a gain in moral front can be had by disinfecting the advertising copy, but it is piffle to consider the copy itself an important public influence. A glance at a poster, or the slight impact of a theatre advertisement, is a mere featherweight as against the intensive smear applied by an hour long application in the concentration of the darkened theatre by the production itself.

A decency drive addressed solely at the advertising copy of the motion picture, and which brings to bear no important reformative pressure on the production plant, belongs in the same classification as housekeeping which sweeps the dirt under the rug.

The advertising departments of the motion picture industry did not initiate production policies, or execute them. They reflect them in type and half-tone.

New Studio Building To House Warner Writers

Work has been virtually completed on a new Writers' Building at the Warner-First National studios at Burbank. Expected to be ready for occupancy in a few days, the two-story building cost $35,000, and will house, each in a separate office, 20 of the company's 28 contract writers. Construction was in charge of Louis Geib, head of the studio technical department, who also designed the building.

CODE OPENS WAY FOR 25,000 JOBS, ROSENBLATT SAYS AT MILWAUKEE

Wisconsin MPTO Convention Hears Deputy Declare Code Will Unite Industry; Miller Attacks Labor Provisions

The as yet uncompleted code for the motion picture industry will unite the industry in a "compact whole," giving it a greater opportunity for self government than has any other business, and opening the way for 25,000 additional jobs as a result of its labor provisions, Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator for the NRA, told an assemblage of exhibitors, their leaders and exchange men at the annual convention of the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan at the Deshler-Wallack Hotel in Milwaukee on Wednesday afternoon.

Industry Was in "Deplorable Shape"

To a crowded meeting which included Frank J. McWilliams, president of the Allied unit of Wisconsin, Mr. Rosenblatt said the film industry prior to August 8, when the code deliberations began in New York, was in deplorable shape. "If any industry presented a picture wherein practices of 'dog-eat-dog' and 'the devil take the hindmost' were prevalent, this industry, viewed as a whole, did," he said.

The deputy omitted any detailed references to the much-contested labor phase of the code, merely declaring it told its own story. Unaware of the attack on labor provisions made during the morning session by Jack Miller of Chicago, Mr. Rosenblatt made no further comment in that regard, other than the remark that for the first time in the history of the industry workers are fully protected.

Mr. Rosenblatt lauded the manner in which the industry as a whole had cooperated with the NRA and mentioned, without names, "true and real leaders" among exhibitors, who "labored hard and long," and secured "great rights and privileges for you." He touched on the legally established right of the distributor to pick his own customers and set his own terms of sale so long as those efforts did not lean in the direction of the establishment of a monopoly. In a rapid analysis of the code's highlights, the deputy declared the code compels distributors to give up considerable, while "compelling few corresponding obligations on the part of the exhibitor." He then outlined several of the distributor concessions embodied in the code.

Double Bills Too Controversial

With reference to double billing, Mr. Rosenblatt said he "didn't regard it within his function to jeopardize the future of independent producers," or place restrictions on individual theatre operation. The issue is so controversial, he said, that it was left out of the code "at the present time." Concerning block booking, he made the point that court decisions have ruled the practice legal when used by individual companies, but illegal when determined upon collectively. Nothing in the code, he indicated, would impair the existing decisions relative to block booking. He explained the cancellation privilege was cumulative in effect and applied to all exhibitors where rental was $250 or less provided exhibitors lived up to the letter of their contracts. If separate codes had been drawn for productions, distribution and exhibition, he indicated, it was his belief that not a single theatre problem would have been solved. He gave it as his opinion that the grievance boards represent the most constructive feature of the code, commenting on their liberality. The deputy held open forum for a half-hour Wednesday evening.

Launching a bitter discussion on the labor aspects of the industry's code, Jack Miller, chairman of the national code committee on theatre labor and president of the Chicago Exhibitors' Association, said at the first Wednesday session that only a promise stands between the nation's theatres and walkouts of operators and stagehands under the code as it now stands.

Received Only a Promise

Mr. Miller said that the original code clause banning strikes in theatres and ordering settlement of disputes between employers and labor by arbitration has been eliminated from the document because the American Federation of Labor refused to give up its right to call strikes.

"All we got was a promise from Lou Krouse to take local autonomy privileges on strikes from the hands of business agents and making the question determinable by him as vice president of the IATSE," Mr. Miller asserted. "That's swell, and I believe Lou means it, but after all, it's only a promise and Krouse may live six months or an hour and a half. Who knows?"

Accusing the American Federation of "trying to run both the government and the film industry's code," Mr. Miller asked the assembled exhibitors if they could conceive of the government ruling a wage scale arrived at by violence and theatre bombing prevailing as long as the NRA is in existence. "We came out of Washington with a lousy deal," he said.

The convention officially got under way early Tuesday morning with speeches from Ed Kuykendall, Fred S. Meyer, president of the MPTO of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan; Frank J. McWilliams, president of the Allied unit in Wisconsin; Maurice D. ("Red") Kann, editor of Motion Picture Daily, and many others, including representatives of local newspapers, the clergy and various women's organizations.

Kuykendall Sounds Warning

Mr. Kuykendall, the third speaker on the program, sounded a warning that unless the industry could cooperate within its various branches, with complete elimination of all disputes calculated for personal and representative gain, the industry would have a labor code with little, if any, benefit in the matters of fair trade practices.

"We are getting fair trade practices in return for what we propose giving labor," the veteran theatre man said.

Previously Mr. Kuykendall had gone over the code deliberations at Washington and he cited as victories the 10 per cent cancellation clause and designated playdates. He asserted that score charges were nothing more or less than "a racket," and made it clear that the MPTOA still is fighting for their elimination.

"You bear all of the criticism," he told the convention, "and Hollywood and New York have no right to ram down your throats pictures which are unsuited for your theatres. As a matter of fact we could have eliminated many current practices if exhibitors had unity of action. The fact that they have no unity was brought out very clearly during the code meetings. But more and more the personal equation in theatre operation is asserting itself."

Fred S. Meyer, unit president, declared that most of the socalled differences between the MPTOA and Allied were "imaginary." "Certainly," he said, "we are 100 per cent in accord on legislative matters."

Frank J. McWilliams then declared firmly against salacious pictures. Mr. McWilliams, who was once president of the Wisconsin MPTO, decried what he termed the "failure" of the MPPDA members to live up to the Code of Production Ethics, and, expressing the opinion voiced individually by several exhibitors present, warned that the Catholic Church had made up its mind to no longer stand by "while filthy pictures are being shown."

Industry Prior to Code Move in "Deplorable Condition," Says Deputy; Code Labor Portion Tells Own Story, He Declares

Warns on Salaciousness

In Detroit, he declared, a recent request that a certain allegedly immoral film be withdrawn was refused by the theatre, which then became the target of a vigorous boycott. He said that a theatre in Cleveland had gone through an identical procedure.

In delivering his annual report to the convention earlier Mr. Meyer had sounded a similar note when he said:

"I predict here and now that the future of the motion picture industry depends on a radical departure from the present-day conditions; a different and more varied type of production, an entirely different method of distribution, and certainly a complete rejuvenation of the exhibition branch of our business."

Mr. Meyer also said that a move is now under way in Wisconsin, and particularly in Milwaukee, to bar children from unwholesome pictures and declared that the group behind this move is ready to work for a law prohibiting children under 14 in theatres unless the "flood of terror pictures" ended.

Children Are Exhibitor Responsibility

Father Thomas Reilly, head of the Sociology Department of Marquette University in Milwaukee, pointed out that since 28,000,000 children throughout the nation are potential screen patrons, the responsibility upon the exhibitor is a serious one.

Other speakers during the Tuesday session included Irving Maier, head of the Milwaukee Journal's advertising department, who discussed theatre advertising; L. McMeekin, of the Boston Store; Mrs. Paul Griswald, Milwaukee Better Films Council, and Mrs. James Buckland, chairman of the film division of the Wisconsin Federated Women's Clubs.

"Red" Kann spoke briefly earlier in the day and issued a warning to those exhibitors present that the proposed code will not embody everything exhibitors may think they should have. In view of the fact, Mr. Kann said, of the effort to clean up in a few short months all of the inherent evils and differences between major industry branches, little else could be expected.

"Producers failed to agree among themselves and other producers," he said. "Distributors failed to see the same problems with other distributors eye to eye, and exhibitors were split into two different national associations. How the code will work, nobody knows. It remains to be seen.

"Grievance and zoning boards are supposed to solve exhibitor troubles, and they may," Mr. Kann said. "But if they don't, and if inequities or even iniquities appear, there is always a chance to make remedies."

IATSE DENIES CURBING LOCALS; 61 INDICTED IN KANSAS CITY QUIZ

Grand Jury Charges Police Haven't Given Theatre Owners Adequate Protection; Finds Federal Inquiry Warranted

The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees will not put a curb on the powers of its affiliated locals throughout the country.

Vigorously decrying "malicious" rumors to the effect that the IATSE is planning to deprive branches of their local autonomy, Louis Krouse, executive assistant to William C. Elliott, IATSE president, said late Tuesday in New York that these rumors, aside from being "absolutely unfounded," were calculated to disturb the peace within the industry for which the labor organization is striving.

"Certainly we are not going to take away the local autonomy of our affiliated locals," he said. "They will continue, as always, to govern themselves as they see fit, and so long as they do not violate any of International's laws, they will be allowed to regulate their affairs as best they can."

Mr. Krouse said he could not conceive of any authoritative source from which "the various rumors about us have sprung" during the last few months.

Says All Want Peace

"We are trying our best to cooperate with everyone in the industry," he declared. "We want peace. We don't want strikes. The exhibitors don't want strikes, and we have all agreed to give each other a chance. Surely we have demonstrated this by signing the code. If we hadn't agreed with the labor provisions therein, we would not have signed. Whatever disagreements may arise after the code has been put into effect officially will be settled by arbitration, as provided in the code. If people would stop spreading these rumors we'd all get along much better. The IATSE does nothing for which it should hide. Everything that happens ultimately must find its way before the public. Therefore, why should we try to hide anything we do? Let's have peace and give each other a chance to do business."

Meanwhile, the labor situation in Kansas City has begun to take on a somewhat serious aspect. It was indicated last week by federal officials there that a government investigation of Kansas City "labor wars," including alleged racketeering by operators, will be made, possibly by the Senatorial committee now making racketeering investigations in other cities.

Terrorism and violence involving theatres is said to have been of long standing there and the charge has been made that the police "have not afforded adequate protection and no consistent and effective efforts have been made to apprehend and convict the guilty parties." This statement was made by the Jackson county grand jury last week in its recommendations at the termination of the seventh week of its inquiry into crime conditions.

Altogether, 61 indictments were returned by the jury, but names were not revealed.

Labor wars affecting theatres were a menace to the safety of the citizens, the jury found, and the situation involving the throwing of tear gas and stench bombs should warrant an immediate government investigation.

"Among the matters which came to our attention," the jury report said, "is a situation involving the Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 170, whose charter is now, and has been, suspended by the international union, allowing Local 170 to operate and exist only on probation.

"The matter came before us upon complaint of the use of tear gas, stench bombs and other forms of violence in theatres which do not employ motion picture operators belonging to Local 170.

"Our investigation discloses that similar and more violent outrages, including the use of dynamite, have occurred in several theatres, and always during the periods in which members of Local 170 were not employed. The obvious purpose of these methods is to intimidate the employer and terrorize the public, and thus coerce the employer into dealing with this union upon its own terms."

"The movies are a universal form of amusement for both children and adults," the report continued. "No enterprise can so consistently gather people together in great crowds. To cause panic in such gatherings shows a wanton disregard of human life.

"These forms of terrorism and violence appear to be of long standing in Kansas City. The police have not afforded the public and theatre owners adequate preventive protection, and no consistent and effective efforts have been made to apprehend and convict the guilty parties. So long as the present situation exists, this is a racket which should be stamped out."

Ask More Stringent Laws

The jury recommended more stringent laws against the use of tear gas and stench bombs, or any other form of violence.

"We regard the situation as one which justifies federal investigation," the jury reported. "We also believe that responsible union heads should clean their own house of the racketeering element."

Local 170 officials in Kansas City, in answer to the jury's report, charged the suburban theatre owners with attempts to "embarrass" them in impending contract negotiations. The union's view was that the exhibitors inspired the probe with the purpose of obtaining the sympathy of the public in event of recurrence of trouble which has marked previous wage negotiations.

The operators' union and the Independent Theatre Owners were to have begun negotiations on a new contract last week, the current agreement expiring November 30. It is understood these negotiations have now been suspended indefinitely.

Denies Charter Suspension

H. H. Dunavan, Local 170 president, denied last week that its charter had been suspended by the IATSE, despite the jury's report to the contrary. He said the IATSE headquarters had assumed jurisdiction of the Kansas City local, following the operators' "war" of two years ago, and several months ago appointed a new slate of officers who hold their office at the pleasure of the IATSE.

"No basis for the implications made against the operators' union exists," said Mr. Dunavan, pointing out that there have been, and are, in Kansas City competitive organizations "styling themselves as 'operators' unions'" and that officers of one such "outlaw" union are now serving penitentiary sentences for the bombing of Loew's Midland theatre, in which a janitor was killed.

President of Local 170 at Kansas City Denies Charter Suspension, Contrary to Jury Report; Politics Hinted Factor

Observers in Kansas City attached another interpretation to the grand jury inquiry. They maintained that Judge James R. Page of the circuit court, under whose jurisdiction the investigation was made, belongs to a faction of Democratic politics opposed to the dominant faction in charge of the police department, and that Judge Page, as county prosecutor and, more recently, on the bench, has made no secret of the differences.

Following this trend of thought, political circles maintained that the investigation was ordered by Judge Page to make capital for the elections next spring, when an effort will be made to oust the dominant faction.

The jury's report disclosed that many sessions had been held in secret places because of the fear of witnesses that they would be subjected to bodily harm from gangsters if they appeared at the court house. The jury also found that many witnesses committed perjury, due to this fear.

"The existence of this fear," the jury commented, "is in itself a frightful commentary on the law enforcing agencies of Kansas City. It is an admission that the gangster and racketeer is more likely to destroy than the police force to protect."

Whether exhibitors have a right to perform services in their own theatres without employing union help is the question to be decided in an injunction suit brought by Charles Easterly and Homer Pouts, owners of a Kansas City suburban house, against Local 170.

Exhibitors Ask Injunction

Judge Ben Terte in the Jackson county circuit court, issued a temporary injunction against the union ten days ago, held that while the courts have ruled that peaceable picketing is within the law, in this case it was unjustified if the allegations of the exhibitors were set forth correctly. Mr. Easterly and Mr. Pout declared they are both expert projectionists and that business in their small neighborhood house does not justify hiring operators.

Despite the various disturbing factors now at work in Kansas City, the IATSE offices there are carrying out the provisions of the NRA code by limiting the working week to 40 hours and spreading the work.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

TYPICAL of the material that has been filling most of the columns of the fan magazines is a feature in December Screen Play, captioned: "Confessions of a Chorus Girl," in which one Bonny Bannon, showgirl in "Gold Diggers" and in Sam Goldwyn's "Roman Scandals," tells about the "pitfalls" of Hollywood for the 10,582 girls who are supposed to be in Hollywood waiting for a "break."

Bonny paints a picture of this vast legion of females praying for that chance. "Yes, chorus girls and show girls pray," she says. "Don't you believe they don't! Prayers that go something like this: 'Oh, Lord, please make that director spot me!' or: 'Dear God, please don't let me have to go away with that man. Let me get a job quick!'" That's where Sam Goldwyn comes to the rescue.

For those who still believe in Santa Claus, or the NRA, Bonny Bannon tells how a chorus girl lives; on a weekly budget:

Rent	$10
Food for family	14
Incidentals, as movies, carfare, etc.	5
Clothes	8
To sister	8
Savings	5
TOTAL	$50

Somebody has been kidding the Metrotone news staff. A caption in the current reel says: "Hundreds of couples wed in Rome to please Mussolini."

"Steve," demanded a Capitol Hill reporter covering Litvinov's first call at the White House to see about Russian recognition, "we got to get some color in this story. It's as dead as a mackerel."

"That's easy," replied Steve Early, the President's secretary, who received much of his press experience while with Paramount News. "Here is plenty of color: They ushered Litvinov into the Green room, the President met him in the Blue room, and then they adjourned to the Red room."

Mr. Roosevelt evidently felt that in the last place M. Litvinov would feel more at home. Typical Roosevelt hospitality.

On the day last week that Radio's "Little Women" made its successful debut in New York, radiating thoughts of a great future in its travels over the screens of the country, Paramount started a secret investigation to unearth some facts about a picture of the same title which it distributed in 1919.

Coincidentally, Miss Hepburn's picture evidently developed a sense of supreme optimism in the Radio organization. Early on Wednesday morning, there came forth a piece of publicity with the following caption:

"LITTLE WOMEN" SMASHING
RECORDS AT RADIO CITY

The picture did not open until 24 hours later.

The noted old-line Chicago liquor house of Pollack and Company has been reopened as the Francis X. Bushman Company, and thus does the theatrical career of the former great screen lover of the silent era come to an end. First a wrestler, then a bicycle racer, artists's model, student of sculpture, stage player and whatnot, Francis Xavier Bushman appeared in films first in "Graustark," in 1911, for Essanay. Ending screen work some years ago, he has been traveling the country in stock and in vaudeville.

MAE West says, "I'm No Angel." And the world knows of her standing invitation to "cumup 'n' see me, sometimes." But few are aware that the baptisimal font which was recently installed, at no little cost, in one of the Roman Catholic churches in the studio city, was paid for, entirely, by this lady of the Jewish faith.

To keep the record straight for Variety:

1. Charles E. McCarthy, of Nutley, N. J., is Fox publicity and advertising director.

2. J. J. McCarthy, of Mamaroneck, N. Y., who roadshowed "The Birth of a Nation," has long been identified with the legitimate theatre and with motion picture roadshows.

3. It is J. J. McCarthy who has undertaken the new publicity and advertising surveillance duties at the request of Will H. Hays.

When Mr. John Cunningham Flinn, presiding at last week's AMPA luncheon, called upon guest Ed Kuykendall to speak, he suggested that Mr. Kuykendall say something about the lost code. "That will not be difficult," answered Mr. Kuykendall. "I need not fear contradiction, because no one knows a damn thing about the code."

Later, the MPTOA general volunteered the information that "this is a sweet business, because I do not know of any business with so many dumbbells who are forced by it to success."

Mr. Kuykendall has been in national motion picture politics only a year, and already he has a definite opinion.

Mr. Harold Brooks Franklin—who is accredited in Who's Who with: Contrib. to Motion Picture Herald and bulls. of Soc. M. P. Engrs."—is quite busy these days arranging his new offices, in an artistic manner, on the 54th floor of the RCA Building at Radio City. That's a long way up from booking vaudeville acts on Broadway, back in 1910.

The other day one of our reporters found him in his short-sleeves, measuring the walls, hanging pictures and arranging draperies. Maybe his old friend and associate, Roxy, gave him a hand in arranging the settings and interior decorations.

Outstanding among "H. B.'s" odds and ends, which were meticulously placed about the lavish suite, is a radio, done in a creamy white, shaped like a globe map. It's an unusual piece, and Mr. Franklin says it will reach the four corners of the world. Our reporter forgot to ask him if it will get David Sarnoff on the floor below.

Colonel Mae West received one vote for coroner of Philadelphia County.

Freddy Mack's return to the stage of the Fox Brooklyn theatre, as master of ceremonies, brings to mind his experience with some kidnapers, last August, which interrupted his 36 weeks' run at that house. The "snatchers" thought that Freddy was willed some $6,600,0000 by a Mrs. J. J. McCarthy, wealthy society matron of Greenwich, Conn., and they proceeded to attempt extortion. Mr. Mack was then advised by police to hide, even though it was privately known that the actual beneficiary of Mrs. McCarthy's estate was his brother.

Fred is out of Yale, class of 1925, which also had as a graduate one Herbert Prior Vallee, known to some people as Rudy.

MR. WALT DISNEY vigorously contradicts all rumors of millions brought in by "Three Little Pigs" and its theme song, "Qui Craint le Grand Mechant Loup, Grand Mechant Loup, Grand Loup Noir?" After 19 weeks he says, this "Silly Symphony" has not returned the cost of prints, and his net profit on the reel will not exceed $25,000 from all world markets over a period of two years.

Mr. Disney, optimistic, predicts that "The Three Little Pigs" will eventually gross $125,000.

"Mickey Mouses" cost about $18,000; "Sillys" about $20,000.

"Mickeys" recover the original investment in 12 months, "Sillys" in about 18 months.

Add to production charges, the cost of distribution, prints, advertising, foreign duties, etc., and it will be easier to understand why "Three Little Pigs" must gross between $60,000 and $75,000 in order to break even.

It is widely reported that Disney is a millionaire and that his income last year was $400,000. That figure represents his gross income. He puts every dime of profit back into his business, having an investment of $750,000 in plant and pictures. He runs a second-hand car, takes a salary of $200 weekly.

The three little pigs are not his own. They first danced into print in 1850. Joseph Jacobs, whose version is the familiar one, discovered them then. So did Crane. Neither of these authors originated them. But Walt Disney commercialized them, thereby making Mr. Al Lichman's job so much easier.

Alfred Finestone, our midwest operative, tells us that while grubbing in the ancient past, some historian discovered that the NRA is nothing new under the sun: "In six days shalt thou do thy work," commanded Moses from Mount Sinai, thus setting a precedent for the "brain trust" of Capitol Hill.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of Miss Sally Rand will please communicate with this department. We have a job for the lady.

The possibilities of employment for Sally were extended some few days ago, when a group of alumni from Kansas University attended the football game at Norman, Okla., and saw their alma mater go down to defeat at 20 to 0.

Indignant, they returned to Bartlesville, Okla., held a consultation and dispatched the following telegram to Dr. F. C. (Phog) Allen, director of athletics at Kansas "U", at Lawrence, Kan.:

> "Realizing Kansas has probably the best material on the continent, we suggest hiring Sally Rand for a fan dance to replace rough, nasty line smashers.
> "All good things end, so watch your job. Can we expect a successful debate season?"

We suggest that Kansas fire the team immediately, and in their place, use Sally alone on the grid with her fans.

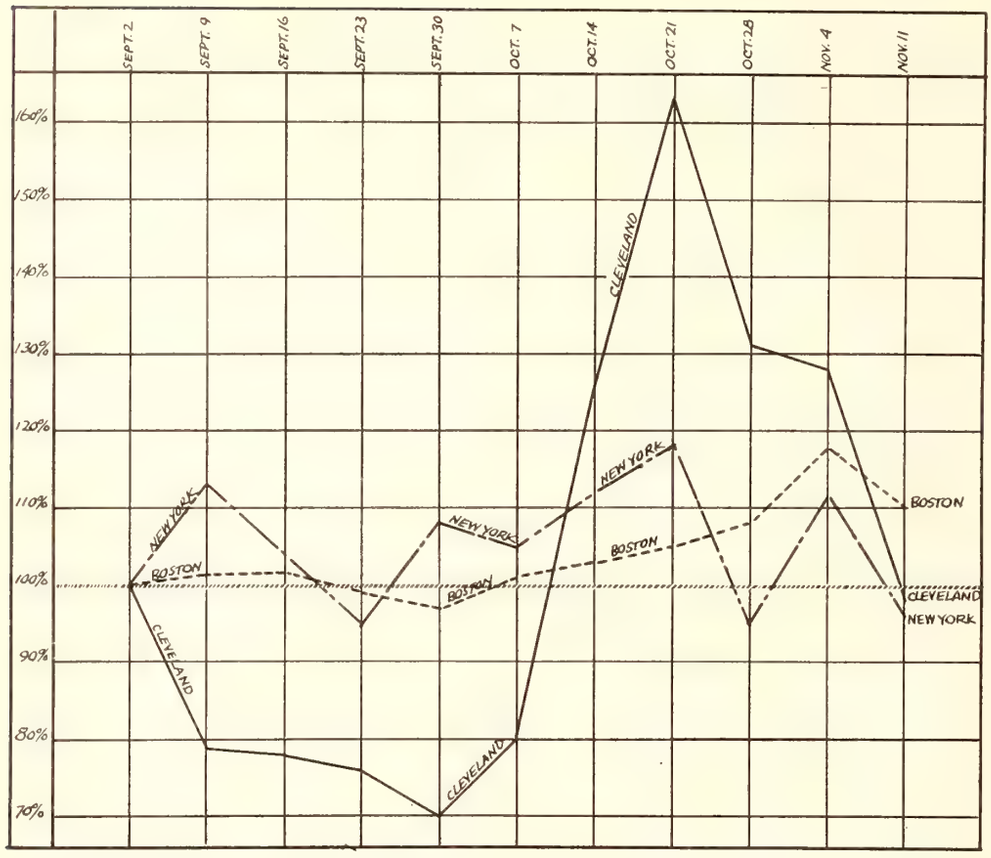
Eddie Quillan sends from Hollywood this story about the typical extra girl.

An assistant director on "The Hollywood Party" set at Metro was herding the company onto the stage and urging them to hurry, shouting that they were two days behind schedule. Quite annoyed about the "Simon Legree" methods, the extra turned to her companion and said, "They make me sick! Why didn't they start two days sooner?"



The graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of box office grosses, reflects the business done in Boston, Cleveland and New York in the eleven weeks beginning September 2 and ending November 11. For each city the receipts of the first week of the period are taken as 100 per cent. The high peaks of both Cleveland and Boston were reached in the week of showing of Mae West's "I'm No Angel," which was also the case of the top peak for Portland, Ore., for the week ended October 14 in the chart in last week's issue.

NEILAN PRODUCING AS AN INDEPENDENT

Heads New Company Making "The Social Register" in the East, and Starring Colleen Moore, for Columbia Release

Re-entering the motion picture industry as an independent producer, Marshall Neilan, director during many years of association with First National, Goldwyn, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is busy with the first of his product, "The Social Register," starring Colleen Moore with Pauline Frederick, Alexander Kirkland and Charles Winninger among those in support.

Associated Film Producers Corporation is the name of the new company, with Mr. Neilan as president in charge of production; John J. Bergen, vice-president, and John H. Dahn, secretary and treasurer. On the board of directors, besides Messrs. Neilan, Bergen and Dahn, are C. S. Peabbles, L. H. Herman and Walter Lenz. Offices are at 40 Wall Street and 270 Park Avenue, New York. Edward J. O'Hara is director of publicity.

With a free hand, away from Hollywood, Mr. Neilan as an independent is pushing work on the first picture at the Eastern Service Studios at Astoria, Long Island, for release by Columbia in January. Mr. Neilan is supervising and directing the picture.

The signing of Miss Moore for the chief role recalled the earlier days when Mr. Neilan was seeking a feminine lead for "Dinty," starring Wesley (Freckles) Barry, and selected Miss Moore, with a prediction at the time that she was certain to reach stardom.

"The Social Register," from the play of the same name by John Emerson and Anita Loos, has William deMille as associate producer. Miss Frederick closed a road tour

Others in the cast of the Neilan picture are Margaret Livingston, Ross Alexander, Roberta Robinson, Olive Olsen. James Creelman adapted Clara Beranger's screen play, with Grace Perkins adding dialogue. Merritt Gerstad has charge of the photography, and special music was written by Con Conrad and Ford Dabney. Western Electric sound is being used.

To Mr. Neilan the West Coast production territory was familiar ground from childhood. Born in San Bernardino, Cal., he was educated in the Los Angeles public schools before going to Harvard Military Academy. Among the many earlier pictures he directed, besides "Dinty," were "Take Me Home," "The Last Haul," "Taxi 13," "Fog," this for Herbert Wilcox, "Venus of Venice," "Black Waters," "Sweethearts on Parade," "Vagabond Lover," "Tanned Legs."

Which Is Acting? . . . Joan Kissing Franchot—or Joan Kissing Clark?

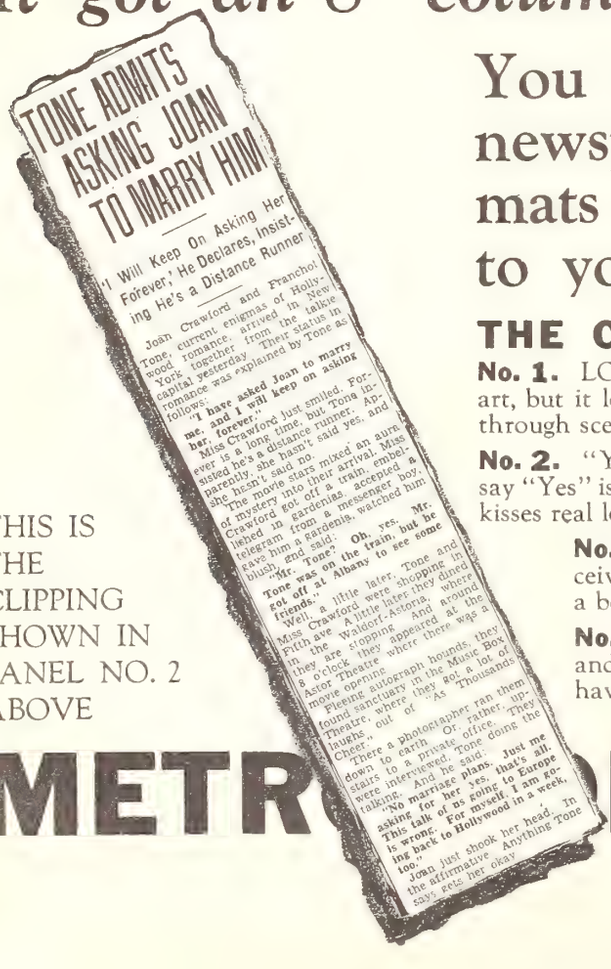
LOOKS LIKE BUSINESS
Maybe this is just part of Joan Crawford's art, but it looks like the real thing as she and handsome Franchot Tone go through scene in "Dancing Lady."

"YES—OR NO?"
Franchot wants to marry Joan, but whether she'll say "Yes" is a question that may be answered by their new picture. Are those kisses real love—or just "reel love?"

WHAT ABOUT THIS?
Clark Gable is the lucky lad receiving this kiss from Joan. It's "reel" love, so if Franchot doesn't get a better one—settle that romance yourself.

ROMANCE—OR ART?
It looks like love, with Franchot and Joan here, but maybe not. Anyway, if that isn't a real "where-have-you-been-all-my-life" look that Joan shows, it's real art.

It got an 8-column spread on Broadway!



TONE ADMITS ASKING JOAN TO MARRY HIM

'I Will Keep On Asking Her Forever,' He Declares, Insisting He's a Distance Runner

Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone, current enigmas of Hollywood, romance arrived in New York together from the talkie capital yesterday. Their status in romance was explained by Tone as follows:

"I have asked Joan to marry me, and I will keep on asking her, forever."

Miss Crawford just smiled. Forever is a long time, but Tone insisted he's a distance runner. Apparently, she hasn't said yes, she hasn't said no.

The movie stars mixed an aura of mystery into their arrival. Miss Crawford got off a train, embellished in gardenias, accepted a telegram from a messenger boy, blush, and said:

"Mr. Tone? Oh, yes, Mr. Tone was on the train, but he got off at Albany to see some friends."

Well, a little later, Tone and Miss Crawford were shopping in Fifth ave. A little later they dined in the Waldorf-Astoria, where they are stopping, and around 8 o'clock they appeared at the Astor Theatre where there was a movie opening.

Fleeing autograph hounds, they found sanctuary in the Music Box Theatre, where they got a lot of laughs . . . out of "As Thousands Cheer."

There a photographer ran them down to earth. Or, rather, upstairs to a private office. They were interviewed. Tone doing the talking. And he said: "No marriage plans. Just me asking for her yes, that's all. This talk of us going to Europe is wrong. For myself, I am going back to Hollywood in a week, too."

Joan just shook her head in the affirmative. Anything Tone says gets her okay.

(Universal)

Drama

This is cross-section character drama. A lawyer's office is the only locale. A lawyer is the central character. About him and his activities rotate the group of clients, his associates and employees, his mother, wife and friends through whom, in quasi-episodic fashion, are portrayed the modern life story. Fast, thrilling action counterbalances the interpretative dialogue. There are persons to laugh at, others to hate; some to be sorry for, yet that important audience-interesting factor is always focused on the central character, whether he is being ruthless or tenderly humane. Romance, as far as common love interest is concerned, though important, is subordinate to the romance of human interest. Finely acted, with John Barrymore appearing to better advantage than in any of his recent pictures, masterful direction on the part of William Wyler has welded the wide variety of entertainment elements into a coherent, understandable and appealing feature.

The real meat of the show is not reached until well after the midway point. Before that time the picture portrays the various characters who work and come into the Simon & Tedesco offices. There's comedy about the sing-song talking phone operator, Bessie, and the romance-bitten Weinberg, whose words and actions detail their life stories. Comes a sex hint as the freed murderess Zedorah would pay off without money. Intrigue atmospheres the blackmailing Lillian's bit. Mother love is reflected in Lena's respect for George, who rose from the Ghetto to a famous if somewhat unethical lawyer; fear, as Mrs. Becker pleads with Simon to take her revolutionary-mad son's case; tense drama, as Becker's oration leaves Simon amazed. All this serving as build-up, Simon comes to the crisis in his career when Baird, crusading head of the Bar Association, apparently has the goods on him. Simon unearths evidence that's too much for Baird to stomach, but triumph turns to tragedy as the realization of his wife's faithlessness turns Simon to contemplating suicide. But a new sensational case galvanizing him into the old firebrand. The audience know that faithful Regina, his secretary, will be with him in a new dramatic battle.

For general understanding, this show is an adaptation of the "Grand Hotel," "Rome Express" and "Dinner at Eight" technique to a lawyer's office. There is definite entertainment for practically every class of patrons. There's plenty of interest for women, young and old. Similarly there is much to grip the attention of men. The title carries an unusual, intriguing tone. A cast that includes John Barrymore, Doris Kenyon, Bebe Daniels, Stevens, Douglas, Isabel Jewell and Thelma Todd is amply adequate for name purposes. Exploitation and ballyhoo stunts automatically suggest themselves, as do catchlines. There is more than ordinary opportunity for the expression of individual showmanship that carries a local significance. As the show is out of the current trend, the more that novelty and difference is stressed and the interesting and entertaining values of the picture pointed out, the greater should be box office results.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Design for Living

Romantic Comedy

"Design for Living" is daring, but consider it solely from that viewpoint and you overlook a real class-mass entertainment bet. Benefited by fine production technique, it is good entertainment in idea, action and acting, dialogue, situations and their reactions, because everything has been given a deft directorial finesse that makes for zippy, laugh-laden comedy. Seldom has sex quality been so intelligently handled.

There is always a definite atmosphere of smartness about the show's basic, intimately sophisticated, quadrangular romance that stirs the emotions in many ways, but continually majors in subtle and evident comedy. Keyed to a modern pitch, it's the kind of show for the fancy of the swanky crowd. By the same token, it's full of the stuff that sets pulses of ordinary folk beating a little faster.

In plot, the show is a novel adventure in romance. The theme is simple. The things done to it, however, are what give the show its rib-tickling flair and punch. Two unbudded celebrities—George, a playwright, and Tom, an artist—meet and fall in love with Gilda. She can't choose between the two. So, amazing her suitor, Max, she makes a gentleman's agreement with Tom and George that, sex being tabooed, she'll live with them both and be their inspiration. The watchful waiting comedy of the situation is easily imagined. Everything is dandy until George goes to London to produce his play. Then Tom and Gilda forget the gentleman's agreement. Of course, the incident is bared. The pals would be dramatic, but they quickly drink themselves into comic consolation. And remorseful Gilda marries Max. But there's no quitting for these resourceful swains. Even though Max transports his bride to America, far away from any temptation, they follow. In laugh a minute fashion they make chaos of Max's snooty party that means so much to him and is such a bore to Gilda. Then, if you please, they beard their darling in her boudoir and further amaze the already much amazed Max by carrying her off with them.

For straight commercial purposes probably the best path to follow in selling this show to your patrons is to convince them that it's one that will thrill and excite but will not shock 'em. Go the limit in accentuating the class and smartness of the cast, particularly the four leads, and the subject matter of the show. Don't be too timid, neither be too bold. Strive to strike the right medium which experience has taught you will click with all classes of patrons in selling such a picture. Exhibitors in localities where censors like to exercise their prerogatives may have some hurdles to hop.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Right to Romance

(RKO Radio)

Romance-Drama

Effectively selling "The Right to Romance" to audiences at large depends upon a thorough understanding of the available material and proper adaptation. While not new, the plot has been given several novel interpretations. Dialogue is relied upon to carry the story trend and maintain interest. Naturally Ann Harding is the first consideration. In this picture she offers practically all the good things her fans expect of her; those they have disliked about her have been eliminated. Everything revolves about her. Adequately supported by Robert Young, Nils Asther, Sari Maritza, Helen Freeman and Irving Pichel as well as by the remainder of the cast, Miss Harding nevertheless is the outstanding showmanship asset, a factor made more worthwhile in view of her recent success in "Double Harness."

Definitely a woman's picture, the plot is one of those dependable standby romance dramas. Peggy's career as a doctor, specializing in face-lifting, is her one thought. She has made many other women beautiful that men might admire them. No man has seemed to notice her. She never has experienced the electric thrill of love until Bob comes along. Swept off her feet by his arduous affections, she marriees. A glorious California honeymoon is disturbed a bit as Bob spends much time with his old flame, Lee, and when Peggy's career calls, there is much too much time for Bob to play around with Lee. The inevitable denouement leads to separation and Ann checks the incident off to experience. Drama builds as Lee is frightfully disfigured when Bob's plane crashes. The eternal question presents itself to Peggy. Should she restore her rival's beauty that her husband might still continue to admire her? She makes her decision. Lee's beauty is saved. A divorce makes it possible for Peggy to find happiness in life with Dr. Hebling, the man who has understood and loved her always.

With the cast taking ample care of the troublesome name problem, the title is one that makes possible a wide latitude in interest creation. It is readily adaptable to questionnaire and suggestion treatment which permits exhibitors to devise their own catchlines. The right to romance is something very close to every woman's heart. Make that theme a personal matter with women patrons by means of intriguing copy. While it would not seem advisable to stress the hospital atmosphere, of which there is much, there is plenty of room for tieups with beauty shops. Similarly, because of the wedding sequence, there is basis for contacts with gownshops and florists.

For those who strive for an original note in their campaigns, base a campaign on the proposition that you can't keep young in a beauty shop, nor will face-lifting help very much either, that love is what keeps women young and attractive to men. Take full advantage of the old reliable patron interesting elements, with some original presentation, and play up the cast name and title values.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

(First National)

Romance and Drama

Here's a different Robinson picture. Essentially an autobiographical character study, it tunes itself to the present, yet essays many diverse mediums in telling the story. On the surface, picking out one vital patron interesting angle, where there are so many, appears difficult. Romance is both tender and stark and carries a sexy contrast. Drama is heavy, yet every effort is made to concentrate sympathy on the lead. Action is fast and sometimes thrilling. Crisp and occasionally racy dialogue brings about laugh-generating comedy. Backgrounds are novel and permit the placing of several faces on the story. Dividing its bid for attention and appreciation between a gambling, sporting world atmosphere, in which the introduction of dog track racing makes for newness, and a dramatic romantic situation with human interest on the gambling passion of the star which makes him in turn a heel and a hero, the show strives strongly to stir the emotions.

Quickly the story has Buck a cleanup-go-broke gambler quitting the racket to move into a small town and wed the straight-laced Marge despite Mrs. Mayhew's objections, as a clerk in a hotel, the fine and fiery sides of his character are portrayed. Ribbed into losing his job, he becomes agent for his ribber, Bright, at a California dog track. Gambler again, he renews acquaintance with Valerie, an old flame of his hey-hey days, while Marge sits at home and waits. Setting the stage for his wife to walk out on him, Buck takes to the road, winning and losing and eventually winding up as the tolerated husband again and under the patronage of Pres, now close to Marge. A dog track opening nearby, Buck again meets Dark Hazard, a great racing dog, pride of his California days, and buys him cheaply. With Pres usurping his wife's affections, Buck becomes more attached to the dog. The inevitable showdown coming, he berates his wife and mother-in-law, socks Pres and follows his race gambling mania around the world.

With so much different material available, there is room for many different kinds of exploitation. The gambling color, backing up the title, can be adapted in many ways. The dog racing idea similarly makes it possible to indulge in some new showmanship tricks. The cast takes care of the demand for names, nevertheless the Robinson drawing power should be pushed to the limit with lines that convey the news that he's acting himself this time, rather than living another man's life. While there is a natural romantic interest for women, along the line of the girl who married a man in order to reform him, the picture's biggest appeal probably will be to men.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Only Yesterday

Drama

With the initial appearance, in Univeral's "Only Yesterday," of a new star, Margaret Sullavan, who has been substantially acclaimed, the exhibitor has a strong concentration point in the selling of a poignant love story, one filled with drama, pathos and more than an occasional tear.

From the book of the same title by Frederick Lewis Allen, Universal and John M. Stahl, director, have woven a drama which may be, or rather must be sold in distinctive fashion, not with ballyhoo showmanship, but with a dignified presentation of what there is to offer—and there is much. Miss Sullavan, here playing her initial starring role, offers a portrayal which for its restraint, its intelligence and general appeal would be difficult to match. Especially noteworthy is her work since the role held great danger of theatrical over-playing, a danger which Miss Sullavan very competently avoided.

She is ably supported, though in some cases in minor positions, by John Boles, Billie Burke, Reginald Denny, Edna May Oliver, and numerous familiar names. A youngster, Jimmy Butler, is appealing and capable. There is ample selection there for the marquee, with much made of Miss Sullavan's appearance.

A brief resume of the story itself should present to the exhibitor suggestions for numerous selling angles, always remembering the treatment should carry a serious, dignified note. The title may be made definitely significant in attracting attention. The events which take place over a period of many years seem as "only yesterday," a feeling everyone has had at one time or another.

The picture opens in October, 1929, with Boles, wealthy broker, coming home after the crash to a gay gathering surrounding Benita Hume, his wife. Locking himself in his room, he is about to commit suicide when he finds a letter, addressed to him. As he opens the bulky envelope the film's story unfolds.

It is wartime, and somewhere in Virginia he meets Miss Sullavan, who has long been in love with him in a childish, distant fashion. They have one night together. Boles is suddenly called to France, a child is born and the girl goes to the city to live with a sympathetic aunt, Miss Burke, where she and her swain, Denny, contribute likable and relieving humor. Boles returns and she finds he has completely forgotten her and the Virginia night. Her son at school, she enters business, is considerably a success. She cannot bring herself to marry George Meeker. At a New Year's Eve party Boles is attracted to her, still not knowing who she is, and they have one more night together. She leaves him still unaware of her identity. Falling ill, she sees approaching death and pens a long letter to him, recounting her life since that fateful night. Then the film moves from her deathbed once again to Boles in his room. He resolves to carry on, breaks with his wife, since there is nothing between them, and goes to Miss Sullavan's home. She is dead, and Boles begins the acquaintance of the son he never has before seen.

It is a family picture, though of adult quality, strong drama, a deeply sensitive love story, well told, charmingly performed, especially by the newcomer, Miss Sullavan. It should be sold as such, with emphasis on the story and the film's star.—Aaronson, New York.

Western

For general convenience and by reason of the person of its star, Buck Jones, this is called a western. But actually it smacks of a little of lots of things beside straight western material. Racing cars, airplanes, Hollywood and the motion picture have their places beside the horse, the six-shooter and the bandit. It is somewhat different, has a considerable portion of action and a thrill or two for the youngsters, but lacks something of the punch usually to be found in a western.

There is the western following of Buck Jones to call upon, but the showman may promise the patrons something a little different this time and leave the beaten track of western selling. Dorothy Revier is more or less a standby opposite Jones and the other names are for the most part familiar, also.

Jones, itinerant cowpuncher, saves a girl from a runaway horse, and she turns out to be a film star on western location. She invites him to dinner with the company and there his tall stories and boastfulness begin to get him into trouble. He comes upon a cabin with two slain men in it, and takes credit for "shooting it out" with two desperadoes of a gang of four who shortly before had robbed a bank. The town rewards him, and he goes on to Hollywood. Assigned a racing driver role as a result of his boasts of foreign track victories, he drives for the first time, fortunately escaping alive. Then to an airplane and his complete lack of knowledge is not discovered until he is in the air. When he comes down after crazily stunting through the air, he is fired. On his way back to the West he is caught by the other two bandits and treated to a trying half hour. A locket he had taken from the dead men and had given Miss Revier, contains the secret to the stolen gold cache. Eventually, when the two kidnap Miss Revier as she goes on another location trip, Jones steals an airplane and suddenly—and incongruously—becoming an adept at flying, rescues the girl and kills the bandits. Whereafter he promises her not to tell any more stories.

Sell the film from the angle of the cowboy Baron Munchausen, who gets himself into a peck of trouble for talking too much, but works himself out of it. Promise thrills on the track and in the air in a different sort of western, with Jones riding lots of things besides horses. The youngsters should enjoy it, and it's for the weekend action spot.—AARONSON, New York.

Dancing Lady

(MGM-Selznick)

Romance

This picture has just about everything in the line of swift-moving, attention-arresting entertainment. It is likewise a show that lays scores of vivid patron-stimulating advertising and exploitation angles in every exhibitor's lap —it's glamorous, eye-filling and lavish. It carries a dramatic romantic story that weaves its complete entertainment elements into an elaborate and spectacular finale.

Saying it's a back-stage show is hardly enough. There have been plenty of those, and the mere presentation of one more probably would not stir the paying public. But "Dancing Lady" is so basically different that it belongs in another category. Everything is built upon a fundamental story. What happens is only the result of working that story to its logical conclusions.

The plot is simple. Janie is a burlesque strip dancer, as a matter of circumstances, whose burning ambition is the top spot in a Broadway smash hit. Her romance with Tod almost kills it. The difficulty she has in getting a job in Patch's show, and the run-out taken by Bradley, seem to write finis to her dreams. But Patch produces the show on his own. Janie is in the top spot. Around that idea is wound all the excitement, thrill, love interest, human interest, girl glamour, comedy, music and spectacle.

A glance at the cast and the interest-creating values are immediately evident. Joan Crawford is again the electric character of the "Dancing Daughters"-"Modern Maidens" type. Clark Gable is the Gable whose name is worth a shingle of his own any time, any place. With Franchot Tone, who really comes into his own in this show, they compose a big three that can and should be shouted long and loud. But don't skip the rest of the names; May Robson, who means a whole lot since "Lady For A Day," a surprising Winnie Lightner, who vies with Ted Healy and his slap-slap stooges for comedy honors; Art Jarrett and Nelson Eddy, who do the singing; Fred Astaire, the internationally famous dancing star, and Sterling Holloway, who in a quick bit is the show's sensation as the "I'm being crucified" author.

As far as ballyhoo is concerned, you can shoot the works. The title alone suggests any number of tricky gags. Transformed lobbies and foyers; revamped marquees, making the best use of cutouts that surely will be part of the picture's advertising accessories. Be sure that you have plenty of Crawford and the chorus girls in their dancing togs. There's plenty of opportunity for mercantile tieups for window displays and contact advertising. In short it is a show that permits you to adapt and reconstruct all the oldtime showmanship.

Don't overlook the four or five musical numbers for loudspeaker and radio broadcast purposes. Tie them in with everything else so that the public will be fully convinced that "Dancing Lady" is real entertainment, brimful of class and cleverness in dialogue, action and music.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Lone Cowboy

Western

Interest being focused on Jackie Cooper, this western should prove attractive to juvenile audiences. Supplementing that value, there is a trend of human interest to hold adult attention. Because the usual western technique has been radically varied, the show is an emotional rather than action thriller. Wild riding, shoot-'em-up stuff has been eliminated. The bad man character likewise is renovated and the hero, rather than being a guy who makes the best use of flaming pistols, is a boy whose sole ambition is to be a regular cowboy.

The story starts in a big city's slums where Scooter dreams only of the Bill Harts, Tom Mixes and Hoot Gibsons. Sent west by his father, who takes his own life, he finds his vision of the great Dobe Jones ranch only a mirage. Dobe wants to send him back to the city, but Bill's death makes that impossible. Developing that Dobe is trailing Weston, who stole his wife, the boy takes to the range with his mentor. In a cowcamp, Dobe learns that he is near Weston, and Scooter further learns that if he ever catches up with his foe, Dobe will wind up on the end of a rope.

At a rodeo, Dobe sees Weston. Injured while bull-dogging, he is in the hospital as Scooter warns Weston and Eleanor to flee. Fixed up, Dobe takes up the Weston trail again, has him trapped, but decides not to kill when Weston draws and Dobe fires. Scooter, approaching the cabin, is wounded. Rushed to the hospital, there is one of those tense battles for life sequences. After which Eleanor tells the marshal that Dobe killed in self-defense.

Go after the hero-worshipping youngsters on this one. The Cooper name and story content make it entertainment for them. Sell the adults on the different kind of a western idea, accentuating the human interest that verges on pathos to develop maximum business possibilities.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Mickey's Covered Wagon

(Columbia-Darmour)

Big Laughs

Action fun that should tickle the grown-ups and give the kids plenty of big laughs; brings many kinds of diverse entertainment packed in the short running time. Starting with an adaptation of the gag of the old man whose father won't let him play the fiddle because it annoys grampa, the picture moves into a novel presentation of a monkey orchestra rendering "Learn to Croon." For giving the old man a fiddle, Mickey is informed of a lost gold mine. Taking up the trek westward, the little Scorpions Club, making use of almost a score of laughable vehicular inventions, the gang is first beset by Stinky Davis with disastrous results to his father's car. Night falling and a storm coming up, the kids land in a deserted house to experience all the laughable thrills of ghosts and other haunting apparitions. A monkey and cat provide the mechanics for the episode punches. Action assumes practically all the functions of explanatory dialogue, giving the short a speed that holds attention. Here is a good contrast for a thrill feature, or one that will take audience minds off anything heavily dramatic. Running time, 18 minutes.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Action and a thrill or two makes this unusual short subject material.—Running time, 9 minutes.

LONDON PREVIEWS "SORRELL AND SON"

"Sorrell and Son" received a rapturous reception at London preview Thursday. Here is a picture that is grand entertainment with exceptionally powerful emotional appeal. Could have heard a pin drop during the long sequences at the preview. Directed with fine restraint by Jack Raymond and tells story in arresting manner. H. B. DEATH OF SHAUER TAKES A PARAMOUNT FOUNDER

Head of Foreign Department Was First with Zukor in Penny Arcades; John W. Hicks, Jr., Continues with His Duties

Funeral services were held in New York Sunday afternoon for Emil E. Shauer, vice-president of Paramount International Corporation and one of the founders of the motion picture enterprises which now form Paramount-Publix Corporation. Mr. Shauer, who was 67 years old, died last Thursday morning at his home in New York, having suffered a heart attack a few hours earlier while at his desk in the Paramount Building at Times Square.

Burial was at Woodlawn Cemetery, with many notables of the motion picture industry present. Those who were named honorary pallbearers included Adolph Zukor, Will H. Hays, Emanuel Stern, Ralph Kohn, Al Kaufman, Mel Shauer, Morris Kohn, Eugene Zukor, Henry Fried, Louis Deutsch, Elek J. Ludvigh, George J. Schaefer, John W. Hicks, Frank Meyer, Emanuel Cohen, Sigmund Weltner, Walter Cokell, Felix Kahn.

Started in Package Room

Emil E. Shauer was born in Bohemia on April 6, 1866, and was brought to these shores two years later, his family settling in Chicago, where he attended the public schools.

His business career started in the package room of Mandel Brothers Department Store, where he finally became department manager and foreign buyer. Before he was 21 he had become the youngest lace curtain buyer in the country. This position necessitated frequent trips to Europe.

Leaving behind him the scenes of his boyhood and terminating a 16-year association with the Mandel store, Mr. Shauer set out for New York and bigger things and 1905 found him in the amusement business, with Mitchell Mark, Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Elek J. Ludvigh, David Warfield and Morris Kohn. They conducted a penny-arcade business known as the Automatic Vaudeville Company.

In 1911 Mr. Shauer set out on his own, organizing the Shauer-Dryfoos Company, doing an export and import business with the Philippine Islands and Japan.

In Famous Players at Beginning

When the Famous Players Company was organized, about 1913, Mr. Zukor took Mr. Shauer in with him because of his extensive knowledge of foreign business affairs. He was named assistant treasurer, and some years later, when Paramount Famous-Lasky Corporation succeeded the original company, Mr. Shauer was put in complete charge of the company's foreign business.

On the formation of Paramount International Corporation last year, under the extensive decentralization of the physical structure, Mr. Shauer was appointed vice-president of that subsidiary, under Adolph Zukor, although he continued at the head of the foreign activities.

In the official obituary notice last week, the management said it was under Mr. Shauer's leadership that the foreign division of Paramount became one of the most important departments in the corporation, and one of the most active foreign units of any motion picture distributor.

He is survived by his widow and a son, Melville Shauer, who is assistant to Albert A. Kaufman at Paramount's Hollywood studios.

It was generally believed at the Paramount home office that there would be no executive changes in the personnel of the Paramount foreign department because of Mr. Shauer's death. While he was senior vice-president, it was John W. Hicks, Jr., also a vice-president, who had been conducting much of the duties in that division, because of Mr. Shauer's prolonged illness.

The extent with which Mr. Shauer was warmly accepted in foreign centers the world over was attested by the fact that within a day following his death, some 90 cables of condolence had reached the home office in New York.

J. J. McCarthy in Special Publicity Post of MPPDA

J. J. McCarthy, long identified with motion pictures and the legitimate theatre, has undertaken, at the request of Will H. Hays, a special assignment in connection with motion picture publicity and advertising. Mr. McCarthy will also look after the matters customarily in charge of Frank J. Wilstach, who is ill.

The directors of the Hays Office, at a meeting last week, adopted various new regulations referring to publicity and advertising. Mr. McCarthy's work will consist principally of the application of these regulations.

A meeting of the principal advertising and publicity men of the industry was held at the Hays Office on Monday. Following this meeting a committee with which Mr. McCarthy will work was appointed.

Frank Wilstach Ill at Home With Influenza

Frank J. Wilstach, director of press relations and in charge of motion picture advertising and publicity activities at the MPP DA, was confined this week to his home on upper Manhattan avenue in New York with influenza.

Mr. Wilstach, who for a dozen years or more was press agent for the Shuberts is recognized in the legitimate field as an authority on the theatre of old. He spent years with Sothern and Marlowe and with Leslie Carter and others. He frequently writes articles on the stage, and has contributed many old relics of theatre history to the New York Public Library collection.

Mr. Wilstach some years ago published "A Dictionary of Similes" and each year he adds to this collection the best similes of the year.

HELP FOR ALLIED BUSINESSES SEEN

gated to local option. No Blue Laws affect the situation and virtually all theatre owners are said to be in favor of Sunday operation, which, it is understood, would increase the business of closed houses by 25 per cent, employment also rising.

DENVER (covering South Dakota, Nebraska, Texas, New Mexico, Wyoming and Colorado)

In the South Dakota territory covered from Denver there are 20 theatres operating and all of them are open on Sundays. In Nebraska-Denver territory, 50 theatres operate with all doing business on Sunday. In Denver's Texas territory only one theatre is in operation and it also is open on Sunday. In Denver (proper) territory, 264 theatres are in operation and all but one are open for Sunday showings. There is no state law pertaining to Sunday operation and no Blue Laws of any type are in existence. In New Mexico (Denver territory), 60 theatres operate and all are open on Sunday

DETROIT

No figure was made available as to the number of theatres in operation in the state of Michigan, but Columbia's branch manager in Detroit reported that in the entire state only two theatres, in Holland, Mich., were closed on Sunday. The state law permits Sunday operation, and Blue Laws do not figure, to any extent, despite the fact that Michigan, being largely Dutch community, is controlled to a great degree by the churches, in so far as local option is concerned.

LOS ANGELES (covering Southern California and Arizona)

In this territory 330 theatres are running seven days a week, with no state or local laws pertaining to this situation and all exhibitors in favor of the Sunday practice.

MEMPHIS (covering Arkansas only):

Ninety-three theatres run six days a week and 75 are open on Sundays. All athletic diversions are permitted on the Sabbath and laws in respect to the situation are optional with the counties. Only a few of the state's exhibitors object to Sunday showings. The state law which pertained to a prohibition of Sunday shows was annulled a year ago and a substitute law relegating legalization of Sunday performances to county option.

MEMPHIS (Northern Mississippi only)

Thirty-four theatres operate six days weekly in this sector and all are closed on Sunday, there being a definite state law prohibiting Sunday showings, and several Blue Laws pertaining to Sunday recreation. All sports and games are forbidden. It is understood that a large majority of exhibitors in Mississippi are in favor of lifting this ban, being of the opinion that Sunday openings would benefit the business of theatres from 15 to 20 per cent, employment and payrolls rising with the extra day of operation.

MEMPHIS (Western Tennessee only)

In this section 46 theatres operate on a six-day week and all are closed on Sundays as are a majority of athletic events. There is a state law prohibiting Sunday showings, but Blue Laws do not affect the situation. A majority of theatre owners are said to be in favor of a ban on this prohibition as business probably would increase 20 per cent. Two years ago the Tennessee legislature legalized Sunday shows in cities over 200,000 population, thus limiting the privilege to Memphis.

MILWAUKEE (Wisconsin and Upper Michigan)

Two hundred and twelve theatres operate seven days a week with no restrictions of any sort on Sunday amusements.

Sunday shows are permitted in all towns covered from this exchange, with the exception of the state of North Dakota, where the old Blue Laws make it impossible for exhibitors to operate on Sunday, in spite of the fact that athletic diversions are permitted. In October a vote was taken in North Dakota and out of 160,000 votes cast, the Sunday show issue lost out by a small margin of 800 votes. Exhibitors and leading business men of the state predicted that had the ban been lifted a great many theatres now closed would have been able to reopen, spending money for equipment and also employing a great number of people. The fight to accomplish this repeal is going ahead and it is said that people of the state look forward to an end of the ban in the next election.

NEW HAVEN (covering Connecticut)

Out of 156 theatres in this territory only one is closed on Sunday. There are no state or Blue Laws.

NEW ORLEANS (covering part of Mississippi)

Forty theatres in the sector operate on a six-day week, but only 14 are open on Sunday. Nearly all communities permit athletic diversions on Sunday. Eighty per cent of theatre owners are said to be in favor of Sunday showings and it is said business generally would increase anywhere from 35 to 40 per cent if the ban were lifted. A state Blue Law is the direct cause of the ban and those few towns which do operate on Sundays are doing so illegally. Employment, due to NRA regulations, would increase from 35 to 40 per cent if the Blue Law were repealed.

NEW ORLEANS (covering Louisiana)

Out of 116 theatres in this territory, 110 operate on Sunday and all athletics are permitted. There is no state or Blue Law pertaining to the situation, and those theatres which are closed on Sunday are forced to through local option. In these situations employment and business would increase from 35 to 40 per cent.

SALT LAKE CITY (covering Utah, Idaho and Montana)

Two hundred and fifty theatres in the territory operate seven days a week, with no laws of any sort in any of the three states prohibiting Sunday amusements in any form.

The Columbia exchange reported no situations in this territory which do not operate on Sunday.

SEATTLE (covering Washington, Northern Idaho and Alaska)

All theatres out of some 220 operate seven days weekly, Sunday showings being permissible without reservation throughout the territory.

WASHINGTON, D. C. (covering Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and the District of Columbia)

Out of 457 theatres in the territory only 163 are open for Sunday showings. About 40 per cent of the communities involved permit sports on Sunday. The laws of the various states in the sector are as follows: Virginia: "No motion pictures allowed on Sundays in the state." Maryland: "Local option governs." This law was passed recently, permitting a referendum in several Maryland counties, and at a subsequent vote Sunday showings were permitted by an overwhelming majority. Several counties on the eastern shore of Maryland are still affected by Blue Laws prohibiting Sunday shows. Sunday operation generally throughout this territory would increase business revenue by at least 10 per cent, it was said, and at least 200 employees would find part time work. Practically every theatre owner is desirous of Sunday operation.

What Exhibitors Say

A wide variety of exhibitor comment on the Sunday show situation has been received at the Columbia offices in New York by Mr. Cohn and Hal Hode, director of sales promotion for the company.

GEORGE LIMBERIS, manager of the Olympia theatre in Bangor, Maine, a state in which no Sunday showings are allowed: "We all know that eliminating this law will help Mr. Roosebelt's recovery plan so much more. It will mean an increase in employment and salary for the producer, distributor and exhibitor alike."

RICHARD ELBOTT, Community theatre, Guilford, Me.: ". . . am happy to be doing business with a company that is smart enough to realize that Sunday shows in this state would help the exhibitor, give additional employment, circulate additional money in the towns, and in general, make for better business."

"As you are no doubt aware, this state hasn't cleared up this muddle and the issue is left to local communities," wrote MRS. MAYME P. MUSSELMAN, of the Princess theatre, Lincoln, Kan. "I happen to have the only show in this county, in a community dominated by Methodists, and they are very partial in their belief that no show should operate in this community on Sunday. Within a forty-mile radius of this town there are nine shows operating every Sunday. Isn't this unfair competition?"

P. E. CARY, manager of the Newport, Me., Playhouse, said he felt that repeal of the prohibition on Sunday shows "would be of great help, not only on the weekly grosses, but also would increase our payroll slightly."

WILLIAM S. WILDER, of the Newport theatre in Norfolk, Va., expressed his thoughts as follows:

"To begin with, I, personally, am opposed to Sunday shows, simply from a selfish standpoint, in that I am not desirous of working more than six days a week. By the same token, however, I can see the great advantage in the opening of motion picture theatres on Sunday, particularly in our locality, since not only would it be a great aid to the purpose of the NRA in employing additional people and increasing salaries; it would be a social element of undisputed value in creating an attraction to the personnel of the Navy."

"It is needless to say that we are very much in favor of Sunday amusements in Richmond," wrote SAM BENDHEIM, JR., of the Capitol theatre in that Virginia city. ". . . Sunday openings would mean additional employment and an increase in payroll, beside adding to the pleasure of thousands of citizens who cannot afford to play golf and who have only Sunday on which to witness a motion picture."

'Little Women' Sets Music Hall Record

RKO's "Little Women," starring Katharine Hepburn, and from which the company is anticipating great things, started its career in exhibition this week by establishing a new record at New York's Radio City Music Hall.

Opening last Thursday, the first four days saw more than 100,000 people battling their way in to see the picturization of Louisa May Alcott's classic. The gross for the first four days was $73,186, and for the first six days, ending Tuesday night, $103,004. RKO officials said this week they expect the full week showing of "Little Women" to surpass all Music Hall attendance and box office records since the opening of the theatre, eleven months ago.

It is estimated that the gross for the entire week will be in excess of $120,000, while over 165,000 people are expected to have visited the theatre during the first week.

Following is a day-by-day record of attendance and receipts:

	Attendance	Gross
Thursday	23,073	$15,650
Friday	23,033	15,750
Saturday	28,354	21,202
Sunday	22,915	20,584
Monday	21,561	14,303
Tuesday	23,148	15,515
Totals	142,084	$103,004

Unusual was the complete unanimity of favorable opinion expressed by New York's newspaper critics. Saturday and Sunday thousands of children witnessed the story of Victorian girlhood. Sunday the theatre's doors were opened shortly before noon and by one o'clock all of the theatre's 6,200 seats were filled. Crowds were waiting to enter even when the overworked box offices were closed shortly before ten in the evening.

The theatre stopped selling tickets each day at the peak of the matinee and evening rush. On Saturday the box office was closed four times and at 1 p. m. 3,000 people waited in the street, with 1,000 "standees" in the lobby. Thirty mounted policemen were called to keep crowds in order. The police department officially reported that those on duty had never seen "such an orderly riot."

On Wednesday, prior to the opening of the theatre, two busloads of children from Public School 10, Yonkers, arrived, escorted by two teachers. Three other such groups arrived during the morning hours.

Universal Club Ball At Waldorf This Week

The Universal Club, organization of home office employees, will hold its seventh annual ball at the Waldorf-Astoria, Saturday of this week. A circus midway will be the setting. Charles B. Paine is president of the club. Herman Stern is chairman of the arrangements committee, and Helen E. Hughes is in charge of tickets.

Fox Adds Music Exploitation

Fox has added a musical exploitation department to the personnel at the Coast studio. Tubby Garron, representative of Movietone Music Company, Fox Film subsidiary, will head the department.

Hertz To Testify Monday Before Paramount Creditors

A meeting in New York of Paramount Publix creditors, at which John Hertz, former chairman of the Paramount finance committee, was to have resumed as the principal witness, was postponed again Wednesday until next Monday. Saul E. Rogers, attorney for a creditor group, was at Washington.

On the West Coast, Emanuel Cohen, in charge of Paramount production, issued a statement to studio employees decrying "all gossip and published rumors which are untrue and deliberately malicious," adding that reorganization of Paramount Publix was proceeding "satisfactorily."

Joseph P. Day and Peter Grimm, sales agents for the Criterion Theatre block on Broadway, asked several New York architects to submit remodelling plans. The Wednesday meeting of Public Enterprises creditors was postponed until December 5.

San Francisco In Price Fight

A battle over price scales in San Francisco theatres is at the moment engaging the attention of local theatrical interests. Three houses have altered their policies completely, and one has dropped from the high price to the low price group.

The Golden Gate has announced a top of 40 cents, as against a previous 55 cents. Only two houses, the Paramount and Warfield, at 65 cents, are asking more than 50 cents. The Orpheum has reverted to Fox West Coast, and will show first run double bills at 25 cents. The St. Francis, which had been showing twin bills, goes to second run double bills at 30 cents. The Fox is the leader in the low price war, with eight acts of vaudeville, orchestra and two first run independent pictures, all at 25 cents, with 15-cent matinees. The El Capitan, leading neighborhood, has dropped from 40 cents to a 30-cent top.

A general falling off in business, said to be as a result of the legalization of beer, has caused the Paramount, Loew's State and United Artists theatres in Los Angeles to eliminate vaudeville and presentations, going to a straight picture policy.

"The Sheik" Is Second Of Playhouse Revivals

Rudolph Valentino's most popular starring film, "The Sheik," is currently playing at the 55th Street Playhouse, New York, as the second in the theatre's series of revivals of silent pictures. Jesse L. Lasky produced the film. "Krakatoa," short subject in sound of an under-sea volcano in eruption, is also on the program.

Anchor To Make Eight

Mitchell Leichter, distributor of "Looney Tunes" and "Merrie Melodies," in New York from the Coast, has formed Anchor Productions. Plans have been made for production of a series of eight feature melodramas for the state rights markets. Bud Pollard will direct, at the Pollard studios, Grantwood, N. J.

Fewer Copyright Violations Seen

A marked decrease in recent months in the number of copyright violations on the part of exhibitors is reported by the Copyright Protection Bureau. The trend began more than a year ago, the bureau indicates, with the inauguration of a campaign of education among exhibitors.

A consequent increase in "payable" playing time throughout the country has resulted. Distributors have commented upon the unusual decrease in authorized holdover of films, according to Jack Levin, manager of the bureau. Exhibitors also, he indicates, have taken note of the benefits resulting from fewer instances of illegal competitive practices on the part of copyright violators.

H. L. Groves and J. L. Stein, division managers of the bureau, recently returned from the field, where they have been conducting the educational work, report the campaign is showing definite results in key cities. An example of the new outlook on copyright is noted in the reports of exchanges, indicating greater numbers of wires from exhibitors seeking permission to hold over pictures and expressing willingness to be charged for them.

Photophone Sales Changes; United Newsreels in Deal

The Photophone division of RCA Victor has announced the appointment of Elmer Grace to the San Francisco territory, succeeding M. F. Lowry, and the appointment of J. W. Sims to the Carolinas, replacing C. A. Mathews. Mr. Sims' headquarters will be in Charlotte, N. C.

At the same time, the company said that Photophone "High Fidelity" has been installed in the RKO screening room at Cincinnati offices of the RKO Distributing Corporation, and the United Newsreel Corp., of New York, has contracted for the use of RCA Victor portable sound recording equipment under a limited license agreement. The new company will begin work soon on a series of 12 one-reelers.

Chadwick Plans Four For State Rights Market

I. E. Chadwick plans the production of four features during the current season for state rights distribution. The first, "Wine, Woman and Song," with Lilyan Tashman, has been completed. Charles Jones has rejoined Mr. Chadwick in charge of publicity and advertising and will open a New York office for the company.

Brandt Adds Three Houses

Harry Brandt, New York and New Jersey theatre operator, has added the Rialto at Newark, in conjunction with Joseph Weinstock; the Carlton, Jamaica, and the Halsey, in Brooklyn. He also is booking the Broadway Gaiety for Stanley Lawton.

Cook With Preferred

Joe Cook, formerly production manager for Columbia, has joined Jack Bachman's Preferred Pictures in a similar capacity. He had been with Columbia seven years.

"MILLION DOLLAR MELODY" STRIKES BOX-OFFICE TUNE; "HAS EVERYTHING"

Educational's First Musical Comedy Runs Full Scale of Laughter and Song Entertainment; Public Responds to Big Name Short Features

Educational's new big-star-name short features have struck the box-office keynote. This is evident from the chorus of praise greeting these showmen's short subjects.

"Million Dollar Melody," the first musical comedy in this sensational series, is swelling the Box-Office Hallelujah at the original Roxy. The astute Film Daily critic reports:

> "A girlie-musical with a real story that has everything it is possible to put into two reels of melodic entertainment."

Exhibitors who enjoy that sweet music, will join in the "Million Dollar Melody" chorus when they show this smart Jack White production.

100 Per Cent Circuit Sales

Taking in a private screening of new Educational Pictures in his stroll "Along The Rialto," Phil M. Daly wrote:

"There was a first-class exhibit of cartoon technique in Paul Terry-Toon's "Beanstalk Jack"... but Paul's outfit has been turning out class cartoons for so many years that it hardly constitutes news ...a winner...very clever and funny... should prove immensely popular."

My dear Mr. Ramsaye:

Your article in the September 23 issue with reference to the Washington hearing on the code is truly a master piece.

Terry, you have written some marvelous things in a clean-cut and concise way, but this is the finest treatise that I have ever read from your pen. It covers a big subject in a definite way and the only way that it should be thought of by any thinking man who is interested in the recovery of this business.

I read it twice last night and three times again today and have written to a dozen exhibitors already in my territory that your story is the whole story up to date.

Terry, this industry needs more men with the vision that you have set forth in this article.

With kindest regards, I am

Dear Mr. Ramsaye:

I very much appreciate your having sent me the copies of the magazine to the Lincoln Hotel. I especially enjoyed the "Eagle Feathers" story, which I am going to frame to hang in my office. Not only does it show a lot of insight into what actually went on down there, but it shows a lot of real courage in telling the simple truth about it.

I believe that the labor figures are going to be useful to many of us.

With kindest regards,

Mr. Martin Quigley,

My dear Mr. Quigley:

I read in your November 4th issue of the Motion Picture Herald the articles on NOW THE SUPER-CHAIN, on "GOING WEST", and "MERRY-GO-ROUND", and I want to say to you that those are three of the best articles I have ever seen in any paper. Whoever wrote these articles certainly has some gray matter and has used it. It is too bad that more people in this country haven't the nerve and courage to say the things which are said in these three articles.

Yours very truly,

H. S. Mayer

55 MILLIONS WRITTEN OFF BY CHASE

other loans to General Theatres syndicates managed by Pynchon & Company, amounting to $11,500,000, and a separate loan of $9,000,000 to Pynchon.

It was said that $6,500,000 of these loans had been repaid, and some of the balance due on the others had been written off by the Chase Bank.

Continuing his version of the manner in which General Theatre Equipment gained control of the Fox companies, Mr. Dodge said, "Somewhere around the first of April it looked as though it was inevitable that the Fox Film and Fox Theatres would go into the hands of receivers."

"Mr. Harley Clarke at that time had conversations with Mr. William Fox with a view of buying out his controlling interest so that Mr. Fox would stay out of the picture, and"—

"Which was the 'B' stock which had the voting rights," interrupted Ferdinand Pecora, counsel for the senate committee.

"Yes, those conversations resulted in the purchase from Mr. Fox of his interest in both of these companies," Mr. Dodge replied, "which was about 50 per cent of the Fox Film 'B' stock and about 100 per cent of the Fox Theatres stock, for $15,000,000 by General Theatres Equipment."

"Under his agreement with G.T.E. on April 7, 1930," continued the witness, "Mr. Fox agreed to sell to G.T.E. 50,101 shares of the Fox Film Class 'B' common stock, being then more than a majority, and 100,000 shares of Fox Theatres common stock, which were all of the shares outstanding, all being owned by Mr. Fox, for $15,000,000 and 'other considerations'" which considerations were reported on previously.

Chase Officials Concurred in Fox Plan

Before outlining the many factual details of the Fox acquisition by General Theatres, Mr. Dodge testified that in April, 1930, various groups were seeking to oust Mr. Fox as the dominant figure in the affairs of the Fox companies, by means of court actions, and it was while these court hearings were being held in New York, Harley L. Clarke, Chicago utilities financier, conceived the idea of gaining control of Fox Film through having General Theatres purchase stock control.

Mr. Dodge and other officials of Chase Securities Corporation, and Albert H. Wiggin, former chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank, were said to have concurred in the plan at that time.

Further discussing the agreements which were a part of the Fox sell-out, the witness testified that William Fox agreed to deliver to General Theatres Equipment the written resignations of seven directors, and also certain licensing agreements; to hold his 50 per cent Grandeur capital common stock, and to organize a new company to hold that 50 per cent of his stock to indemnify Fox Film and Fox Theatres against 50 per cent of the amount of certain possible claims.

Mr. Fox also agreed, continued Mr. Dodge, to assign to Fox Film and Fox Theatres, in equal shares, stock of the Fox Hearst Corporation, then in his name, and the Fox Film and Fox Theatres, to indemnify him against any claims of Winfield Sheehan or Courtland Smith, officers of Fox companies. Mr. Smith is now with Pathe News.

General Theatres Equipment agreed, it was testified, that the Fox Theatres would repurchase from the Bankers Securities Corporation and the Penn Corporation, some 87,000 shares of Fox Theatres Class A stock at $25, and interest, or for about $2,320,000.

General also agreed to purchase 150,500 shares of Loew's, Inc., common stock and also an equity of 60 per cent of a $2,000,000 mortgage on the Fox Building in Philadelphia.

General Theatres made the Fox employment agreement at $500,000 a year and likewise agreed to cause the Fox Film and Fox Theatres to pay the fees of Samuel Untermyer and ten other lawyers who were actively engaged on behalf of Mr. Fox during the court hearings and the sale of his companies.

Other Provisions of the Sale

Among other provisions of the sale of the Fox companies to General were:

That G.T.E. would cause the Fox Film and Fox Theatres Companies to employ, for three-year periods, ten persons to be named by Mr. Fox.

That G.T.E. would cause the Fox Film and Fox Theatres Companies to indemnify Mr. Fox from all liability and expenses under a suit brought by the United States against Fox Film, Fox Theatres and William Fox for alleged violation of the Clayton Act.

That Mr. Fox was to participate to the extent of 10 per cent in any purchase or underwriting by G.T.E. or Harley L. Clarke, "of stock or stock warrants of any kind, of Fox Film Corporation or Fox Theatres Corporation in connection with the financing of those companies presently to be undertaken, and that we will use our best efforts and endeavors to increase your said interests up to an additional 10 per cent."

At this point, Mr. Pecora interrupted the witness to ask, "Did not Fox receive $3,000,000 in lieu of this 10 per cent interest from G.T.E.?"

"Eventually, in August," the witness replied. "My understanding at the time was that Mr. Fox was entitled to 10 per cent of 1,600,000 shares. Mr. Fox and Mr. Untermyer claimed that Mr. Fox was entitled to 20 per cent, or 320,000 shares of the stock, under the terms of this agreement."

"Meanwhile," continued Mr. Dodge, "the stock had gone up and at the time the other 90 per cent of the stock was ready to be paid for Mr. Fox did not appear to take up this 10 per cent. The other 10 per cent was taken up for him."

"Who negotiated this contract, Mr. Clarke or Mr. Fox?" asked Mr. Pecora.

"Mr. Clarke," replied the witness.

Byrnes Quizzed on International

Following the series of interrogations of the Chase participation in motion picture financing which were reported in the last issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, the Senate finance investigating committee resumed hearings early last Wednesday morning, at Washington, with S. M. Byrnes, president of International Projector Corporation on the witness stand. Mr. Byrnes headed the Nicholas Power Company at the time of its sale to International, a few years ago.

Mr. Byrnes did not help the investigators, however, claiming inability to recollect any details of the transaction. He assured the committee that he had not entered into the negotiations for the sale of the Nicholas company, but that Harley Clarke had apparently conducted the arrangements, acting for others.

Harley L. Clarke, who previously had testified concerning the financing activities in which were involved General Theatres Equipment and the Fox companies, resumed the witness chair on Thursday morning and was the only witness of the day.

Intricacies of motion picture financing which were described by Mr. Clarke apparently left members of the senate committee and Ferdinand Pecora, its counsel, completely puzzled.

"We have a puzzle picture here which doesn't make sense," commented Mr. Pecora.

So exasperated did Mr. Clarke's questioners become at one point of Thursday's interrogation that Senator James Couzens, of Michigan, "suggested" that the witness should bear in mind that he was testifying under oath and that he might be cited for contempt. This climaxed repeated warnings to Mr. Clarke of conflicting statements in his testimony.

But throughout it all, Mr. Clarke remained unruffled, smiling and insisting he was trying to help the committee as much as he could.

The testimony had to do principally with the absorption of various corporations by General Theatres Equipment, Inc., in which Mr. Clarke was financed by a syndicate headed by Chase Securities Corporation.

The Points at Issue in Clarke Testimony

After holding a private discussion, Mr. Pecora and the senators declared Thursday's session suddenly adjourned, confessing themselves baffled.

According to figures offered in the hearing by Mr. Pecora, Mr. Clarke paid a total of $3,232,000 for the Mitchell Camera Company and for four lamp companies and received in the course of a complicated financing process $6,100,000 for the stock involved. Mr. Clarke's version of it was that he received in cash from General Theatres, in connection with that corporation's acquisition of these five companies the sum of $6,100,000, which was exactly equal to his expenses.

Mr. Clarke, in attempting to make the committee understand what had happened in connection with the formation of Grandeur, Inc., which was organized for the purpose of acquiring the Mitchell Camera Company and some patents controlled by Mr. Fox, added the $1,475,000 which he paid for the camera company to $2,000,000 paid to Mr. Fox, making a total of $3,475,000 as the cost of Grandeur, Inc. He failed to reconcile this $3,475,000 with the $3,100,000 which the evidence showed was paid to him by Grandeur. He asserted, however, that the detailed figures in the exhibit explained the transaction. Mr. Pecora insisted this was not the case.

According to Mr. Clarke, Mr. Fox received besides the $2,000,000, 25,000 shares of General Theatres stock with a repurchase agreement under which he subsequently received $750,000.

Probably the most outstanding fact which developed in Mr. Clarke's testimony about the creation of General Theatres, was that write-ups in value of stock of the corporations which were absorbed totalled more than $38,000,000.

Mr. Pecora and Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida, described this amount as "water."

Included in the $38,000,000 was a write-up of more than $26,000,000 in the stock of International Projector, also a write-up of $10,737,000 in stock of National Theatre Supply, and about $1,273,000 in the case of four lamp companies.

Testimony showed that Mr. Clarke had acquired control of most of the corporations before they were absorbed by General Theatres Equipment, and Mr. Pecora sought to establish intermediate profits to Mr. Clarke in process of transferring the corporations to G.T.E.

Another corporation involved was Theatre Equipment Acceptance Corporation, common stock of which was held by Harley Clarke through Webster Securities Corporation. This stock was said to have been exchanged for General Theatres stock.

SAYS WILLIAM FOX GOT $21,000,000

Preferred stock of Theatre Equipment Acceptance, totalling some 3,000 shares, was held, with the exception of 70 shares, by Hammons and Company which had obtained it originally at $90. The stock was calleable at $110.

Several times during his testimony Mr. Clarke was taken to task by Mr. Pecora on discrepancies in his statements. One such instance related to an assertion by Mr. Clarke made at a previous session, that he was not a stockholder in the Nicholas Power Company, which was taken over by the International Projector Corporation. Thursday Mr. Clarke said he owned all the stock in the Nicholas Power Company when it was taken over by the other corporation, of which he was president.

Another instance of an alleged discrepancy in Mr. Clarke's testimony related to the sale of stock in the General Theatres Equipment, Inc. Previously Mr. Clarke said he had kept his original holdings of its stock, qualifying this statement by explaining that while he had sold a small amount he had later more than offset this by money put back into the company. Thursday Mr. Pecora developed the fact that Mr. Clarke had sold 50,000 shares for $20 a share, a total of $1,000,000, to a banking syndicate immediately after the formation of the corporation in July, 1929.

"Is a million dollar sale so small that you can't recall it?" asked Mr. Pecora.

"I am told the transaction took place, but I don't recall it," replied Mr. Clarke.

Bank Lost 20 Millions in Fox "Battle"

Early on Friday, Mr. Pecora announced that the Chase interests had loaned more than $100,000,000 to participate in the famous Fox "battle" in 1929 and 1930, and that this fund financed Albert H. Wiggin, Harley L. Clarke and a group of New York bankers to obtain control of the Fox companies from William Fox.

All the participants suffered heavy losses, the bank and its affiliate, Chase Securities Corporation, losing some $20,000,000, Mr. Pecora was quoted as saying.

Before concluding his testimony, Harley Clarke was questioned late in the week by Mr. Pecora about the payment of the $2,000,000 to William Fox, in connection with acquisition of the Mitchell Camera Company in 1929. Mr. Clarke said Mr. Fox also had received 25,000 shares of G. T. E. stock valued at $750,000 and explained that the payments were made in connection with patent claims by the former film executive.

Murry Dodge, vice-president of Chase Securities, followed Mr. Clarke on the witness stand. He told the committee he did not know the circumstances of the Fox transactions, but understood Mr. Clarke had run up against competition from Fox in buying the camera company. The camera company was bought by a corporation known as Grandeur, Inc., half owned by Fox and half by G. T. E. It was given exclusive right to distribute a new and supposedly valuable projector manufactured by another subsidiary of General Theatres.

"Doesn't it look to you as though somebody tried to get half the gravy for themselves and keep it away from the stockholders of G. T. E.?" Mr. Pecora asked. "No, sir," Mr. Dodge replied.

Mr. Pecora said profits from distributing the projector would have run into several million dollars a year, if it had turned out as expected.

While Mr. Pecora and the senate finance committee were listening to testimony at Washington about the Wall Street phases of motion picture financing, a sub-committee of this senatorial division was holding hearings at Los Angeles on the Fox West Coast bankruptcy, as a part of a series of hearings on various large southern California receiverships and bankruptcies.

Colonel W. H. Neblett, counsel for the California committee, which included, among others, Senators William Gibbs McAdoo, of California, and Henry Ashurst, of Arizona, indicated that the committee was somewhat bewildered over what it considered the fantastic and complicated corporate structure which had been set up to effect the voluntary bankruptcy of Fox West Coast.

Calling the whole situation a "headache," the committee called an adjournment last Thursday and then solicited advice from Trustee W. H. Moore, Jr., on suggested legislation for handling receiverships and bankruptcies in the future.

Total Claims Reach $39,000,000

Charles Skouras, operating head of the circuit, told the committee that he received $52,000 annual salary against profits for operating the properties. He added, however, that if the theatres do not show a profit, "I will owe them money."

The senate committee at Los Angeles was told that total claims against Fox West Coast were $39,000,000. Westco, the chief claimant, listed $16,000,000, but this has been cut to $11,000,000.

Fox Film Corp. claims $2,900,000 and Chase National Bank listed claims of $4,400,000, but Trustee Moore indicated that this figure would be cut to about $3,000,000.

Testimony brought out that Fox West Coast Theatres was owned by Westco, that Westco was owned by Fox Film, and that Fox Film was controlled by Chase.

Mr. Moore told the committee that the trustees would not worry about an additional million dollars, because it was "jettisoning about $20,000,000."

Colonel Neblett, counsel for the senators, replied, "Then, this bankrupt could purge itself by paying that outside million, because all of the other claims likely to be allowed are against itself."

"Not if they form just one more company," interposed Senator Henry Ashurst, "because what's one more company to Fox West Coast."

Senator Ashurst then asked about the history of the old Winfield Sheehan-William Fox struggle for control of the company. "What has become of Mr. Fox?" he inquired.

Senator McAdoo replied, "Mr. Fox got out without any stock, but with a huge fortune. He was the wisest guy of all."

Commenting on the pyramiding of the corporations, Senator Ashurst said: "They were not holdiing companies, but hideout companies."

Referee Milton J. Knoblock, at Milwaukee bankruptcy court, reserved decision on the hearing of an order to show cause why the assets of the Fox-Wisconsin Co. and of Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, Inc., should not be considered as assets of the bankrupt Statewide Theatres, Inc.

G.T.E.'s Receiver Settles Squabble

Difficulties which had existed over a long period between U. S. Senator Daniel O. Hastings, receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., and the receivers for Fox Theatres Corp. and others, were finally settled last Friday, when Chancellor J. O. Wolcott, in chancery court at Wilmington, approved the petition of Senator Hastings for authorization to agree to a proposed settlement of the controversies. There was no opposition to the receiver's petition.

The proposed settlement, among other things, provides that the receivers of Fox Theatres will not agree to sue General Theatres Equipment on asserted claims, and that General Theatres will deliver to Fox Film Corp., certain stock in Movietonews, Inc., which General received from Fox Theatres in 1931.

Film Securities Hearing Postponed

The various General Theatres Equipment and Fox enterprises were involved with the Loew interests in a hearing on financial and stock activities along another front, in connection with Film Securities Corp.

Federal Judge John C. Knox, in New York, postponed until December 7 a hearing on a report and petition of the trustees of Film Securities. The postponment was granted by Judge Knox upon the request of General Theatres Equipment, counsel for which told the court that there was a possibility that General Theatres might work out a plan in the next three weeks for preserving its equity in stock of Film Securities.

The petition of Chemical Bank and Trust Co., as trustee for the 660,900 shares of Loew stock held by Film Securities, was addressed to the court for the purpose of ascertaining whether the trustee should permit the sale of the Loew stock owned by Film Securities, at an auction now scheduled to be held in New York on December 12, but originally set for November 27.

Holdings of Film Securities consist of the 660,900 common shares of Loew's Inc., which were deposited as collateral to secure the $20,000,000 two-year six per cent notes of Film Securities. Holders of these notes, comprising a score of banks and investment houses, entered foreclosure proceedings in order to realize on this collateral. Chase Bank is prominently identified with the movement as a large holder.

Loew Meeting Put Off

General Theatres Equipment owns all of the preferred stock and the Fox Film Corp. owns 461,737 Class A shares of the Film Securities company, the entire amount outstanding. The Class A stock was trusteed and trustees were appointed by the court under the anti-trust laws, thus removing control of Loew's from Fox Film Corp.

Subsequently, the annual meeting of stockholders of Loew's, Inc. was adjourned, last Friday, until January 16, at the request of a representative of Chemical Bank, acting as trustee for the 660,900 Loew shares held by Film Securities. This step was taken by Chemical because of the postponement of the auction sale of the Loew stock to December 12. The new date was asked in order to give the new owners the opportunity to vote the stock at the annual meeting.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

The question is, what are we going to do when winter comes? Are we going to sit here in the house and listen to Sally Spivins on the radio singing "Love, Sweet Love;" a jazz orchestra playing cross-legged shanty nigger jazz; some guy extolling the curative effects of his infallible remedy for rheumatism, neuritis, laryngitis, fleabitis, dogbitis, ticdollyrue (which isn't spelled right) and other ailments peculiar to the human family? We ask you, are we? Our answer is, no, by gosh, we are not. Our contention is that every decent, law-abiding, liberty-loving American citizen is entitled to protection under the S. F. T. P. O. D. C. code, which means The Society For The Protection Of Dumb Colyumnists. This code hasn't been adopted yet, but we are submitting it to the proper authorities with recommendation that it pass. We ask you again, what are we going to do when winter comes?

When winter comes, and the cold north breeze
Blows up our pants and makes us sneeze,
We'll bet ten bucks that we will freeze
When winter comes.

When winter comes, and the sleet and snow
Blows down our back from head to toe,
Oh, gosh! gee whiz! where will we go
When winter comes?

Then, along with our sour stomach, here comes up that theatre code again. We note that in describing the beneficial effects of the code Mr. Rosenblatt advises us thusly: "The provisions relating to skilled labor regularly employed in theatres, such as billposters, carpenters, electrical workers, engineers, firemen, motion picture machine operators, oilers, painters, theatrical stage employees and theatrical wardrobe attendants, constitute one of the most constructive portions of the code."

Mr. Rosenblatt is probably correct about that, but you exhibitors go back and read that statement over again and see if it tickled your funny bone as it did ours.

The code seems to provide for everybody in the production field except the executive who draws $125,000 a year and a bonus of $650,000 and the darling little baby star of three beautiful California summers who draws a salary of $1,500 per week. All of which is loaded on to the cost of production and prevents the duped stockholders from drawing dividends and the exhibitors from making more than a bare existence. The code evidently overlooked these two important cogs in the wheels of this industry.

Then Again—

Then again, Mr. Rosenblatt is quoted as saying: "Our ears are assailed by the raucous evil cries of the professional harpies of this industry who make their money living upon the lifeblood of independent exhibitors. Our President has challenged the chiselers of this nation—I challenge the chiselers of this industry. Our beloved President has warned the money changers in our country, and I warn the unholy money collecting parasites now circulating among our exhibitors."

That statement looks good in print and sounds good from the rostrum, but we are wondering why it wasn't incorporated in the code. And we are wondering also if Mr. Rosenblatt really knows who the "Unholy money collecting parasites circulating among our exhibitors" really are.

Maybe with our impaired eyesight we don't see it correctly, but as we see it, the Motion Picture Code says more and means less to the picture industry than any document ever written. So that's that, and as Popeye says, "I yam what I yam and that's all I yam."

Letter After Letter

Well, here they come, just one letter after another. Leo Peterson of the Black Hills Amusement Co. of Rapid City, South Dakota, writes: "Sorry to hear of your sickness. Your traveling around eating grub everywhere and nowhere, and getting no rest, is more than a Democrat could stand, and they can stand about everything." Shame on you, Leo, for talking about us Democrats that way. Leo says that when Liberty gives a picture four stars he advises his customers that he won't be responsible for the success or failure of it. Good judgment, Leo; don't do it.

Detroit is also represented. J. E. Stocker of the Myrtle theatre says: "I was a subscriber to MOTOGRAPHY and later on to EXHIBITORS' HERALD, which you made famous (Hush, hush, J. E., you make us blush), or which made you famous. (There, that sounds more like it, if there is any 'famous' about it), and I hope we will have many, many more colyumns from you."

Thanks, J. E., and we join with the HERALD in wishing you every success. This is also "from one old-timer to another."

M. S. Beach of the Variety theatre at Akron, Col., hops all over us for not stopping longer with him and playing golf. He thinks that our going on to Denver and pestigating around with Harry Huffman, Henry Fridel and Morrison et al., is what brought on our high blood pressure. Yes, sir, we'll betcha that's what done it. We never thought of that before. Gee whizz! if those boys won't bring your blood pressure up, then nothing will. Thanks for your invitation to stay longer with you next time, M. S. We'll try and do it.

And Those Fish:

Ralph Falkenberg, that "Spirit of the West" of the Majestic theatre at Lexington, Neb., sends us a whizbang letter of two and a half pages closely written that "Covers the Field Like An April Shower," and that brought joy and comfort to an old pup when joy and comfort was needed. Wish we could copy all of it for you. He winds up his letter in this fashion: "Now, Dad, instead of counting the flowers today, close your eyes and see those fish jump. Walk down Hollywood boulevard; walk into a few studios, see again those hundreds and hundreds of small theatres, the life blood of the movie world, and then start telling the story to some of your folks and then mail it to the HERALD, that the rest of us may profit and benefit from the years of your driving and meeting the folk who try to make this old world laugh and smile, and you will be a true son of old Nebraska's Pioneers who never say quit. I hope you will be on the mend rapidly as we just can't be losing yet a while the old standbys of our industry."

Hey, there! Ralph, aren't you spreading on the salve pretty thick? But then, we are like a movie star: the more salve the better it suits us.

Thanks for your letter, old homesteader, "Come up and see us some time."

That Doggone Sherm

Then there's that doggone Sherm Fitch of the RKO office in Sioux Falls, S. D. (otherwise known as "Fitchy Witchy"). Sherm writes to tell us that he can't understand why Kansas and Oklahoma could bring on our high blood pressure when driving South Dakota when it was 110 in the shade didn't do it. We can't neither, especially when we drove 10 days with him. There's a guy who would bring the blood pressure up on a brass monkey. He says that all of Sioux Falls and South Dakota are pulling for us. Oh, yeah, we know what he wants. He wants us to hurry up there so he can beat us out of a couple of cases of 3.2 again playing golf. Well, he's a darn good guy, anyhow.

F. K. Haskell of the Pacific Northwest Trade News Bureau of Portland writes to express his sympathy and hopes for our speedy recovery. We remember having a delightful visit with him when we were in Portland and we thank him for his letter. He also sends a few verses which is captioned "Good Times," which we are passing on to you because of the good advice they contain.

"Think 'Good Times'—it is the state of mind
That brings Prosperity, and puts dull days behind.
Talk 'Good Times,' no matter what they say.
Sane optimistic talk will drive the clouds away.
Act 'Good Times'—be equal to the test.
Compel 'Good Times' to come, resolve to do your best.
Spread 'Good Times' by thought and word and deed.
With sturdy faith and confidence I know you will succeed."

What the Picture Did for Me

1790 Broadway, New York

Allied

OFFICER 13: Monty Blue—Played this one with "Lone Avenger" on Saturday. Would have been good, but what we got of it after every one else had run it, was a little out of frame.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

Columbia

BELOW THE SEA: Ralph Bellamy—Good entertainment. Has its educational value, too, in the color shots showing sea life on the sea bed; also has some good action in it and an undersea fight with a giant octopus. Did average business. Ran it on a double bill. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Oct. 27-28.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

CIRCUS QUEEN MURDER, THE: Adolph Menjou, Greta Nissen, Donald Cook—A splendid picture from Columbia. However, there is nothing big about this, but it will please the average audience. It is a detective story, set in the background of a circus and should prove excellent entertainment. The role of Thatcher Colt, cleverly portrayed by Adolphe Menjou, should make a good box office attraction. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Nov. 10.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

COCKTAIL HOUR: Bebe Daniels, Randolph Scott—Another story about the life of a girl moving in fast company. Nothing new about it. Fair entertainment. Sell the stars—Bebe Daniels and Randolph Scott—they are good. Fair business. Ran on double bill. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Oct. 27-28.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William, May Robson—For clean entertainment tops everything we ever played. Many said it was the best picture they ever saw. Everyone pleased. It has everything. Running time, 102 minutes. Played Nov. 6-7.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

UNKNOWN VALLEY: Buck Jones—Got away from the usual type and pleased old and young. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Sept. 22-23.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

WRECKER, THE: Jack Holt—Just a fair program picture. Acting of George Stone very good. You'll like him. Played Nov. 11.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

Fox

BERKELEY SQUARE: Leslie Howard, Heather Angel—A very artistic picture that Fox has produced in good shape, but it will not get any money the second day and you will have the most divided opinion of any picture that you ever ran. The idea is new, there is no doubt about that, but is like so many of these high class pictures that the metropolitan critics rave about as they did this one. It won't add a dime to your profits and you will have to take it out in prestige, if you can pay your bills on that. Howard has that stilted Oxford accent that is so objectionable to the regular run of small town patrons. Your literary club women and the morning musical outfit will rave about it and the regulars will give it The Bronx cheer.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CHARLEY CHAN'S GREATEST CASE: Warner Oland—Ran this on Pal nights and they seemed to enjoy it. Played to average business. Played Oct 31-Nov. 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S GREATEST CASE: Warner Oland—A very good mystery picture. In our opinion not the greatest of the Chan pictures, but it will please. Played this on a Saturday to good business. Played Nov. 4th.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S IN LOVE, THE: Victor Jory, Loretta Young—A Foreign Legion story that is just fair. It gave satisfaction and nothing to get excited about. No extra draw; just a picture.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

GOLDEN WEST, THE: George O'Brien—A good Zane Grey western. It's old but got 'em in and they will go home happy. Played Oct. 11.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

GOOD COMPANIONS, THE: Edmund Gwenn, Jessie Matthews—Boys, here's a warning, take heed: an English dialect with ahs and blahs that did me much damage. People walking out and saying, "What a lemon!" Tell John Bull to keep pictures like these. Several instances I refunded the admissions. I pulled it after first night's run.—West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

GOOD COMPANIONS, THE: Jessie Matthews—Our first and last foreign made picture for some time to come. Ten reels of nothing. The few that saw it were disgusted. It may go over in a town that is full of Englishmen, but we have none here, so it was a great flop. A good comedy on the same program was our life saver. Played Nov. 1st.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter—I have yet to find a single person who liked this picture. In my opinion the poorest picture in the Fox group. My advice is to exchange it for anything you can. If you can't do this just pay for it and let it lay in the exchange.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

LAST TRAIL: George O'Brien—A good Zane Grey story, and if western pictures are good with you, you need not worry about this one. Played on Saturday night to increased business. Running time, seven reels. Played Nov. 5.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—The best Zane Grey to date. Business good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

LONE AVENGER: Ken Maynard—Played this on Saturday with "Officer 13" and gave satisfaction. A fair western.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey — Another good picture from Fox. The first one from this star, and fine comments. She seemed to go over in nice shape. Business picked up the second night, which is a good sign. The picture was well liked. Good for your best nights. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 2-3.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor and Warner Baxter—Wholesome, clean and entertaining. Step on it. Played it here only two weeks after "Adorable," which picture was not so much. If you haven't hurt Gaynor with "Adorable" go for "Paddy" in a big way. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Oct. 30-31.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Very good. Used plenty of extra advertising on this and it helped plenty. Business good on this one; several came back the second night.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Henrietta Crosman, Norman Foster, Marian Nixon—In mailing this report to "What the Picture Did for Me" it can be told in a very few words; it darn near broke us. No one liked it. Had seven kids and just a few more adults to see it the first day; second day, no kids at all and about a dozen adults. People in the small towns do not care for this type picture. We knew this picture was weak before we played it. Thought we would at least get film rental, but we didn't. Took in about enough to ship it back to the exchange, where I hope it stays. Played Nov. 6-7th.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Marian Nixon, Norman Foster—Wish I had waited for reports on this one. Broke our low record, and no wonder. Sad and dismal. The young people go wrong and the old act fools with a graveyard ending. Why can't they buy stories about the young people going right? What a failure is "Pilgrimage." Running time, 90 minutes. Played Nov. 6-7.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

STATE FAIR: Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers—Give us more pictures like this one and you won't have to worry about being in the red. Play it and boost it. —Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

WALLS OF GOLD: Sally Eilers, Norman Foster—Well, Fox is not getting a very auspicious start with this one. Very poor. Not worth running. It is my guess that it will flop on any one second day run as it did here. What a business! At the start of the season, they take you on to the mountain top and show you the promised land, and then push you off with poor pictures. No happy landings with this kind.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND: Elissa Landi, Marjorie Rambeau—Here's a very unique picture with some elaborate scenes. It has its moments here and there but failed to register much on the box office yard stick. You know it's a costume picture and they always lack that "personal touch," which is essential at the box office or NRA (never run another) will get you. Played Oct. 30-31.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

ZOO IN BUDAPEST: Gene Raymond, Loretta Young—I was very much surprised at the results. The title is not so good and no feature stars. This picture gave good satisfaction. An animal picture that is decidedly different and is good fare for any day of the week. Played Oct. 23-24.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

MGM

ANOTHER LANGUAGE: Helen Hayes and Robert Montgomery—An extra good picture. One of the best we have played in a long time. Acting great. Story entertaining. Pleased them all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

ANOTHER LANGUAGE: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—Can't see this one. Lots of unnecessary talking and eating, that's all. Pass this one up. Running time, eight reels.—Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

BOMBSHELL: Jean Harlow—A very fine comedy with Jean Harlow and Lee Tracy. Bill as "Blond Bombshell" to get away from the war angle. Audience enjoyed it. Did a good business considering the blizzard.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—Well acted, action, and war on the high seas. Can't say war pictures are entertaining for me. We should have more pictures to promote peace instead of war. Running time, ten reels.—Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Jean Harlow—Grand entertainment to capacity business both nights. By all means play this one and grab yourself some business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young—Good picture to average business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy—Only fair. Poor business. My patrons just won't go for this noisy fellow.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady, Maureen O'Sullivan—This picture was well liked, and drew a lot of extra business. O'Sullivan perfectly cast, and turns in a fine performance. Don't be afraid of this one. It will stand all the publicity that you can give it. Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 5-6. —R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady—Not a special but better than average program. Miss O'Sullivan can sure dance. Two dance numbers with girls. Played Nov. 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Miriam Hopkins—One of the greatest small town pictures ever shown. Barrymore at his best and what wonderful support he gets from Miriam Hopkins, Franchot Tone and Stuart Erwin. A natural box office for any theatre. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Nov. 6-7.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—Good entertainment. Will draw well. Liked Marie in "Emma" the best. Play it. Running time, eight reels.—Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery—Very good. The audience is strong for Marie and Wally, but they did not think that this was as good a picture as "Min and Bill." Marie Dressler appears to be aging in the last year, which is too bad, as she certainly will be missed when she fades out. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Monogram

DIAMOND TRAILS: Rex Bell—Surprisingly good combination of western and racketeer picture. Bell speaks better than some of the big western stars. Where westerns are appreciated, use this one. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Nov. 3.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

BEDTIME STORY, A: Maurice Chevalier—One entertaining little picture to above average business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

BIG EXECUTIVE: Ricardo Cortez, Elizabeth Young—Fairly good picture. Society picture but poor business. Title means nothing and stars have no draw. Played Nov. 5-6.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie, Richard Arlen—Excellent entertainment to away above average business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

CRIME OF THE CENTURY: Stuart Erwin, Wynne Gibson—A mystery story that will hold attention all the way. It is not new but it is good enough to play any time. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 6-7.—R. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

GIRL IN ROOM 419: James Dunn—This was a pleasant surprise from the title, which was very misleading to a discriminating public. It's 100 per cent in entertainment value and will please any audience if you can coax them in. Step on it when you play. Guarantee its entertainment values. Played Oct. 9-10.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—An excellent picture for this section. All about the farmer's troubles.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

HER BODYGUARD: Wynne Gibson, Edmund Lowe—Here's one that is bright and snappy. This Lowe boy sure is the berries wherever they put him. We had good business on this and it must have satisfied—so, well, what else matters, anyway? Played Oct. 27-28.—W. F. Roth, Jr., New Palace Theatre, Gallatin, Tenn. Small town patronage.

I LOVE THAT MAN: Claudette Colbert, Fredric March—An average program picture that will get by; we had no kicks nor did we have any compliments. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Oct. 30.—R. A. Jordan. Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

LOVE ME TONIGHT: Maurice Chevalier—Another foreign picture that failed to please. Hard to understand this Frenchman, who is losing ground fast. I'm off all these imported subjects. Give us more Jack Bennys and Conrad Nagels.—West Point Theatre, West Point, Iowa. General patronage.

MAMA LOVES PAPA: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—Clean entertainment. Give us more pictures of this type. Play it and boost it.—Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

MAN OF THE FOREST: Randolph Scott, Verna Hillie—A good Saturday picture. Drew better than average business, but all of Zane Grey's pictures do this. Seemed to please. Played Nov. 4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MIDNITE CLUB: George Raft, Clive Brook—A good picture with two stars that draw well, Raft and Clive Brook. A crook and detective story cleverly acted. Can't go wrong on this one. Better than average business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 1-2.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MIDNIGHT CLUB: George Raft & Clive Brook—Here is one swell show. Excellent cast. Interesting story well done. Pleased cash customers 100 per cent. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 3-4.—R. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MOVIE CRAZY: Harold Lloyd—Good comedy to no business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MYSTERIOUS RIDER: Kent Taylor, Lona Andre—A Zane Grey western on the average with earlier releases. Running time, 60 minutes.—R. A. Jordan, Opera House Theatre, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Mae knows what the public wants today and brings them in on this one. Play it and boost it.—Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—Some liked it, others didn't. Business extra good.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen, Mary Boland—Good comedy drama, showing the life in an average well-to-do American family. A good cast helps to put it over. Altogether it is good entertainment. Fair business.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert, Mary Boland, Richard Arlen—They don't come any poorer than this one if you ask my audience and the writer. Comedy, tragedy for the exhibitor. Frothy, all trouble in one family. Dialogued to death. The first time that I have walked out for a long time but they did on this one and it flopped all three days. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—Story, music, singing, dancing and romance all in one package. It should please any audience and good for your best days. Played to better than average business. Held up well on second night. Played Nov. 2-3.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—This was great, and so was business.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott, Esther Ralston—An excellent western that pulls them in.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

UNDER THE TONTO RIM: Stuart Erwin—Didn't seem to please for some reason. Business not as I expected.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

WAY TO LOVE, THE: Maurice Chevalier—A A pleasing light comedy drama. No pulling power, but pleased those that came.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

RKO

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne, Conrad Nagel—Very fine picture. Beautifully photographed, excellent acting and story. Did better than average business.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

BED OF ROSES: Constance Bennett—Average business with better than average matinee women trade. The boys (may God forgive them) that make our press sheets have the cute idea that it is novel, modern, artistic, to put titles in mats at angles. This is up-to-date, they think. Stop wasting our costly newspaper space.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatre, Nampa, Ia. General patronage.

CHANCE AT HEAVEN: Ginger Rogers, Joel McCrea—Modern story. Clean entertainment. Play it, and boost it.—Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

DIPLOMANIACS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Only fair for these two. Business only average. Should have done more with these two.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

FLYING DEVILS: Arline Judge, Bruce Cabot—Made us a good Saturday night program. Nothing objectionable in it like there was in "Lucky Devils." Running time, 63 minutes. Played Oct. 28.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot, Betty Furness—Played this on our bargain night and the younger people ate it up. Nothing big about it, just a good, clean program picture. Played Oct. 25.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn—Can't say I cared for this one. The public thought the same. Played Nov. 9-10.—Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn—A good I cared for this one. The public thought the same. preciate acting, but a lemon for the small town. Played Oct. 5-6.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—Barrymore is supported by a splendid cast. A wonderful story of the country doctor played by a great actor. Play it and boost it. Running time, eight reels.—Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—One of the best that Barrymore has been in for some time. The ones that saw it enjoyed it and that is what counts. Played Oct. 25-27.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—Just lacks a whole lot of being a good picture. A good cast. Lot of talking, but very little entertainment. Did not please my patrons. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 6-7.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers—Not so hot.—Herman J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Ia. General patronage.

SONG OF THE BORDER: Tom Keene—A very good western picture with plenty of action and thrills. The story deals with the Arizona stage coach days and contains holdups, gun fights, fast riding, a bit of comedy and a slight touch of romance. The kid, David Durand, that plays with Keene, adds much to the entertainment for the kids. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 55 minutes. Played Nov. 11.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SWEEPINGS: Lionel Barrymore—You make no mistake when you play this one. Clean entertainment. —Edmund M. Burke, Smalley Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

Universal

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman and Band—I consider this the most beautiful picture every made. It has been cut too short. Business above average. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 10.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman, John Boles, Bing Crosby—This is a good picture of the musical type, but has no plot nor story in it. That seems to be the one objection to the show. It is a wonderful picture, gorgeous settings and costumes, plenty of good music and pretty girls. The recording is rather bad in several places and out of time. However, it will please the majority. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Nov. 9. —J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

REBEL, THE: Luis Trenker, Vilma Banky—A picture that carries action from start to finish. Beautiful scenery and good acting. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Oct. 30-31.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young and Leila Hyams—This is a mighty good football picture. Think the best we ever played. The stars are very good and a very good cast. Lots of comedy. Fine story. Gave good satisfaction. Played Nov. 12-13.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—A picture that will please all. Enough love interest for the ladies, and football and action for the men. Andy Devine carries the comedy part as usual. Good at box office. Running time, 72 minutes. Played

SAYS THE EXHIBITOR OF SO. CAROLINA TO THE—

Can't you hear him calling, Caroline? J. E. Ross, Jr., of the Strand, at St. George, S. C., wants to find more picture comment from South Carolinians in the Department. He writes:

"Would like to see more reports from exhibitors in South Carolina. What goes over in one small town in this state will usually go over in another. I consider this department a great help, and derive much benefit from it.

"Will try to get my reports in regularly from now on, and willl send in a larger number next time."

Nov. 3-4.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

S.O.S. ICEBERG: Rod La Rocque and Gibson Gowland—This is certainly a wonderful picture. You have got to see it to appreciate the bigness of it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

S.O.S. ICEBERG: Rod LaRocque, Gibson Gowland—This picture is so entirely different from the general run of pictures that I find it pretty hard to make a fair report. No doubt a lot of money and work was expended on it, but somehow I could not get them interested. Lots of icebergs, and not much story. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 7-8.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard, Ruth Hall—Better than average western. Drew better than average and pleased young and old. Played Nov. 3-4.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

Warner

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell—Very good. We ran this for a midnight preview only on Hallow'een night and pleased every one. If you want a good detective story, here it is. It will keep you on the edge of your seat every minute.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

LADIES THEY TALK ABOUT: Barbara Stanwyck—Good entertainment to good business. Print in fair condition to be so old.—Robert K. Yancey, Paradise Theatre, Cotter, Ark. Railroad and general patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL: James Cagney—A very good picture. Story very interesting and well acted. Good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. General patronage.

SILK EXPRESS, THE: Neil Hamilton, Sheila Terry—If you are looking for something different from the usual run of pictures, here it is. A good picture, packed full of thrills and adventure. Practically the entire picture takes place on board a train, loaded with silk, bound from Seattle to New York City. This show is free of any romance; however, there is a girl present to keep interest. Played one day to good business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Nov. 8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TELEGRAPH TRAIL, THE: John Wayne—These westerns are okay. Plenty of action, and pleases.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Ia. General patronage.

VOLTAIRE: George Arliss—A masterpiece of acting with a cast par excellence. Of real histrionic value, too, but a little too highbrow for this district, or else the fact that we were in the throes of an election. Whatever it was, it did not draw as well as we expected. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Oct. 30-31.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss, Bette Davis—This is a very pleasing picture, but cannot get any business with an Arliss picture. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 8-9.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

New Company's Travel-Reels To RKO; New Series Planned

Arcturus Pictures Corp., a new travel-film company, owned and controlled by James Boring, travel expert, has completed the first series of shorts and has sold several of the one-reel subjects to Van Beuren for release through RKO on the "Vagabond Adventure" program.

F. Herrick Herrick, in charge of the expedition, which returned recently from Africa, Asia and Europe, is preparing a new series and plans also a feature. Mr. Boring expects to accompany the second expedition. Mr. Boring has the S.S. Columbus and other liners under charter for his cruises and insists on authenticity, and to better portray the lives of the people whose countries the expedition visited, actual sound was recorded.

Mr. Herrick will continue in charge of production while other technicians will be added before the next cruise sails.

Forty thousand feet of film was exposed on the recent jaunt and from this the company has cut 18 one-reel subjects. The balance of the material will be used to round out future African and Asian films.

Biograph Signs For High Fidelity Sound

Biograph Studios, Inc., which soon will open in New York as one of the most modern and complete sound motion picture producing plants in the world, has concluded a contract with the RCA Victor Company for the use of its Photophone High Fidelity system of sound recording. Although the contract was signed this week, the facts were reported in MOTION PICTURE HERALD in September.

Installation of the RCA system will entail an elaborate set-up of the most advanced recording equipment extant, to be supplemented by the extensive recording and re-recording facilities of the RCA Victor studios at 411 Fifth avenue.

The Biograph studio itself is housed in a three-story brick and steel re-enforced structure located at 807 East 175th street, New York. There are two complete sound stages, on separate floors, and sound control rooms are being installed on both stages, with the entire organization to be so geared that both stages may be operated simultaneously.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

BEAMS OF SUNSHINE

In a recent conversation with Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, this vigorous executive declared himself unequivocally in favor of a day off a week for every manager, and stated further that he would bring this important matter before the state and divisional conventions of his organization, to be held within the next few weeks.

Heartening are these words, indeed, and we trust they will hasten the progress of our movement to emancipate, at least in part, the overworked manager. That so prominent an exhibitor-leader has openly affirmed the necessity of more consideration for the manager's welfare, that he has willingly gone on record to aid the promotion of such welfare, are beams of welcome sunshine that should help to light up the dark and rocky path of the neglected showman.

"ANTIQUE EXPLOITATION?"

In this issue, we have the pleasure of presenting to the membership, the opinions of Showman Charles Bassin, able helmsman of the Oriental Theatre, Mattapan, Mass., who states that, for the most part, present day methods of exploitation are antiquated and of little further use in promoting the fortunes of motion picture theatres. This condition, he lays upon the doorstep of the fecund fan magazine, which, according to Charley, "knows all, sees all," and most alarming, "tells all," thus rendering puny and futile the efforts of exploiteers who believe religiously in the box office strength of ballyhoo.

Bassin has opened a channel of interesting discussion regarding a subject of vital importance to every showman. Much is to be said for and against, and we solicit other members for their reactions. Therefore the meeting is now called to order, and the Chair will recognize the next speaker.

Who is it to be?

A BOW TO RKO RADIO

For long years a stepchild, reviled and neglected, the lowly press book has gradually raised itself in the esteem of long suffering showmen. Through the efforts of field-experienced home office ad executives, more care is now being given, and larger budgets allotted to turning out adequate advertising manuals that are practical and really useful to theatremen.

With the advent of Radio's "Little Women" press book, described in detail on another page, another stride has been taken toward that distant goal of advertising perfection, still dim upon the horizon. Entirely different in format and makeup, the job has been designed to harmonize with the atmosphere of the picture, succeeding admirably in so doing.

Not only as a thing of sheer beauty and delight, but also as a compendium of practical showmanship, does this accomplishment merit deserved praise. Something out of the ordinary has been done, and to Radioites Bob Sisk, S. Barrett McCormack, David Strumpf, Fred Schaeffer and Ralph Lund, our congratulations for doing it so well.

LET'S LICK DECEMBER!

Well, here we are on the threshold of December, so what to do to keep business up during the perilous weeks before the holidays. Merchants are prepared to shoot the advertising bankroll in this most crucial year, and smart showmen, rather than compete with these free spenders on unequal terms, will tie in with them wherever possible. In addition, there are many other slants to bolster the "take" in this uncertain month, and campaigns are already planned and are being set to cover all possible sources of revenue.

Some of these ideas from theatremen in the field have been set down on another page and others will be run in the next issue for the information of members in the market for added selling angles. Though not necessarily original, they have been tested and may prove of value in other spots.

But whatever managers choose to do, this is the time to start doing it. In the struggle to bring the country back to some sort of Christmas prosperity, the theatre must be in the front line of battle. Let's lick December!

Round Tablers in New York, Washington, Philadelphia and Hartford are contemplating Club Get-Togethers in the near future. We hope the movement spreads all over the country. It's a swell idea, and there ought to be more of it. Managers should get together socially more often. Those Round Tabler parties are great fun.

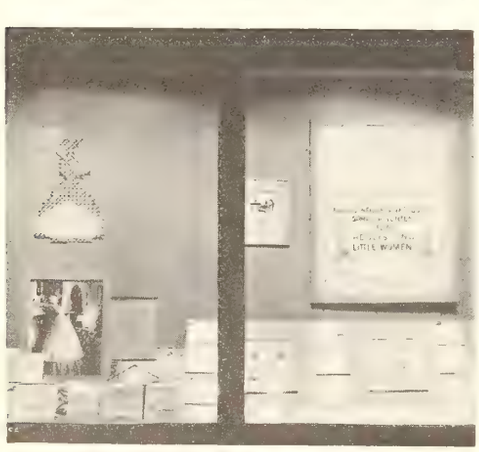
Schools and Stores Plug "Little Women"

A sampler contest tieup with R. H. Macy, in which a hundred dollars in cash and passes were given, featured the advance campaign of Radio's "Little Women" at the Radio City Music Hall, New York, in addition to which a number of other diversified ideas were worked by George Gerhard and Perc Trussell.

The sampler competition was worked as follows: In a special exhibit, the store displayed various suggestions, contestants being allowed to select any of them for duplication. The contest ran a month, during which time over 3,000 entries were received. Publicity was given it regularly on the Macy radio hour, and the prizes were awarded to the winners by Roxy in person. The store, of course, plugged the idea in its advertising, and windows were given to displays of some of the entries.



Sampler Contest Window

Various institutions were also hooked into the campaign, such as the YWCA, YWHA, Girl Scouts and other like organizations which cooperated by displaying special one sheets and window cards. These one sheets were also posted in over 150 branches of the New York Public Library.

A special preview was given for the members of the New York Board of Education, headed by Dr. Wm. J. O'Shea, and letters were sent to the principals of all local public, parochial and private schools, many of whom accepted the special one sheet for display.

Western Union tied in with a jumbo telegram reproduction sent by the stars of the picture, these being exhibited in every metropolitan branch. Other tieups were made with Faber pencils, Wanamaker's department store, and a very striking showing of pages of the original "Little Women" manuscript was arranged by Scribner's, the publishers, in their Fifth Avenue window. Beside the sampler gag (details of which will be found in the press book), Macy's tied in further with especially designed "Little Women" styles in their Cinema Shop, also plugging these in newspaper advertising.

On another page, we have detailed the special press book gotten out on this attraction, containing a wealth of ideas for any kind of a campaign, in addition to which, the sales department has mailed letters to every school in the country, selling the merits of the picture.

Sock Campaign For "Eskimo" Premier

With a raft of traffic stopping stunts, MGM introduced "Eskimo" at the Astor Theatre, New York, in a world premiere attended by celebrities of stage, screen and radio, and featured by an ace advance exploitation campaign put over by Billy Ferguson and others of Howard Dietz' crew.

Chief among the outside attractions was the Harry Reser Clico Club radio-famed Eskimos who broadcast a program from the top of a Fifth Avenue bannered bus, parked in front of the theatre, the orchestra clad in typical Eskimo costume. This musical concert was part of the half-hour broadcast from the lobby over Station WOR by a tieup with Macy's, who paid all costs, the deal being put over by Bernard Waldman through his Cinema Shop hookup with this prominent department store. The introduction of guests and picture announcements were handled by the Globe Trotter, for Metrotone. (See photo below.)

As the production was made under the protection of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, officials of that service were brought to New York as guests of the local Canadian Club to attend the opening, and among others present were the well known Arctic explorers, Captains Bob Bartlett and Steffanson and Harold McCracken.

In addition to the many local hook-ins, Ferguson tied up with over 25 national advertisers whose products were used by the production unit in Alaska, these companies turning out various advertising ideas to tie in also with subsequent showings. Among those cooperating are Lipton Tea, Hills Bros. Coffee, Lucky Strike Cigarettes, Eskimo Pie, Post Toasties, Ever Ready Batteries, Atwater Kent and many others, detailed in the press book.

Promotes Bus Signs For Few Passes

For the small number of ten passes, Manager Fred Reeths, Jr., Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis., secured some smart tieups on his showing of "I Loved a Woman" by promoting seven foot streamers on each side of ten buses that covered the entire city. Another practical idea that went over was the distribution of milk bottle hangers on all deliveries on the day before the opening.

Broadcasts were also promoted twice daily at noon and during the supper hour, a number of attractive window displays were effected and in addition to extra billing, Fred aroused quite a bit of curiosity with a newspaper teaser ad campaign.

Roxy Goes Mystery On "Invisible Man"

Stressing the weirdness and mystery angles, a number of effective stunts were put over by Ad Chief Morris Kinzler on the New York advance of Universal's "The Invisible Man" at the Roxy Theatre.

Foremost among these was the use of telautograph machines placed in various spots throughout the lobby, the sending station for the messages of course concealed from the public. For instance, one was placed alongside the box office (see photo), so that incoming patrons could not miss the "plug" copy, supposedly written by the "invisible man," such as—"You will hardly believe your eyes when you see me next Friday."

Another attractive trick display was a 40 by 60 mirror which when lit from behind would reveal the figure of the "man," and appropriate tieup copy. All stills and lobby advertising were so arranged that the features and figure of the "man" were never revealed. Extra marquee signs and electric 18-inch channel letters were rigged up, all of the flasher type with green bulbs to heighten the mystery effect.

Wisely, nothing of the story was revealed in the advance campaign, the emphasis being placed on the box office popularity of H. G. Wells, the author. Joe Weil, Universal exploitation chief, has crammed the press book with a number of workable mystery stunts which no doubt will be used profitably by managers playing the picture. Incidentally, the telautograph gag mentioned above is a honey, and every effort should be used to promote these in spots where they are available.

Radio Puts Out New Press Book on "Little Women"

Breaking away from all previous press book tradition, Radio has turned out an entirely different kind of advertising manual on "Little Women" that in beauty and novelty tops about everything in this line. Created by S. Barrett and his department under the supervision of ad head, Bob Sisk, it is a piece of work that will be carefully guarded by those fortunate enough to grab one.

The book takes the form of a four color die cut display jacket, done in offset, with a background of delicate lavender. Opened flat, a pocket is disclosed, containing three bound booklets in old fashioned wall paper covering, individually devoted to exploitation, publicity and advertising, the first done in three colors, and the other two in black and white.

And the job is as practical as it is beautiful, as there is a raft of good stuff for every need. Feature stories of all kinds, and numerous national tieups with a folder containing samples of ads and novelties, in addition to a flock of sock ads. It's a honey for sure, and a layout that will gather plenty of swell comment from the membership.

College Humor Tie-In On "College Coach"

The original drawing covers of Jefferson Machamer who also illustrated the 3 and 6 sheets for the picture, were used in the New York exploitation campaign for "College Coach" which opened at the Strand theatre. Mr. Milton, of College Humor, took care of the entire lobby display of drawings.

A tie-up in the November 4th and 11th issues of Collier's Magazine consisted of an article by Chick Meehan on "How to Build A Football Business." Collier's put out newsstand tack cards advertising the story and picture.

Several thousand cardboard megaphones with the title of the picture, the theatre and where it is playing was printed on them and distributed. Macy's Department Store gave away a football booklet which contained the rules and regulations of the game. A deal was made to distribute several thousand of these at the theatre on the opening day with an imprint of the picture, title and theatre name, in addition to which other novelties were also put out.

Salmon Uses Election For Clever Tie-In

A neat little stunt to tie in with any election was gotten up by Manager Joe Salmon, Riverside Theatre, New York City, who got up a snappy two-fold throwaway with three panels on each side that hoooked in nicely with New York's election for Mayor. The herald was seven inches long by three inches wide, and on the cover the copy read—"Voters, peep inside for information," and below, "Compliments of the Riverside."

When opened, the first panel simply called attention to election day with the names of the candidates, and this copy was repeated on the third panel, with the center one advertising a coming picture, while the two remaining panels on the reverse side plugged other attractions.

It was a simple idea and inexpensive, but distributed a few days in advance of election aroused the comment that Joe was after. Which, after all, is what every advertising idea must do, as Salmon so capitally proves.

"Gay 90's" Garb Good For Free Admissions

A stunt that grabbed its share of newspaper space was put over by Manager Clem Pope, RKO Albee, Cincinnati, Ohio, who offered free admissions on his showing of "The Bowery" to those presenting themselves at the box office in a "gay 90's" outfit. Male patrons were requested to wear pleated-back coat, potato-toed shoes and pearl gray hat. Bustles, flowing skirts, many petticoats and old-time hair dress, was considered proper in the case of the women.

Various Ad Slants Feature "Sigma Chi"

an elaborate front was constructed composed of college banners, colored panels and enlargements of picture stills.

Leading New York stores cooperated on various angles. Southern Pacific carried a full window in its Fifth Avenue office, the center of the display being a giant megaphone imprinted with the picture title in large letters. All the John David retail stores advertised the Buster Crabbe shirts and Russek's department store tied in with fur windows and newspaper ads featuring the dress named after the title.

The picture song hits were broadcast on some of the outstanding programs, including the Ed Wynn hour and others as popular. Thousands of imprinted cardboard megaphones and miniature footballs with picture copy on one side and score cards on the reverse were distributed at all local football games. In addition, a number of other effective gags were put over that helped these hustling showmen roll up a satisfying gross on this engagement.

Evidently our brother Brazilians also go for Eddie Cantor, as illustrated by shot above showing crowds at the opening night of "The Kid from Spain" at the Gloria Theatre, Rio de Janeiro. Enrique Baez, United Artists manager in Brazil and operator of the theatre, takes a bow for the effective campaign to introduce this attraction in his country.

SHOWMEN NOW GETTING SET FOR DECEMBER AND CHRISTMAS DRIVES

Theatres Should Be Leaders of Campaigns to Pep Up Seasonal Spending; Every Possible Angle Should Be Used

In the mad Christmas shopping rush, the folks of your town and no doubt many from the nearby area will throng the streets. Therefore, it is most important that theatremen do everything possible to make their fronts attractive enough to bring in those who might otherwise pass by. It might be well, therefore, to start this article by saying something about what others are doing regarding decorations.

The Christmas color scheme of red and green is to be used widely both inside and out with Santa figures on corners and in display signs. Lobbies will have Christmas trees decorated and lighted with jovial cut-out Santas wishing the season's greetings and other appropriate fixin's. In some cases, the Christmas trees will be planted atop marquees, and of course holly wreaths and red bells will be used extensively.

Inside the theatre, trimmed trees will be set in front of the stage, spotted with green and magenta lights. These are brought up full during intermissions and dimmed when the house is darkened. A few managers have dug up Xmas carol records which are to be played between shows. More sidewalk men are being employed and P. A. Systems used to sell the shows to the crowds passing.

Santa Claus Tieups

This genial gentleman will be used in many ways. For instance, on a tieup with stores for toy exhibits in lobby or foyer over which he presides. He will also be present at many Xmas party matinees where all children attending will be given toys and candy locally promoted. One manager is having the children place their desired Xmas gifts on prepared cards with their names and addresses which are gathered by his local Santa, who places them in a special bag. These cards will then be mailed to the parents with an appropriate good will letter from the theatre or distributed by the theatre Santa in person.

Kid Shows

Starting early in December at the Saturday matinee, special tickets will be given out to be punched for each Saturday attendance, with special stubs to be deposited in ballot box. Children attending every show will receive special prizes on the last Saturday before the holiday, and to those holding the lucky numbers drawn from the ballot box by Santa Claus, other prizes are to be given.

Another angle is a series of kid matinees with special features and souvenirs and at each showing, announcement is to be made of the big Xmas holiday to be held the Saturday before when toys will be given away. Children's plays will also be staged, such as "Hansel and Gretel" and "Alice in Wonderland," with local children taking these various parts.

In these columns are set forth a number of different ideas on what various Round Tablers are planning, to get their share of the December and holiday business. For many of these slants, the Club is indebted to able Mort Blumenstock, ad head Warner Theatres, and the following Warnerites in the field:

Frank LaFalce, Washington; Herbert Copelan, Atlantic City; Al Zimbalist, St. Louis; Joe Feldman, Pittsburgh; L. S. Stein, Chicago; Howard Waugh, Louisville; Charlie Smakowitz, Albany; Ben Katz, Milwaukee, and Sid Dannenberg, Cleveland. Dick Moss, of RKO Los Angeles, is also represented, and to him we extend our thanks.

Additional Xmas stuff will be run in the next issue.

Tom Thumb weddings are also slated with bride and groom and all attendants represented by children. Florists, stores, dancing schools are being promoted to supply everything needed in exchange for advertising, and in one instance the Parent Teachers Association is cooperating.

Stocking clubs are being organized in which children bring a stocking to the theatre into which a special prize is dropped each Saturday, the stockings being kept at the theatre and given to the children, filled, on the last Saturday before Xmas.

Children's amateur shows are also being put on with talent from surroundings towns as well as local artists. These events are being advertised with the name of the town from which the children are drawn from week to week, thus bringing extra patronage to see their local youngsters perform.

Package Service

An old standby that will again be used extensively. Trailers will be run announcing that packages may be checked at the theatre while their owners are enjoying the show. Classified ads are being planted, and some managers are putting over co-op pages with local merchants, stressing the checking service.

In a few instances, showmen have been successful in getting their local postmasters to place a sub-station in the lobby with government employees to sell stamps and accept packages for mailing. Other theatres are inviting patrons to bring their purchases in for free special packaging.

Food and Relief Shows

As a publicity purveyor and good will builder, the food matinee is unequalled. Newspapers are being tied in everywhere on this, and local dancing schools and radio stations contacted to supply talent in addition. For the relief of the needy, fraternal organizations are being tied in to sell tickets for special benefit shows with a portion of the receipts to be given to charitable organizations. Nothing more need be said about the food or tin can matinee, as showmen everywhere are acquainted with it.

Giveaways

This seems to be the big year for worthwhile giveaways to bring 'em in. The stunt of course is to build up attendance during the month and distribute the major prizes a few days before the holiday. Theatres are promoting bicycles, Lionel toys and other expensive playthings, for which tickets are given away at every kid matinee in advance.

This Is the Time to Shoot the Works; Members Give Many Ideas to Hold That Line for Your Share of Xmas Business

The adults will naturally be attracted to regular shows if sufficient prizes are given and among the promotions reported are radios, electric washers and even automobiles, which are awarded in the same manner as the above.

For those unacquainted with the details of this, the following may help. A well known Southern showman is arranging for a new automobile and other like gifts at cost price or without charge, as the case may be. Participating merchants are given special numbered tickets which are distributed with each purchase and are to be brought to the theatre on Saturday evening, Dec. 23, when the usual drawing will be held on the stage.

Obviously, as all those holding tickets cannot be accommodated in the theatre on that night, latecomers will be allowed to congregate in front, but in order to be eligible for the prizes, must hold the stub of an admission ticket purchased the same evening. In return for the prizes, the merchants receive mention in trailers and newspaper theatre ads, programs, etc.

Tiein Advertising

Every effort should be made to hook-in the theatre to all store advertising. For instance, this year toy departments are making a great drive on the various cartoon comics, such as Mickey Mouse, Popeye, Betty Boop and others. These stores are being promoted to furnish life-size cutouts and animated figures of these cartoons for lobby display, further publicizing them in their ads and windows.

Many theatres will run "Shop early" trailers for the benefit of local stores, in exchange for which managers will promote mention of their attractions in store newspaper advertising. Possibly mention of theatre package service will also be noted in merchant adds. Many showmen are arranging to sell space on back of herald programs, etc., to stores anxious to cover every possible angle for more business.

Out of the ordinary lobby displays are now being arranged in cooperation with florists, by setting aside space in the theatre or outside lobby for displays of Christmas flowers, plants, etc. Judiciously put over, this angle should give the theatre a very attractive front, at the same time aiding the flower people to increase their sales.

"Shop in Blanktown" campaigns are now being launched, many including expensive giveaways contributed by merchants, given away at theatres. See above for contest and award details.

Promotes Prizes For Best Love Letters

We have been wondering why the possibilities of letter contests in cooperation with the various fountain pen, stationery and typewriter people have not been more thoroughly exploited, as there is no reason why a stunt of this kind cannot be put over to good returns.

The management of the Paramount Theatre, San Francisco, Cal., evidently concurs with this thought by putting over most effectively a love letter contest with one of the leading stationery stores in which a prize of a Parker pen desk set was given to the writer turning in the most fiery epistle.

The competition ran during the entire showing of the picture, and the store went for it very enthusiastically in newspaper advertising and also with a splendid window display (see photo) that featured a striking enlargement of Kay Francis with lead copy as follows—"I wrote this letter. Can you write a better one?", tying in with the actual letter incorporated in the story, and the results are reported to have been very gratifying.

This idea can be further restricted by requiring entrants in these contests to use the stationery, pen or typewriter featured by the participating merchant, but either way, the stunt is very promising and we should like to see it used further in members' campaigns.

Studio Head Aids Wooten In "Moonlight" Campaign

The opportunity of including so well known a producer as Carl Laemmle in person, in the advance campaign of a picture, is rarely given to a manager, but Jay Wooten, Fox Dodge Theatre, Dodge City, Kan., took advantage of this angle when Mr. Laemmle and his party stopped off between trains to publicize the group appropriately enough on his "Moonlight" publicity.

Girls in costume greeted the picture executive, offering imprinted bags of pretzels as were passed out at the theatre and prominent spots in town. Mr. Laemmle and his party graciously consented to pose for a picture and the accompanying photo shows Jay himself in the five-gallon "showman's hat" next to the Universal head. Incidentally, these head pieces were distributed to all Fox Midwest managers by Division Chief Elmer Rhoden, at a recent convention.

A host of other smart ideas was put over by Jay, who reports one of the year's biggest box office grosses, and no doubt the presence of a studio group helped to pile up the good publicity that brought them in. Therefore, Wooten is requested to take an extra bow for his mental agility.

Advertises "Scoop" On World Premiere

It isn't often that a theatre has an opportunity to "scoop" a world premiere on an outstanding attraction, but this was the good fortune allowed the Royal, Wilmington, N. C., as reported by E. G. Stellings, booking manager for that house and also the Carolina and Bijou in the same city, on Universal's "Only Yesterday."

An effective two-column ad proclaimed the news of this early showing, and to prove the authenticity of the pre-premiere date, a trade paper notice was carried at the top of the ad which announced the first showing in Hollywood one week after the Wilmington date. Other ads and publicity stories also stressed the "scoop," and that patrons appreciated this unusual distinction was indicated by the good business done on the picture.

Stellings also forwards a number of ideas which were put across to advertise the opening of the fall season which was termed "Fall Festival of Hits." Thousands of four-page, two-color, heralds were distributed house to house by messenger boys a few days preceding the opening, every home in town being covered.

The festival was plugged in the newspapers a week in advance, and merchants also cooperated with tieup ads and special window displays. Telegrams from the studios were displayed in the lobby and also carried in news stories. In keeping with the harvest idea, a corn and pumpkin front was constructed, special four color tack cards were sniped around town and trailers run well in advance announcing the new pictures.

Evidently some swell showmanship is being whipped across in Wilmington, N. C., and we stress the state due to an error in a previous issue which reported the activities of these wide awake showmen as coming from Wilmington, Del. Sorry, folks.

Good Will Hotel Idea

During the Hotel Men's Convention, held in Los Angeles recently, those attending were guests at the Warner Bros.' studio, being taken out on the various sets to watch pictures in the making. Photos were taken of the group and copies sent to the home town of each hotel man where Warners operate a theatre. Managers are having no trouble planting these pictures in the local newspapers, as in practically every instance the hotel man is one of the city's leading citizens. Warners are thus winning the good will of the hotel men in each city to such an extent that the hostelries should be eager to cooperate with the theatres in various exploitation stunts that comes up from time to time, in which hotels can tie in.

Sales Manager Helps Plug "Sigma Chi"

Cecil J. Farnes, Portland, Ore., branch manager for Monogram Pictures, stepped up recently with a bit of neat exploitation on "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi." Listening in on the radio, he heard that well known band leader, Ted Fiorita, broadcasting from the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco. Remembering that this band was featured in the picture, Farnes immediately wired asking him to play the song hit after the title of the picture.

Shortly after, came the voice of Fiorita, who acknowledged the receipt of the request and gave the picture a nice plug, having his band play the hit during the broadcast. Smart work, indeed, and it looks as if Ed Finney had the boys out in the field doubling in brass.

Patrons Spin Mark's Wheel For Free Admissions

A couple of snifties are sent along from the palm tree country by Manager Mark R. Chartrand, Biltmore Theatre, Miami (Fla.), and the accompanying photo illustrates a lobby gag that exploited "Her First Mate." Mark secured a regular ship's steering wheel and mounted it so that it would spin freely. Then he daubed one of the wheel handles a bright red, and directly behind it on a large poster he painted a compass face with the four directions. Patrons were asked to spin the wheel and if the red handle stopped at "North," a pass was awarded. About every fiftieth spin was good for a ducat, and there were constant crowds waiting to try their luck. Mark says that it worked very well for him and also recommends it, as do we, on most any kind of sea picture.

Another idea that brought in extra admissions was a "Sweetheart Night" put on with

Mark's Lobby Gag

"Hold Me Tight," the idea being that the girl paid for the tickets instead of the boy. To make it easier, Chartrand allowed couples in for an adult admission plus ten cents, which he announced in advance personally over his house p. a. system.

Incidentally, most of Mark's inspiration comes from the pulchritudinous lady handling the wheel in the above photo. From what we hear, she is soon to be the skipper of the Chartrand household. Best of luck, children, and every good wish.

WHAT'S WRONG WITH BALLYHOO

Flood of New Fan Magazines Antiquate Present Day Methods of Exploitation, Says Bassin

by CHARLES BASSIN
Manager, Oriental, Mattapan, Mass.

This very able showman and loyal Round Tabler, in no undecided fashion, sets forth his views on that much discussed and well harassed subject of exploitation in the motion picture theatre. With a background of years in advertising and showbusiness, Bassin states opinions based on his personal investigations, and whether or not you agree with him, his article makes highly interesting reading.—MIKE.

CHARLES BASSIN

A new era of exploitation is at hand. No longer is it either necessary for you to extol the virtues of each attraction to your patrons. Just let enough of them know what the picture is, and if the production warrants they will flock in. The rabid movie fan knows more about pictures and players than you do and his knowledge is profoundly influential with the occasional theatregoer.

A wary public dislikes being sold. It wants to buy. No longer does the public wait for the theatre propagandist to tell it about a picture. Your patrons will tell you; talk to your trade and you will soon find they know enough about stars and stories to put even the exhibitor to shame. Now why does this condition exist? It exists because the public, by choice, has schooled itself in the approval or disapproval of pictures by advance information.

During the past few years, many new movie magazines have appeared. Every news stand, drug store and soda fountain, book store, lending library, beauty parlor and barber shop now carries its share of cinema periodicals. The nickel and dime emporiums added a line of cheaper film magazines that are read with a fervency that should turn our churchmen green with envy. If only their parishioners would read the Bible with like interest! Is it any wonder, then, that these magazines and not the theatre advertiser, to a great measure guide the destinies of the pictures?

Before the inception of these magazines, the theatregoer depended upon newspaper ads and the theatre exploiteer for his information. But these sources have been obsoleted by newsier material, and now in most cases (not all) serve merely to tell where and when a picture may be seen. The moviegoer now has his or her desire for film fare aroused by advance "dope."

The lives of stars and featured players are an open book to these celluloid literature fiends. They know every phase and development of screen stories. They can tell you who did the dialogue and who created the gowns; they can tell you who designed the sets and who wrote the scenario.

Exploitation Antiquated

Definite opinions on almost every picture are planted in readers' minds and grow from seed sown by tillers of cinema soil and nourished into life by fertile feature stories and copious chatter columns.

As the writer goes, so goes the reader. Many box office gems have been so completely unsold (probably unintentionally) by the whims of these writers that the pictures are licked before release. On the other hand, productions have been "put across" by the pen points of these screen scribblers. As a picture goes into the workshop, other factors being equal, its final fate is to a great measure in the hands of Hollywood correspondents and feature writers.

As a direct result of the public's knowledge, our methods of superlative exploitation are highly antiquated. They are no longer necessary. The bargain seekers of entertainment cannot be "hoked" into spending their money for pictures they do not want to see. Granted you can kid 'em once or twice, but remember that yours is not a fly-by-night enterprise and such methods will eventually lead to disbelief in your advertising. As a spoke in the wheel of any community, the theatre must stand ready to back up its merchandise in the manner that is expected

Don't Oversell Shows

Furthermore, you cannot compensate unsatisfied patrons the way a merchant can. You must be sure that your product will back up your sales talk. If it doesn't, your patrons will soon grumble, "Don't go there; their shows are rotten." Don't try to cram your programs down their throats. If they pick 'em and don't like 'em, they can't blame you and will continually resell themselves. to see your attractions.

In spite of the present cry, "Barnum did it! Why can't we?", picture merchandising is moving steadily but surely away from circus ballyhoo. At this point, it may be well to explain that legitimate exploitation is not included in this category. The type of salesmanship employed by the sideshow speiler who always oversells his wares is the brand of merchandising inferred.

The circus can fool 'em once a year and get away with it, but not the theatre. As a permanent institution, it must give its patrons a square deal with every show. The show-wise and story-read patrons won't bite at worms. The only bait that will hook 'em is meat, and how well they can differentiate between pork and porterhouse. But when they realize that they have been kidded into spending their money without getting value, just so much ill will is created.

The task of the theatre manager is to let the greatest number of people know what is playing. He must saturate his potential trading area with a forceful campaign engendering legitimate sales fire. Whether his message blazes forth from the side of a twenty-mule team with a wheel pre-arranged to gutterize at Broadway and 42nd Street (shades of Mike Vogel in his nefarious youth) or his story is delivered to a R. F. D. mailbox with the dignity of a court summons, its purpose should be the same. It should sell the stars and attractions with suitable pertinent copy without overselling. The effect of overselling can be likened to running a trailer with interest creating scenes and then exhibiting the picture without them.

Public Is Picture Wise

That the picture is either sold or unsold before you play it is best illustrated by the enormous campaigns on pictures that have failed and by ordinary campaigns on so-called "program pictures" that have netted sensational grosses.

That the public is picture wise is a simple lesson that it took me many years to learn. After numerous "sweet" campaigns that flopped, I understood to find out why these campaigns proved unsuccessful though the methods were proven.

An intense investigation into the personal lives of my patrons revealed that pictures were an important subject for fireside and table discussion. I found that opinions were formed on pictures long before release and that the popularity of a production was to a great degree created by magazine articles and newspaper columns long before they arrived at the theatre. I discovered that the public and not the producers made this America's fifth largest industry.

True, the producers gave John Public what he wanted, but they were forced to in order to exist. We all know what happened when the pictures were bad. No matter how many superlatives sales methods were used in merchandising a poor attraction, Mr. and Mrs. Moviegoer couldn't be dragged in to have a look. On the other hand, I found them eager to see many attractions which you and I considered mediocre and unworthy of special selling.

And thus it was that I learned that the surest way to increase my grosses was not to attempt making the public think that all my pictures were good, but to let the greatest number of people know what was coming to my theatre. When those that are proven business getters don't bring 'em in, I know my message hasn't reached enough people.

I've stopped kidding myself with campaigns that look good to the home office, but don't bring dollars to the box office. After all, my stock in trade is the profit that I can show at the end of each week. It is neither my intent nor desire to set myself up a tin god of exploitation, but I do know that my present methods are getting results, and after all, that's what counts.

Gene Promotes Bargain Week on "Annie" Date

The cooperation of 27 neighborhood merchants was obtained by Manager Gene Stutenroth, Holme Theatre, Holmesburg, Pa., who made his "Tugboat Annie" date an occasion for a community bargain week. Figuring that the campaign he desired would run considerably over his budget, Gene sold the stores on the idea of each contributing a small amount for an advertising splurge that would sell goods as well as the picture.

Which was done. The campaign started with a co-op page in the local newspaper with each of the participating merchants advertising some special sale during the run of the picture and installing theatre displays in their windows. The street on each side of the theatre was decorated with flags and pennants and directly in front of the house a huge banner was hung advertising the picture and sale (see photo).

Searchlights were promoted from the local utility company, the delivery trucks of each store was plastered with banners and other copy, special heralds were distributed house to house in an area of nine miles surrounding the theatre, and even bowling alleys put on special Marie Dressler and Wallace Beery sweepstakes and that's a good idea.

We are pleased to commend Gene on his very good job, especially since it was a one-man campaign. Incidentally, he reports that this is the first time since he has been on this assignment that the merchants have all co-operated so enthusiastically, and now that the ice is broken no doubt we will have other community campaigns equally as effective from this hustling Round Tabler.

Yearly Fall Fashion Show Big Grosser

A presentation that he started a few years back, which has become a stronger draw with each repetition, is the fall fashion show put on by Warner City Manager Frank Boucher, Hagerstown, Md., the current one presented a few weeks ago at the Maryland Theatre in conjunction with the showing of "Stage Mother."

Tying up exclusively with one of his leading stores, Frank's idea was a showing of feminine apparel "around the clock" in which a number of well known local girls wore the costumes appropriate to the time of the day, leading up to a finale of an elaborate bridal party scene in which the entire cast appeared. In addition to the store advertising the event heavily, the local newspapers carried long stories and fashion cuts of the event.

Frank also sends along copies of his papers with front-page stories on a local "Buy Now" campaign upon the arrangement committee of which this well liked showman is serving through appointment by the mayor. Despite the time he has had to devote to the above activities, Boucher managed to sponsor a Hallowe'en party at the Colonial Theatre, which is also a yearly event and attended by almost every kid in town. Cash prizes were given for the prettiest and funniest costumes and an apple ducking contest was a feature of the event.

Incidentally, the circus herald for the gathering (and well done, too) was created by the newly appointed Manager Kelly, who previously served as assistant at this theatre.

Promotes Fire Truck For Street Bally

It takes an especially strong stand-in with the local officials to promote fire apparatus for the theatre exploitation, and Wally Caldwell, skipper of Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, evidently has just that, for his campaign on "The Chief," included the unusual street bally of a bannered ladder truck borrowed from the fire department and driven by a uniformed chauffeur fireman (see photo).

This is in line with the always effective exploitation that Wally puts over on all his attractions. For instance, on "Broadway Through a Keyhole" one of his outstanders was a large department store fashion window enclosed in beaver board, containing a huge cutout keyhole allowing five people at one time to "peak" into the display. Other like windows were secured and 5,000 Winchell reproduction heralds were distributed house to house and in parked cars.

Further merchant tieups were made for free newspaper ads, one being a two-column display showing Russ Columbo at the microphone, and another a ten-inch hair wave ad plugging Blossom Seeley. In addition, Caldwell also obtained a number of newspaper style and fashion stories built around the stars of the picture.

Outstanding in Caldwell's "Night Flight" exploitation were a two-day Clark Gable drawing contest in one newspaper and a "Famous Flights of History" contest in another paper. A still showing Helen Hayes in her kitchen was also used by one of the above papers for promotion on its cooking school, and a national broadcast in which the star appeared a few days in advance of his showing, was taken advantage of by Wally, who landed stories in all radio columns in which theatre and picture were mentioned prominently.

Effective Contest

Over 1,500 replies were received in the six-day "Gold Diggers of 1933" silhouette contest conducted by a local paper in conjunction with "Gold Diggers of 1933" which played at the Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville, Ky. According to the paper, more than two-thirds of the replies correctly named the identity of the six stars whose silhouettes were published during the contest, showing how well known Louisville fans know their movie stars. Only 25 winners were selected, these being based upon a 50-word letter that each reply had to have, telling just how the contestant identified the stars. It cost the theatre $10 in cash and 25 pairs of tickets.

SHOWMEN CONVENE. Managers of the M. & P. Theatres Corp. were recently called into Boston by Managing Directors Martin J. Mullin and Sam Pinanski to participate in a two day conference, in which producing company executives discussed the new product. Other M. & P. department heads present were E. A. Cuddy, Marion Coles, Clif Tinkham, Phil Seletsky, Al Bevan and Harry Browning.

"BROADWAY VS. MAIN STREET"

Long Island Small Town Manager Gives Personal Observations On City and Rural House Operation

by WILLIAM A. LEVEY,
Manager, Capitol Theatre, Riverhead, N. Y.

"I am the manager of a little community theatre in Spring Lake, just one of those intimate little movie houses where they all know you and call you by your first name, about three hundred and fifty seats and we play about fifth run on pictures. Not much of a chance for a feller to get ahead here. If I could only get a break and get a theatre in New York, on Broadway, I'd show 'em how to run a house, all right."

WM. A. LEVEY

Thus spoke John Wilson, the manager of the Main Street Cinema. Then again:

"I'm darned tired of all this glitter and glamor, all these thousands of people with never a smile on their faces, the week-stand shows, lights, music, hustle bustle of Broadway's maddening throngs. Oh boy! give me a nice little house in the country; just a small theatre where you know the people, talk to them, get to learn their likes and dislikes, and they call you by your first name. A manager means something in one of those theatres."

Thus spoke Bill Jones, manager of one of Broadway's palaces.

There is about as much difference in managing a Broadway theatre and managing a Main street theatre as there is between an elephant and an antelope. Oh, what a difference, as I have discovered.

Must Cater to Patrons

I have been connected with the theatre in almost every capacity. Have held positions in theatres playing dramatic stock, the operas, motion pictures, burlesque, musical comedy, stage presentations in theatres, here and abroad. When I say "abroad" I mean an hour's ride from Times Square. I have been in the business long enough to know that there is a decided difference in theatre operation and management on Broadway and on Main Street.

The question arises, "can a manager, who has never been away from New York (Broadway) go to the small town and successfully run a house there?" I would answer "Yes; if the man were a real showman he could successfully and capably run this small-town house."

Perhaps he would encounter difficulties; surely he will encounter problems such as he was never confronted with on Broadway. He will find out soon enough that you can't feed the small towner the baloney you do the wise New Yorker, and get away with it. But if he is a true type showman and not a banker, he will discover what his patrons like and try to cater to them and avoid stepping on their corns.

He will also find (if he was formerly connected with a major circuit) that his duties in running the small-town theatre will be somewhat more strenuous than they were at the Broadway house. Here he will have to do practically all the work himself, and if any Broadway manager thinks he is overburdened with details, he'd be amazed at what the small-town manager must accomplish in the matter of details.

Patrons who come to the Main Street cinema are vastly different from the Broadway theatre-goer. A manager can stand in the lobby of his theatre on Times Square and, aside from the "dead heads" whose names appear on the royal register of the free list, he won't get a tumble from the thousands who enter.

Main Street Contacts

On Main Street, standing in the lobby, it's "good evening, Bill; fine weather we're having," or "it's a great show tonight" or "where'd you get that lousy picture from?" You're one of the townsmen in a little town, or you're not one of them, and, if not, you might as well get out of town.

In a Broadway house, a manager does not have one-tenth of the personal contact of the Main Street manager. This contact is a very intimate relationship between manager and patrons, who learn to confide in you and tell you of their tribulations. They come to believe in you so that when you endorse a picture they'll come and see it, and it better be good, believe me.

What's good for Broadway is not good for Main Street, for the small-town theatre cannot be run from a home office. In this respect I feel it my duty to give warm praise to the man at the helm of this circuit. He firmly believes that the manager knows what's best for his individual theatre and he is practicing exactly what he preaches.

The difference between managing a Broadway theatre and a Main Street theatre simmers down to simply this: In the former we find circuit and organization operation with the manager a charge d'affaires, while on Main Street it is individual manager operation, catering and serving his patrons what they like to the very best of his ability.

Plaster of Paris Pigs Make Novel Flash

From Jack L. Foxe, assistant to Manager Gilman, Loew's Parkway, Baltimore, Md., comes reports of a neat campaign put over by these showmen on the seemingly everlasting "Three Little Pigs," and the feature on the same program, "Song of Songs." An effective lobby idea was worked out with three junior "porkers" in plaster of Paris which were placed on a platform, with Mickey Mouse himself evidently acting as master of ceremonies (see photo).

The Piggies and Mickey

As this was a return engagement on the short, the popularity of which was noted by other smart advertisers, it was not very difficult to dig up some nice tie-ups, one of which was a booklet in color, describing the adventures of the piggies, contributed by a local brick company and distributed to children at the theatre.

Some very artistic lobby poster work was turned out for "Song of Songs," the statuette figure of Marlene Dietrich duplicated in oils, attracting continued attention and occasioning favorable comment. The above ideas, Jack reports, helped to bring in business.

Continental theatre art usually strikes a high note and this illustration above gives you an idea of how they put over Al Jolson in "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum" at the Metropole Theatre, Brussels, Belgium.

More Highlights On "Footlight" Dates

Continuing to ring the bell with a lot of ticket selling ideas, Charlie Einfeld's Warner ad men in the field are helping managers to net fancy returns on "Footlight Parade." A number of campaigns have been reported from various spots and among them the following slants are noted.

Irv's Taxicab Parade

In Cleveland, Sid Dannenberg, not only sold the picture locally, but also throughout the state by inviting every important motion picture critic in Warner Theatre Ohio cities to a special preview at the Uptown Theatre in Cleveland, the critics being accompanied by the respective Warner managers. The results of this idea should go far to give the picture a great build-up in the subsequent runs.

For the date at the Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., Irv Windisch turned loose a flock of hot stuff climaxed by a street parade of bannered taxicabs, led by a motorcycle police escort with screaming sirens. Each cab carried window snipes announcing the opening on the same night and during the run the cabs also carried other theatre advertising and tire covers. The accompanying photo shows the start of the parade.

The parade idea also paid dividends for that well known showman Ace Berry, head man at the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., who tied in with his local Chevrolet dealers' association for 50 bannered cars and individual chauffeurs. Ace also got the Junior Chamber of Commerce to join the party, the members riding in bannered open cars, escorted by a troupe of costumed show girls who distributed "Footlight" heralds at every stop.

A lot of other meaty broadsides on this attraction from other Round Tablers are now in the process of execution, and will be chronicled in these columns in subsequent issues.

Good Selling Angle

Managers booking "Thunder Over Mexico" will be interested in the circular letter sent out by Dr. Joe Lee to every deaf and dumb school in Greater New York as part of his campaign at the Rialto Theatre. As the picture is silent, carrying written titles, synchronized only by music, Joe emphasized this in his letter and reports that the returns in admissions as a result were quite encouraging.

The letters were addressed personally to the heads of each school, complimentary tickets being enclosed, with the added request that the information contained be given to pupils and their friends.

ADVANCE HELP

A sales promotion stunt that should help local showings of RKO Radio's "Little Women" is a letter under the signature of Vice-President Ned E. Depinet, sent to 18,000 women's clubs and 28,000 schools and colleges, which gives the story a great plug and also details the cast. It isn't too early to tie in these contacts locally if you intend playing the picture.

Leon J. Bamberger, of RKO Radio, handled all details of the campaign.

Various Ideas Used By Glenn Carroll

Situated in the midst of the wheat country, it was natural that Manager Glenn Carroll, Midland Theatre, Coffeyville, Kan., would decorate his front on "Golden Harvest" with attractive grain displays which framed stills and posters of the picture. Unfortunately, Glenn neglected to send along a picture of what should have made a very interesting effect, but he did forward some shots on other of his campaigns, a street bally on "Gold Diggers" being illustrated below.

Glenn went for the pretzel distribution gag on "Moonlight and Pretzels" with small packages containing the recommended press book copy, and on "I'm No Angel" mailed handwritten post cards to a number of local men, the card supposedly written by Mae West stating that she would be in town for a few days and inviting the folks to "Come up an' see me sometime."

The exploitation stunts forwarded by this showman indicate his industry in putting over the shows, but we might utter a mild word of warning regarding the handwritten card stunt mentioned above, for unless it obviously advertises the picture, as Carroll has done, suspicious wives may be inclined to fuss.

Coppack Cops Plenty On "Harmony" Date

Sedge Coppack, doing things in Stapleton, S. I., for the benefit of the Paramount Theatre, put across a campaign on "Too Much Harmony" with a number of ingenious twists we have gotten to expect from this well equipped showman. For instance, his stand in with the local newspapers plus Sedge's ability to write good copy, brought him a number of sweet breaks.

Among these were an imaginary interview with Bing Crosby while making the picture, a story on the hobbies of the chorus girls in the production, a Sunday magazine page story on the screen debut of Jack Oakie's mother, a review of Crosby's career, and last, but not least, editorial comment on the technical achievements of the Paramount studios in making the picture.

Stressing the musical angles, Coppack got a lot of returns for his exploitation stunts he put on stressing the song hits, which were plugged to his mailing list and in the regular theatre newsette in which merchants' advertising paid for the printing. A news agency tieup resulted in herald distribution in magazines distributed over the entire island, and the synopsis and critics' rating of the picture were distributed by the Better Films Council to all schools, clubs and other organizations.

Other slants that helped were a "Too Much Harmony" meeting of the local Kiwanis Club, in which the theatre organists played hit numbers from the picture, Crosby photos given to all ladies attending opening matinee, street girl float, Postal jumbo telegrams signed by Crosby furnished free to the theatre for display in prominent shop windows, and a newspaper "Rags" portrait contest in which contestants were required to cut and paste together different pieces of cloth to resemble a photo of Jack Oakie.

Starr Uses Smart Copy On "Henry VIII"

To make certain that the costume angle of "The Private Life of Henry VIII" would not hurt the local draw, Manager Herman Starr, Cove Theatre, Glen Cove, L. I., stressed the laughs with a lot of snappy, colloquial copy. For instance, "He might have been a 'nize baby' to his mother, but he was a pain in the neck to his wives," is the tip-off on how the campaign was handled.

Showmen everywhere are wisely following the Hal Horne idea of playing away from the historical and heavy drama slants of this picture by jazzing up the copy and lightening the entire tone of the production. Although the picture is judged good entertainment, nevertheless heavy copy might have the effect of keeping people away from the box office. Judged by the business the picture is doing in various spots, the comedy campaign evidently is doing the work.

Herman is showing his old time speed out there in Long Island, and now has in preparation a number of campaigns on his coming attractions, which will be detailed in these columns when received.

"H. B." Pops Popeye

Though he does not play the Disney cartoons, Manager B. H. Wallerstein, Palace Theatre, Lorain, Ohio, nevertheless took advantage of the cartoon popularity engendered by these shorts to plug a talkie cartoon on "Popeye the Sailor," which he reports caused quite a bit of talk and brought in some extra money.

Wallerstein plugged the showing prominently in his newspaper advertising and as this character is run in a local newspaper cartoon strip, the short received a nice publicity break in the same daily.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 200.—(A) Tell us what happens to a light ray passing from a medium of one density to a medium of another density at an angle, and if you can, why this happens. The latter will not be counted against you if you fail in it. (B) Tell us what various effects the increase of the angle at which a ray passes into a second medium of different density has. I'll help you a bit there by asking whether or no you would get as much light through into the second medium at a great as at a small angle of entrance. (C) When rays enter a second medium, as above, at what point or points does the refraction take place? (D) Quote the law upon which the action of lenses is based.

Answer to Question No. 193

Bluebook School Question No. 193 was: (A) What are the practical effects of a ground in the projector lamp circuit? (B) Name reasons why projector lamp circuit should be tested for ground every day. (C) What results if a slow-leakage ground continues for an indefinite space of time? (D) Under what condition would it be possible for a slow-leakage ground to continue indefinitely if not discovered by test? If one-tenth of an ampere should leak from a 60-volt line which is used eight hours daily, how much would the loss amount to in 30 days? (E) Tell us what danger results from an ungrounded projector mechanism charged with e.m.f.

The following made reasonably good answers (some of them doing very well indeed): J. Wentworth; S. Evans and C. Rau; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; T. Van Vaulkenburg; W. Ostrum; L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; B. Doe; H. Edwards; G. R. Kelley; H. H. Fenefee; P. Gaeth; C. Humphries; R. G. McGillis and T. Hollander; D. Johnson and A. Lomberg; B. Diglah and O. Garling; P. L. Davis and L. Tor; D. and H. Samuels; D. L. Stanhope; L. Granlo and G. Deckson; K. Dowling; B. R. Thompson and G. Thompson; H. D. Cylor and H. D. Davis; L. S. Marksley; D. Golding; F. Daniels and U. L. Banning; B. Eilers and D. Holler; D. E. Pratt and F. H. Banning; L. N. Daniels and M. R. Winning; T. L. Gainsley; H. B. Coates; R. L. Weed; P. L. Davis and P. Buckstone; J. L. Major, D. B. Bates and B. Tildon; D. and R. L. Grant; S. S. Dix; F. L. Coumbe; B. M. May, R. E. Baiss and A. E. Wyatt; K. L. Knight and L. V. Smolley; S. G. Goss and P. Lambert; J. M. McKinzie; A. Bailey; G. Lombard and J. Ahrenson; G. G. Creston; R. D. Majors; T. Turk; P. L. Janns; J. C. Lawby and P. N. Weigand; D. Adamson, L. Simmons and D. Larksley; E. Oliver and D. L. Bentley; D. Donohue and L. Peterson; F. D. Prindley; F. D. Samuels; G. M. Bradley.

We will listen to G. E. Doe on Section A. He says, "That would depend upon the ground. If it be a heavy one, a fuse might let go and the light would of course be lost. If the leakage be very light there might be no appreciable effect except some waste of power and some slight effect upon arc brilliancy. However, if the leakage be of considerable amount, then the waste of power would also be greater, and the effect upon the arc (in reduced brilliancy) also would be more pronounced, though it would show up in reduced crater area, not in diminished brilliancy per unit area of the crater. The brilliancy per square millimeter is the same, regardless of amperage.

"If the ground be to a part of the projector, then the projector would, of course, be charged with e.m.f., and if it be not thoroughly grounded there would be danger of fire and of electric shock to the projectionist.

"Arcing might or might not be present at point of contact—point of grounding. If the contact be metallic it probably would occur at least in some degree. I am assuming our editor and friend to mean the ground to offer an electrical path to opposite polarity. If the ground be only on one side, there would of course be no effect at all until one occurred on the opposite polarity."

This is my idea of a most excellent answer, since it shows a comprehensive grasp of the subject of grounds as a whole, and that is what constitutes a really excellent answer to questions. Many answers come which, while correct, still provide no explanatory details and one cannot but wonder just how much the one answering really knows about the subject.

(B) H. H. Menefee says, "The lamp circuit should be tested every day in order that grounds may be located as soon as possible and corrected immediately in order that its injurious effect upon the screen last no longer than is necessary; also that current waste be stopped as soon as possible." Evans and Rau add the thought that a ground may, if heavy enough, cause a fuse to blow, thus stopping the show.

That is, a test may disclose a light ground, which if left, may develop into a heavy one—heavy enough to blow a fuse. I mention this not to criticize, but to illustrate how essential it is to follow a line of reasoning through to the end. A ground heavy enough to blow a fuse would probably require no test. It would make itself evident almost immediately, but a light ground would not, and as said, might later become more serious.

(C) T. Van Vaulkenburg says, "(1) Waste of power, which might in the aggregate amount to considerable spread over a space of time. (2) Theoretically some injury to screen image, because of the lowered illumination, though it is doubtful if that would be much—in practice it probably would not be discernible. (3) Possibly a gradual burning at the point of contact, which might eventually work injury. (4) Grief by the sloppy projectionist who permitted it to exist, because he was too shiftless to make daily ground tests. In that last I am remembering that we are dealing with projection matters, hence the said ground may reasonably be presumed to be in projection equipment, though the question does not say so. If it were not, then only sections (1) and (3) would apply."

Well, Friend Van Vaulkenburg, that last section gave us a hearty giggle. My compliments. You are the only one of more than a thousand that included it.

(D) We will read what H. Edwards says: "If a projectionist neglects his daily routine of duty and makes no tests for grounds, then it is always possible a slow ground may develop which will not pass enough amperage to be noticeable either on the ammeter or anywhere else. This is especially possible through carbon dust, which may settle on the lamp insulation. As a matter of fact, it is even possible that several paths of such high resistance may be thus set up, that in the aggregate will permit insufficient current to flow to be detected, except by means of a competent ground test. This is not very likely to occur with the newer types of lamp, but it may happen just the same."

As to the second part of D, more than 700 answered correctly, in varying terms, about as follows: "The leakage would be 60 volts times one-tenth of an ampere, or six watts. A waste of six watts for eight hours would be 48 watt-hours and this for a period of 30 days would be 48×30, or 1,440 watt-hours of electric power.

(E) Evans and Rau answer correctly, as also do many others, as follows: "An ungrounded mechanism might at any time become charged with e.m.f., under which condition (if a metal reel filled with film touch both the projector and the metal of the projection room frame, as may happen in many rooms) a spark would result, and possibly a heavy one if the room metal be grounded. This could, and in some cases has set fire to film. Under such a condition, also, it is possible for the projectionist to receive a most unpleasant shock."

That last is correct, as I can bear witness. In days of old many projection rooms were fireproofed by lining them, even to the wooden floors, with sheet iron. Often projector lamphouses and mechanisms became heavily charged, but were thoroughly insulated from the floor by the wooden tables all projectors then had.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 113, No. 10 December 2, 1933

THE GREAT TRACY AFFAIR

THE outraged excitement of the Mexican press over the whimsicalities of Mr. Lee Tracy, who seems to have stood on a hotel balcony and made faces at some marching cadets, is of a piece with the extravagance of emotion which tends to make so many Latin lands into operetta material. The best bull fighter south of the Rio Grande has our permission to come up and make faces at the West Point Academy, with a guaranty that he can go back home to his job and that the American Publishers Association will not throw a fit.

NO APPLES

MR. RED KANN, editor of Motion Picture Daily, is out making a first-hand survey of a number of key cities, beginning with Milwaukee, and what a pretty kettle of fish his dispatches reveal the exhibition field there to be! He finds the Wisconsin and the Palace, two downtown first-runs, each tossing twelve acts of vaudeville in with the feature, just as an example of what goes on in cut-throat competition in an overseated town. As we have so often and so painfully observed before, no manner of merchandising, either in the theatre business or elsewhere, can redeem follies committed in terms of real estate. The only real and basic cashable asset of the motion picture industry is the capacity of the potential audience to buy and absorb entertainment. The problem is as simple as four little boys and two apples. Somebody doesn't get any apple.

A FRIEND HAS GONE

THE passing of Mr. Frank Wilstach takes from the show world one of its most erudite and interesting figures. While his functions in his later years as a member of the staff of Mr. Will Hays brought to bear little of Mr. Wilstach's extensive knowledge of the theatre, he continued his interest and was directly and by influence a large contributor to the valuable collections of the New York Public Library. He had a strongly developed historic sense and a fine taste in the colors of life. His works were in truth considerably larger than his fame, and much of his work will live long after him. He combined in rare balance great vigor of opinion with reserve in expression. His years of intensive experience gave him poise, not ennui.

He treasured the printed word and page with a most unbookish flair for material fresh from its sources and untainted of literary cultisms. He had an eye for the real and a recognition of qualities that needed no guidance of trademarks or traditions. He was widely acquainted in the world of Broadway and "the road," but few who met him as the showman knew the all of Wilstach. He communicated only where response invited. The flame of his interior enthusiasms never waned. We shall always like to remember him best sitting glass in hand one autumn afternoon in a Connecticut garden in an animated and merry conflict with Mr. Ben DeCasseres on a triangular subject involving Dean Swift, Rabelais and the contemporary screen. He could lose an argument with as sincere a laugh as if he had won.

GERMANY SEES "CAVALCADE"

BOTH the trade and lay press of Germany is giving "Cavalcade," the Sheehan-Fox epic, amazing acclaim, amazingly enthusiastic especially when one considers that the production is as British in spirit as Kipling's "Recessional," that it is laid in wartime England and made in Hollywood. It is curious, too, that the German appreciation appears to go rather beyond that of the press of either Britain or the United States. At any rate here is evidence enough that some reasonable proportion of the motion picture output can be made and continued as truly international merchandise.

"MINORS, MAIDS AND MORONS"

WE have been patiently waiting these several years for the uplifters and improvers to find something besides the motion picture to uplift. And now comes Mrs. Elmer J. Ottaway of Port Huron, Michigan, speaking before the National Council of Women in New York, asking that the five million members do something about radio programs. "We do not like crooning, sentimental slush, vulgar songs or wheedling males who say they will meet us again next week to take care of our souls and livers," Mrs. Ottaway observed. She asks members to write sponsors in behalf of "artistic" and "instructive" material to offset fan mail from "minors, maids and morons." We support the movement on the ground that we would be glad to have the radio do all the uplifting. However, nothing will happen.

NOW and then one comes across the perfect phrase packed with pith and humor. Just now in the Du Pont Magazine, one of the world's best house organs, in an article on blasting Mr. Arthur LaMotte remarks upon "the law of the inherent cussedness of inanimate matter." The law, we observe in annoyance, extends beyond mere matter, too. The conspiring cussedness which rules over typographical errors determines that they never occur in an unimportant article or an inconspicuous paragraph.

UNITED FRONT

Sharply pleading for a united front, solid ranks, leading Ohio independent exhibitors are thrusting requests at fellow Ohio independent showmen that they "come through," to enable them to beat off future incursions of the tax evil. From J. Real Neth, large operator, comes: ". . . The present plight . . . is due to the lack of cooperative effort and financial assistance from theatre owners. . . ." Max Stearn invites exhibitors to a Columbus dinner December 4, looking to means to eliminate taxes which may make "our entire investment worthless," while Sam E. Lind requests full attendance at the Ohio MPTO convention December 5, asking exhibitors "defer outside action until after this meeting." Revenue-seeking legislators require powerful check reins. . . .

RUSSIAN THOUGHT

In common with the train of Russian Soviet thought today is the interest of Maxim Maximovitch Litvinov directed along mechanical lines. To New York's Radio City the good-natured diplomat last week paid a visit. Of little interest to him was the film on the Music Hall's screen, the presentation on its stage—but in the stage and its operation he was most deeply fascinated. Revolving stage, complicated lighting mechanism held his rapt, intelligent attention. In NBC's huge, new studio, he cared little for scores of renowned artists, devoted minute concentration to the equipment. Shrewd, able diplomat, he yet shares with his countrymen avid curiosity of the sciences, mechanics, their achievements, potentialities. . . .

THE BARD CINEMATIZED

Death swooped sharply in Paris last week, took a man—and an idea coming close to fruition. Great was the French reputation as a liberal producer built by Firmin Gemier in his 40 years in the theatre, concluding, in 1930, eight years as director of the government-subsidized Odeon theatre. Then, while managing the Trocadero theatre, M. Gemier turned to the motion picture, in particular envisioning the cinema as a new medium for Shakespeare. As death descended in his sixty-ninth year, M. Gemier was seriously engaged on a film scenario for "The Merchant of Venice." The seed sown, Shakespeare may yet be readily screened. . . .

STAGE—THEN SCREEN

Novel would seem the idea supposedly mentally disturbing Darryl Zanuck, whose 20th Century Pictures plans early production of "The House of Rothschild," with George Arliss, for United Artists. One step further in rehearsal would Zanuck go than the brilliant Mr. Arliss. To insure against mishaps, slipped lines before the cameras, it is the Arliss custom to rehearse fully three weeks before "shooting," with complete dialogue, action memorized in advance of camera work. Zanuck's step further: rehearsals, then a tryout production of the piece at a local theatre, before an audience, using revolving stages to present all the film's scenes in full. Unstated is the chief purpose to be achieved, but obvious is the advantage of complete rehearsal before expensive cameras, film go into action. . . .

HAPPY HUNTING GROUND

To Russia should abused, garret-living playwrights go, there to find their happy hunting ground, believes Lewis Milestone, last week returned from his native Russia, seeking background for "Red Square," to be done for Columbia. "Every grade of entertainment is encouraged. . . . It is amazing to observe the physical beauty of the theatres, the gorgeousness of production, costuming, as contrasted with the drab attire of the audiences." "Big surprises" in the land of the great experiment greeted Director Milestone. Also, the writer "enjoys greater rewards than elsewhere." However, in Russia, creative expression is within limitations. . . .

BITING THE HAND

Strange, almost inexplicable were the sentiments last week versed by prolific, successful playwright Elmer Rice, whose "Street Scene," "Counsellor at Law" reached stage heights, were successfully cinematized, before the Men's Club of Temple Beth Zion in Buffalo. Hammered Playwright Rice: "Why should Americans pay theatre prices for superficial, inane plays when they can see about the same thing for a fraction of the price by going to the movies? When you go to the movies it's not so hard to get up and leave before the play is finished as it is when you've paid $2.50 for a theatre seat." Almost it seems the dog biting the hand which feeds it. . . .

ANTARCTIC CINEMA

Into the chill super-southland where is pushing the flagship of the Byrd Antarctic expedition last week came considerable warmth, as, opening the Antarctic social season, 80 voyagers grouped aboard, formed the audience at a screening of Paramount's—and Mae West's—"I'm No Angel." From John L. Herrmann, Paramount cameraman aboard, came radioed word: "We expect this to be the greatest movie season the Antarctic has ever had and the first time sound movies have made their appearance in Little America." The winter season has many a long month to run. . . .

MOTHER'S INSISTENCE

Important to England is allegiance on the part of the geographical children to the mother country. Hence, lest they forget, Canada's Ontario government has firmly warned exhibitors to cease deletion of British shots from newsreels. At least 50 per cent of the reel must keep Canadians closely in touch with the Isles, the government insists. Shortening reels, combining issues have been the causes of deletions. Not overlooked by the Colonial Office is the screen's power to aid in pointing the thoughts of Canadians across the sea to the homeland. . . .

NATURAL CONQUEST

Into the wilds of northern Alaska shortly will go screen star John Barrymore, explorer-producer Ernest B. Schoedsack, there to film the renowned, ferocious kodiak bear, species of grizzly. Never before, except with telescopic lens at long, safe distance, has the giant kodiak had his picture taken, so they say. "Like a mad gorilla" when reared for the attack, is actor Barrymore's description of the beast sometimes called the most savage of all wild animals. The planned film thus will add again to the screen's natural conquests. . . .

ROOSEVELT, SIGNING CODE, SUSPENDS DECISION ON EXCESSIVE SALARIES

The motion picture industry has a code, at last.

President Roosevelt, seated last Monday morning at his desk in the "little White House" on his estate at the vacation resort of Warm Springs, Ga., promulgated the industrial code for motion pictures; appointed a code authority under which it will be regulated, and then issued an impressive looking and lengthy "approval order" enunciating policies under which the motion picture business is to operate.

The executive order and the code itself, printed together by the NRA, are the code. The law becomes effective on midnight of Thursday, December 7. The document is virtually the same as the socalled "third revision," completed some weeks ago.

General Hugh S. Johnson, National Recovery Administrator, finally delivered the code to the motion picture industry Wednesday afternoon, a job which evidently was plagued with more grief and more governmental procrastination than that which he, then an Illinois soldier, lawyer and manufacturer, experienced back in 1917, when he appeared at the door of the White House with a plan to draft several million American citizens for military service in the American Expeditionary Force abroad.

Affixing of the Presidential signature on Monday, November 27, automatically sets January 10 as the date when all exhibitors and distributors must formally sign the document, otherwise they will be barred under the grievance board clauses, from filing any complaints, under any article of the code, against other exhibitors or distributors. However, non-signers may have complaints filed against them, and duly acted upon, by those who have legally become parties to the code. At press time, United Artists was one of the few important motion picture companies which had not yet signed the NRA document.

Mr. Roosevelt announced the following appointments to the socalled "code authority," which, as provided in the Congressional Act of last May, will see to it that members of the industry comply with code provisions:

MERLIN HALL AYLESWORTH, president, Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and of National Broadcasting Corporation.

EDDIE CANTOR, comedian for Joseph M. Schenck and Samuel Goldwyn.

MARIE DRESSLER, star, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures.

ROBERT H. COCHRANE, executive vice-president, Universal Pictures Corporation.

W. RAY JOHNSTON, president, Monogram Pictures.

SIDNEY R. KENT, president, Fox Film Corporation.

ED KUYKENDALL, president, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

A. LAWRENCE LOWELL, president emeritus of Harvard University.

GEORGE J. SCHAEFER, vice-president, Paramount-Publix Corporation.

NICHOLAS M. SCHENCK, president, Loew's, Inc., and of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

HARRY M. WARNER, president, Warner-First National Pictures.

NATHAN YAMINS, president, Independent Theatre Owners of New England (Allied).

It had been generally understood in motion picture circles in New York that the film code authority would constitute ten, and not thirteen, representatives of the various motion picture interests. The appointments of all but Miss Dressler, Dr. Lowell and Eddie Cantor had been expected.

The board's setup gives the creative talent of Hollywood two representatives in the persons of Miss Dressler and Mr. Cantor. Producer-distributor-exhibitor corporations have five voices: Messrs. Aylesworth, Kent, Schaefer, Schenck and Warner. Unaffiliated producer-distributors have two members: Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Johnston, with Mr. Johnston acting, in addition, as a representative of independent distributors.

Each of the three important divisions in exhibition are represented, Mr. Yamins, for Allied; Mr. Kuykendall for the MPTOA, and Mr. O'Reilly speaking for the hundreds of exhibitors who do not belong either to Allied or to the MPTOA.

Regarding the appointment of Dr. Abbott Lawrence Lowell, General Johnson said: "In order to observe the operations of the engagement of the industry itself to comply with its own rules of censorship of improper pictures and dialogue, the President will ask Dr. Lowell, former president of Harvard University, to serve on the code authority."

Mr. Cantor and Miss Dressler were added to the code authority under the powers reserved to the President in the code. They will serve only when matters pertaining to the problems of the actors, and other Hollywood talent, come up.

The President, up to press time, had not made known the identity of the direct representative of the Administration on the code authority, that is the executive representative. Dr. Lowell is a government contact on the board.

It was announced that the Administration reserves the right to disapprove any action by the industry code authority, and to remove or replace any member at the Administration's will.

There will continue to be a deputy administrator for the industry, whose duty shall be to see that the code authority is so organized in its actions that it may promptly and efficiently administer the tenets of the law, and to invoke the powers of the Administration if and when the code authority shall fail, or be unable to administer the document, or in case the board authority abuses its authority.

It was still a matter of speculation at press time whether Sol A. Rosenblatt, present NRA film code deputy, would continue in that post.

Mr. Roosevelt and the NRA, under General Johnson, intend that under no circumstances will the government relinquish its control over codified industries, also that the government retain the power at all times to act where code authorities do not properly perform their functions.

General Johnson indicated that it is planned to have the government directly keep an eye on the industry until such time as the industry is prepared to shoulder the responsibility itself, that is, when the code authority is fully organized. He declared that it is fundamental that ultimate responsibility for efficient code administration, including the requirement of compliance, shall be undertaken by the industry.

Meanwhile, it was learned at Washington over the weekend, that General Johnson has named Colonel Robert W. Lea as chairman of a new code authority committee, a new branch of the NRA which will assist and advise deputy administrators and code authorities on code compliance.

This committee will establish its own contacts with labor, justice and commerce departments of the government and with the Federal Trade Commission, for the sole purpose of furthering compliance with the various codes.

Other members of this new committee are: Dr. Leo Wolman, chairman of the Labor Advisory Board of the NRA; Louis Kirstein, chairman of the Industrial Advisory Committee; Dr. Wilson Compton,

The Eagle's Egg

by TERRY RAMSAYE

¶ A sunny day in August last, the motion picture industry met, in conclave, in New York, a bit depression-weary but filled with hopes.

¶ The industry heard that day in August from a brilliant young lawyer, Mr. Sol Ariah Rosenblatt, the invitation to participate in the forming of a code of practice for the screen, a code that was to be a part of a broad, ambitious plan for a brighter day in execution of the program of the National Recovery Administration.

¶ This week the code arrived.

It arrived in a rather circuitous manner.

¶ Mr. Rosenblatt's hearings were many and several, and there were injections from the White House. The White House seemed curiously concerned about actors' salaries. Then, by a curious circumstance, it seems that considerable social interest was discovered by the President with such persons as Mr. Eddie Cantor and Mr. Joseph M. Schenck.

¶ Meanwhile, a number of persons sought audiences with the President. Among them seems to have been the Rev. William Henry Short, of the Motion Picture Research Council, financed by the Payne Foundation, who appears not to have been given an audience, but he was followed, with much more definite effect, by Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, president-emeritus of Harvard University. Of course, the President, who is an old Harvard "grad," would have been expected to see Dr. Lowell.

¶ Then, down at Warm Springs, came to call, we have been advised, most officially, purely for social reasons, Mr. Eddie Cantor and Mr. Joseph M. Schenck. Before that, of course, there had been a visit to the White House by Miss Marie Dressler, a charming and grand old trouper. From this emergency document, which is presumed to control the operations of this very considerable industry, there seems to have been a certain sort of publicity awareness in the appointments involved and no very considerable understanding of the very large industrial structure underlying the publicity floration.

¶ The code has come to us by a somewhat circuitous route. It seems that it was delivered by Mr. Sol Ariah Rosenblatt to General Hugh S. Johnson, in Washington, and went thence to Warm Springs, and from there to Atlanta, for reasons which are obscure, and arrived presently in Washington with General Johnson. Since it had been under way since August 8th, and since obviously its many provisions had so intimate a bearing upon the conduct of the motion picture business, it would appear that the process was not unnecessarily expedited.

¶ The appointment of Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, a conservative, whose attitudes have already been adequately recorded for the public, may well be of considerable business to the motion picture industry, and the matter is more the proper sort of concern to the motion picture industry when it is considered that Dr. Lowell's

GOLD BUYING POLICY BRINGS U. S. DISTRIBUTORS BIG NET IN BRITAIN

Increases of $250,000 to a Million Over Corresponding Half Year in 1932 Are Cited, 67½ Per Cent Gain

For the first time in over two years American motion picture distributors in Great Britain are gleaning a sizeable profit in film rentals from the theatres of the United Kingdom, due to appreciation of the pound sterling under the glod buying policy at Washington. Some companies, it was authoritatively stated in New York this week, have noted money increases from this source the past six months ranging from $250,000 to $1,000,000 in advance of a corresponding period of 1932.

Two years ago the pound sterling was fluctuating between $3 and $3.50. On Tuesday, as this was written, the pound was quoted at $5.16. Thus, in spite of heavy duty taxes on American films in Great Britain, which, incidentally, were not reduced when American business was suffering from a deflated pound, American companies now are making a noticeably larger profit.

Two years ago, in instances where a film's rental brought four pounds sterling, the American distributor received, on the basis of $3.50 a pound, only $16. Today, at $5.16, he gets $20.64 for the same number of pounds.

Nevertheless, enjoyment of the change for the better from this source can be only a temporary change, it was pointed out by the heads of foreign departments of American distributors in New York. The pound ultimately must go back to par, the currencies of the world will be stabilized and, as one foreign manager said, "then, and only then, will we really know where we are."

Constant apprehension among American companies who do business in England that the pound may take a sudden drop is having the effect of a handicap on their activities insofar as the making of plans is concerned. There is no set scale by which they are able to measure financial reactions from day to day, and for this reason alone they are forced into a position which enables them only to sit back and enjoy the fruits of a success which has been thrust into their laps by the vagaries of exchange under a Washington experiment.

Remittances from London, in many cases, are forwarded to New York at the end of each week. The fluctuating course of the dollar makes it impossible to figure exactly what the increase in the value of the British pound will be at the close of business each day, but additional income for all companies is generally anticipated to be heavy for the next few weeks.

One company this week reported that in the past 12 weeks its revenue from Great Britain had increased 67½ per cent over what it was for the same period a year ago.

Typical was the Columbia Pictures Corporation statement of net profits for the quarter ended Sept. 30, 1933, of $241,778, which, after all charges, preferred dividends and provision for Federal income tax, is equal to approximately $1.36 a share of common stock outstanding.

An analysis shows an increase of sales and a substantial increase in returns from the foreign field, because of the greater value of foreign currencies in terms of the dollar.

Without exception foreign managers refused to be quoted in any connection with relation to the inflated British pound and the current effect upon their company business. It was stated by more than one of these executives that any published figures on the situation might result in serious repercussions on the part of the British government, in all probability to take the form of increased taxation, which, as one executive said, "is far too high already."

"On the books the whole thing looks great," said one executive, "but so much money is spent over there, and charged to 'expenses,' that we are not reaping any gold mine. We are making a 'handsome' profit, however. The exchange is working for us now, and we are getting more money out of England than at any time during the past three years. On the other hand, we've got to go a long way before we can make up for the losses which we have suffered in the past because of adverse exchange values. We cannot take any credit for the present condition; it's just luck—one of the breaks of the game. How long it will last, no one is qualified to say, but it certainly cannot last forever."

Said another executive: "This increase in financial returns from England has, of course, been tremendous. Some companies' revenues from British distribution have increased anywhere from $250,000 to $1,000,000 during the past six months. This condition will not last; it is purely a bubble, but while it does continue, it is grand. However, the sooner we get back to a par basis, instead of the present abnormalcy, the better off we'll all be. With things as they are now, it's impossible to judge from one minute to the next just what is going to happen, and it's out of the question to make future plans which involve the conduct of business in pounds, shillings and pence."

A third foreign manager shrugged his shoulders and said, "I couldn't tell you any more about it than anyone else. All I know is that for the time being we're making a decent amount of money for the first time in over two years."

Another executive expressed the opinion that this was hardly the sort of thing to discuss for publication "in view of the fact that the British are just waiting for an excuse to slap higher taxes on film imports.

"That's what happened when someone 'talked out of turn' regarding the Spanish situation some time ago," he said. "We were doing quite nicely in Spain until they suddenly slapped a tax of 7½ cents on every American dollar taken out of that country."

British Imports Rise

Although the American companies receive approximately 50 per cent of their foreign revenue from England and its possessions, the same monetary situation holds true, but to a lesser degree, in returns from French rentals. While the net profit from the French market is less, the relation of the franc to the dollar is proportionately greater.

According to reports received this week from the motion picture division of the Department of Commerce in Washington, there was a substantial increase in the quantity of British imports of blank film during the first nine months of 1933, compared with the same period of 1932, and an increase in positive film imports. A decline of over 644,000 linear feet, or upwards of 18 per cent, was registered for negative film, which, it is pointed out, has shown a steady decrease in the period under review since the year 1931.

With re-exports of negative film totaling 934,475 linear feet, the net imports thereof in 1933 reached 1,898,700 linear feet, as against 2,163,000 linear feet last year; similarly, re-exports of 1,267,267 linear feet of positive film left a balance of 11,163,700 linear feet for domestic consumption, contrasted with 10,142,500 in 1932, while retained blank film totaled 30,000,000 linear feet compared with nearly 24,000,000 linear feet last year.

Increased popularity of British motion pictures in Canada is revealed in a report from Consul Damon C. Woods, Toronto, and made public last week by the Department of Commerce at Washington.

British features shown in the Dominion during the current year, the report shows, will approximate 70, a 100 per cent increase over 1932 when British films totaled only 35. American feature pictures shown in Canada in 1933 will reach a total of about 400 as against 450 in 1932.

TOWN'S TAX HITS LONE EXHIBITOR

Peculiarly restrictive is the admission tax measure recently passed by the city commission of Talladega, Ala. The levy of 5 cents on each adult admission, which amounts to 20 per cent of the gross receipts based on a 25-cent scale, falls heavily—and falls in only one spot. J. A. Luker & Sons, owners and operators of the Fox and Paramount theatres in Talladega, are the only theatre operators in Talladega. One company, thereby, contributes in separate and individual fashion to the maintenance of the municipality, and suffers accordingly.

MARK DINTENFASS, FILM PIONEER, PASSES AT 55

Colorful Figure in Early Days, Spent 30 Years in Business; Started with Small Theatre, Formed Champion Film in '09

Mark Dintenfass, one of the most colorful of the motion picture's pioneers—his career dating back some 30 years—died on the 24th day of November at his home in Grantwood, New Jersey.

Like most of the pioneers of the motion picture, Mark Dintenfass was a creature of propinquity.

Mark's father was in the fisheries business, and for a number of years the youngster went up and down the ports of the north seas buying and selling fish. On one of these occasions he fell in with a rather flamboyant young Dutchman—one Hans von Briesen by name, an exceedingly clever lawyer and a great international authority on patent rights. Hans and Mark did rather well for themselves in Edinburgh, Scotland.

Then the Patent Wars

Ten years went by.

The great and complex patent wars of the motion picture ensued. Mark Dintenfass sought refuge in the Lubin Studios in Philadelphia, where he produced motion pictures, both for the Patents Company and its infringers.

There was the remark Mr. Dintenfass made one day, walking up Broadway, a long, long time before the present motion picture era was evolved. He was telling his fellow-stroller of a conversation with his mother. "Mamma! Sometimes she thinks I should need the old optical shop."

This was at the time when Mr. Lubin was said to be worth about $11,000,000.

Mark Dintenfass entered the world of motion pictures prior to 1906—as a matter of fact, it was somewhere around 1903—with the purchase of the Fairyland Theatre, on Market Street, in Philadelphia. In January, 1908, he passed the test of the Philadelphia department of safety as a licensed projectionist—an accomplishment of which he boasted for the remainder of his career.

In 1908 he came to New York and became interested in the Cameraphone Company, but due to the existing Patents Company's action, the life of Cameraphone was short-lived.

Formed Champion Films

In 1909 Mark Dintenfass formed the Champion Film Company, with studios in Fort Lee, N. J., now the scene of great activity on the part of eastern producers. There he produced successfully for a number of years, after which other independent companies sprang up and joined with him in the organization of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

It was about this time that Carl Laemmle began to figure prominently in the affairs of the motion picture.

The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co. was the forerunner of what is now Universal. Shortly after its organization by Mark Dintenfass, Universal Film Manufacturing Company came into existence, and after that, Universal Exchange, Inc., of which Mr. Dintenfass was managing director, secretary and treasurer until 1916.

In 1918 he produced "My Four Years in Germany," from the book by former Ambassador James W. Gerard. This picture is said to have enjoyed a tremendous financial success.

In 1919 Mark Dintenfass ran for the Governorship of New Jersey on the "Single Tax" ticket. He was defeated.

After this he returned to production, producing a series of comedies starring Jobyna Ralston, for release through the then newly formed United Picture Theatres of America.

Turned to Real Estate

Following his organization of National Film Laboratories, which in 1924 was merged with the Evans Laboratories into the National-Evans Laboratories, with a large plant in Fort Lee, Mr. Dintenfass remained in the film industry in a more or less obscure position. He began to bend his efforts to New Jersey real estate.

Meanwhile, the National-Evans plant had been destroyed by fire Feb. 7, 1925, and in the same year the company was merged with the Claremont Laboratories in New York City.

Mr. Dintenfass' illness started about three years ago, and during that time he underwent more than 30 operations.

Born in Austria, only 55 years ago, he had lived in this country since his childhood.

At the time of his death he was a director in the Underwriters' Trust Co., New York. His home was in Grantwood for many years.

Funeral services were held November 26, at Riverside Memorial Chapel, in New York City.

concern is with relations between the motion picture and its interior organizations of censorship.

¶ This, on its own, would not be so particularly important if it were not that Dr. Lowell was so intimately linked with the Motion Picture Research Council, fathered by the Rev. William Henry Short, and financed by the Payne Foundation, and who is engaged in an entirely extraneous endeavor to uplift the screen. The story of the Payne Foundation's campaign, and its publication of a book by Mr. Henry James Forman, has already been adequately set forth in the pages of Motion Picture Herald. It has been made clear enough that Dr. Short's endeavor is addressed to the campaign of making a career for Dr. Short.

¶ That Harvard should in such a manner again be brought into the scene might, by some persons, be considered another victory for Yale.

¶ It is to be recalled that some years ago Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell affixed his signature to a contract for the making of a series of motion pictures calculated to demonstrate the great pedagogic value of the screen. Under the supervision of that contract, a cowboy management delivered the production authority to the supervision of a Virginia finishing school graduate. That substantially is the story of Harvard on the screen. The product very properly disappeared.

¶ Meanwhile, we are informed that Dr. Lowell has seen some five or six pictures in two years.

¶ Further, in communication with representatives of this office, he has said that he never talks to the press.

¶ The gestures of the President with reference to the motion picture may be considered by some to be high, wide and handsome. But, apparently, we of the motion picture industry are to be made guinea pigs in the Grand Experiment, and because everything that pertains to the motion picture is page-one copy, what we shall do, and what shall be done to us, will be done in the gold-fish bowl.

Petrillo Faces Competition

James C. Petrillo, head of the Chicago musicians' union, has been renominated president, but for the first time in years has competition, with Angelo Cavallo and Nunzio de Pasquale as opposing candidates with the election next Tuesday. Police from the state's attorney's office were on hand at the nominations.

Dowling Title Changes

The Arthur Hopkins-Eddie Dowling production based on Arnold Bennett's stage play, "The Great Adventure," from Bennett's novel, "Buried Treasure," will reach the screen under the title, "His Double Life." It will be released by Paramount shortly after the first of the year.

WILLIAM FOX STAGES OWN DRAMA BEFORE SENATE BANKING INQUIRY

William Fox told his familiar story to a senatorial investigating committee in Washington last week. In this story Mr. Fox is presented in heroic proportions. Single handedly, it would appear, against a world crowded with greed, avarice and stupidity the late film company executive waged a valiant but unsuccessful battle receiving nothing in the way of reward—except, if this may be mentioned, something in excess of fifteen millions in cash. There are some who hold that the victors fared not nearly so well as the vanquished.

The retirement of Mr. Fox from his former position of dominance over the Fox Film Corporation and the Fox Theatres corporation which took place in the early Spring of 1930 constituted one of the most sensational developments in the history of the industry. Through the earlier period of intense financial and commercial expansion the Fox interests under the direction of Mr. Fox had broadened out over a vast front. Mr. Fox's expressed policy was to dominate the fields of exhibition, distribution and production both in America and at various important points abroad. Mr. Fox's amusement business empire was financed largely on short term borrowings, evidently on his assumption that large sums of money would immediately be available to him in the future as they had been in the near past.

The position of all borrowers, including that of Mr. Fox, commenced to undergo a change following the stock market collapse in the Fall of 1929. Immediately after this turning-point in the history of American business Mr. Fox and his interests commenced to encounter difficulties. The condition became acute before the end of the year. Through huge over-expansion, the acquisition of vast properties at inflated prices and short-term financing the Fox interests obviously were on thin ice. Financial interests were commencing to sober up from their wild excesses of the past few years. Bankers and other lenders were beginning to look askance at the one-man rule or ruin policy which Mr. Fox exemplified. They shied off from Mr. Fox's petitions for new loans and renewal of old loans. It is upon this belated sobering up of the bankers in the case of Mr. Fox which he largely bases his assertion of a conspiracy to wrest control of his companies from him. Mr. Fox was in the position of a pugilist out on his feet. There was no need of knocking him down. That result would have been accomplished by merely standing aside and letting him fall.

But Mr. Fox was not let fall; at least, not until the shock was cushioned by the payment of something in excess of fifteen million dollars.

Viewed from this distance it appears Mr. Fox's fall was inevitable. Coming at the time it did and under the attendant circumstances Mr. Fox might well sing the praises of those who bailed him out. The unstable structure which Mr. Fox reared, financed on visions of world-wide dominance, never could have withstood the ensuing period of the depression. A very comfortable tide of good fortune bore him out of the business.

Mr. Fox has not proved and will not be able to prove that any conspiracy to "capture" his companies existed. The truth of the matter is plain and simple. The Fox interests had to have financial help. Mr. Fox could not get the needed help on his own terms, which terms consisted largely of running things entirely to suit himself, an attitude which construed as treasonable any inclination to differ with him or question his judgment and an all-inclusive suspicion of the motives of everyone with whom he came in contact.

If under these circumstances conspiracy consists of refusing to make new or renewal loans then it would appear that Mr. Fox is entitled to make the most of it.

Mr. Fox has been anxiously awaiting his day in court. Apprehensive that such a day would be too long deferred he engaged Upton Sinclair early this year to write a book which was published under the title "Upton Sinclair Presents William Fox." The book and the testimony at Washington reflect a once dominant figure, now slipping into obscurity. They indicate also a conspiracy and persecution complex which appear to be a merciless deterrent to proper enjoyment of the fortune which Mr. Fox has taken with himself into retirement.

—MARTIN QUIGLEY

PECORA "PRESENTS" WILLIAM FOX

Ferdinand Pecora, fiery little Italian counsel for the Senate banking committee, presented this week to these United States Mr. Upton Sinclair's complete and unexpurgated version of socalled "conspiracy hallucinations" of William Fox. This time Mr. Fox appeared in person.

To the senatorial committee listening to Mr. Fox at Washington it was just another page in the record of its investigations into Wall Street's multitudinous and mountainous manipulations in the nation's business.

To the city editors of the country's daily newspapers it was "good copy" for the front pages. Many of the journalists compared the drama and theatrical touches which Mr. Fox injected into his testimony with the technique and staging of some of the old melodramas which came in tin cans out of the Fox studios years ago.

For William Fox it was an opportunity which he had been eagerly awaiting these several years, ever since he was—as he put it to the senators—"forcibly ejected" from control of the Fox motion picture and theatre companies, after he had burdened them, admittedly, with $93,000,000 in short-term obligations and dangerously unsafe marginal stock manipulations, in an attempt to fulfill his Napoleonic ambitions to rule the motion picture world. And, only when he was reminded by an inquisitive senator did the former film magnate mention the incidental fact that he accepted from the "conspirators" $15,000,000 in cash, plus "other considerations" totaling $6,000,000, for his interests.

Mr. Fox, under oath, mentioned in his charges literally everything from "fixed" Department of Justice records to a "threat" by a banker that he would cut out Fox's kidneys.

Mr. Fox, self-appointed star of the senatorial drama—and he appeared to relish the spotlight—engaged the ex-President of the United States as his support in the play which he staged last Thursday and Friday for the Senate sub-committee and a packed gallery, while he introduced variously as characters dozens of Wall Street bankers and brokers, politicians and lawyers and business giants of this and other industries.

Bright and early last Thursday morning he arrived at the committee's chamber of interrogation. He gave the senators one of their most stirring days, and before he had been on the stand a few hours, news wires at Washington were dispatching to the country sensational page-one headlines. Typical were these:

Fox Tells of Appeals to Hoover for Help; U.S. Document Altered to Aid Bank Plot—Fox; Says He Sold Theatre Chain Under Duress by Conspiracy of Bankers and Faced Anti-Trust Prosecution; Tells Senate Committee Mayer Told Him He Had Justice Dept. Record Changed; G. O. P. Men Got Fox Cash.

Mr. Fox said he appealed directly to President Hoover for "protection" against "the conspirators."

TRIES TO INTRODUCE SINCLAIR BOOK

Among the assertions made by Mr. Fox on Thursday, the first day of his testifying, were these:

That Louis B. Mayer, vice-president of Loew's and Metro, and then vice-chairman of the California State Republican Central Committee, told him that he had had the Department of Justice records changed to block Mr. Fox's plans to absorb Loew's, Inc.;

That he had offered Mr. Mayer and his associates $2,000,000 to withdraw their opposition and that Mr. Mayer had said it would be harder to get the Department of Justice records changed back again;

That Claudius Huston, then chairman of the Republican National Committee, and the late James Francis Burke, then the committee's general counsel, had suggested that he see Mr. Mayer;

That he had retained Mr. Burke as an attorney in the matter and that subsequently he had lent money to Mr. Huston;

That he had been forced to "surrender" control of Fox Film and Fox Theatres by a group including Harley L. Clarke, Chase National Bank, John Otterson, Halsey, Stuart and Company, and others;

That Mr. Clarke had tried to get Mr. Fox to "maneuver" a $73,000,000 "illegal" conversion of assets by "pocketing" $33,000,000, and, in return, selling to the banking group stocks that belonged not to Mr. Fox, but to the companies which he controlled;

That a number of New York banks had "grabbed his deposits" in 1929 and demanded payment of loans about to become due, and he then had told the whole story to Charles Evans Hughes, practising law in New York, in an effort to enlist legal aid against being "wiped out" by the banking "conspiracy."

Fox Tries to Introduce His Book

When Mr. Fox took the stand, Counsel Pecora asked him to summarize the facts leading up to the alleged conspiracy of the bankers. Promptly, Mr. Fox handed Mr. Pecora a copy of his book, "Upton Sinclair Presents William Fox," which he suggested be incorporated in the record. The counsel refused to accept it, and Fox commented that "it would take ten books to narrate this conspiracy."

Mr. Pecora told Mr. Fox to proceed with his testimony from memory, after Fox had stated he had come without papers covering the situation because he didn't know he was to be examined about it. He told the story from memory, however, several columns of it.

"I fully realize," Mr. Fox exclaimed, "that I am never going to be able to borrow a dollar again from any bank in America. I know that I am ostracized from banking society. I know that I am going to be shunned."

"Well, if you have the $21,000,000, you do not care, do you?" asked Senator Fletcher, chairman of the committee.

"I do not know how much of that I have left," Mr. Fox retorted. "I have got something left. And I have the memory of this whole transaction, and the right to tell it.

"After I have completed this story, I feel that my life's work is done. If I were to die tomorrow, I would feel that my job on earth is completed, provided I have finished my testimony before you."

It was at the outset that Mr. Fox launched into charges of "conspiracy" alleged on the part of "Halsey, Stuart; Mr. Albert Wiggin, of the Chase Bank; John Otterson, of the American Telephone and Telegraph; Mr. Harley Clarke and twelve or thirteen bankers to whom Fox Film was indebted." He said that the only alternative to selling out was receivership.

He testified that he was prepared to "pay up" to the banks, "but those to whom we owed the money would not take it." However, the money was to be tendered when new financing was accomplished, he added.

Mr. Fox said the indebtedness to the various banks was $7,000,000, owed by Fox Film.

Pecora Warns Fox of Oath

At this point, Counsel Pecora warned Mr. Fox to bear in mind that whatever statements he made were under oath, and then Mr. Fox plunged into a general account of the "facts which led up to the formation" of the socalled "conspiracy and the consummation of its purposes."

After having heard that the family shares of the late Marcus Loew, in Loew's, were for sale for $50,000,000, late in 1928, Mr. Fox testified, he visited Assistant Attorney General Donovan to find out if the Government would permit the acquisition of the 400,000 shares available by the Fox company.

Subsequently, Mr. Fox said, he was told that it was "all right" to consummate the deal. Pursuant to that, he testified, Fox Theatres bought 400,000 shares of Loew stock, paying Loew's $50,000,000. To help finance the deal he said he obtained $15,000,000 from Western Electric. That $15,000,000 plus $35,000,000 that Fox borrowed either from Halsey, Stuart, or had cash in bank, made it possible to pay for the Loew shares.

Following a "warning" from Harry Stuart, Mr. Fox continued, that he had made "a terrible blunder" by paying $50,000,000 for 400,000 Loew shares, when these represented only one-third of the number of Loew shares outstanding, Fox went out and bought, through Fox Theatres, 260,900 more shares of Loew's, paying $23,000,000 in the open market, the total cost of 660,900 Loew shares, in two blocks, having been $73,000,000.

In reporting the conversation which he had with Mr. Stuart prior to the purchase of the second block of Loew shares, Mr. Fox quoted Mr. Stuart as saying, "What is there to stop the Loew family from going right into the market and repurchasing 400,000 shares of stock? Supposing they buy 400,000 shares or stock, they could buy that stock back at $25,000,000, or $26,000,000, still have their 400,000 shares, and your acquisition would be a mistake."

Cites Justice Department Contact

Mr. Fox reported how "an unfortunate change" then took place in the attitude of the Department of Justice officials toward the Loew-Fox merger, and when he went to Washington to inquire about the situation, John Lord O'Brian, the new assistant attorney general, told him that the Department's records showed that Mr. Fox never was given permission to acquire the shares, and specifically stated that he "may not acquire these 400,000 shares of stock."

At this point, Mr. Fox said, he became alarmed about the situation which found his two companies "with no prospects of paying back" the huge sums of money which they had borrowed.

He then talked to Claudius Huston and the late James Francis Burke, of the Republican National Committee, and, finally, he went to the White House to see the President, who was quoted by Mr. Fox, in part, as follows:

"Just send your attorney who made this deal to the Attorney General's office. I am sure they will understand that an error has been made. You do not need any intermediaries in the matter, if what you tell me is true."

Mr. Burke and Mr. Huston then appeared on the scene, Fox said, visiting him at his Long Island home, where they reported progress was being made, and inquiring if Mr. Fox knew "a man by the name of Louis B. Mayer, of California."

Mr. Fox said Mr. Burke appeared in the matter as an attorney, but that Mr. Huston received no compensation. However, Fox added, "when I sold out, I did lend Huston some money, for which I hold his note."

Says Mayer Told Him About Record

Louis Mayer rushed to New York from Hollywood, Mr. Fox continued, and went into a tirade against the proposed merger of the Fox and Loew companies.

"I explained to him," Mr. Fox said regarding his conference with Mr. Mayer, "the difficulty that we were having with the department, and he said, 'I know all about that. I caused that record to be changed from a consent to a restriction on acquiring these shares. That was a perfectly simple matter for me to do. The task now is to change the record back to a consent again. That is not going to be quite so easy, but I will try it, and I think I will be able to accomplish it.'"

"When I learned that a man had the power to go into the Department of Justice to change the records, I was rather ashamed of being a citizen of this nation," said Mr. Fox.

He said that he acted upon the President's advice and sent his attorney to the Attorney General's office, but "it got him nowhere."

Again taking up the thread of the narrative about Mr. Mayer, Fox told the senators that, "if you were to ask me again today, looking backward at the picture, as to whether it was really Louis B. Mayer who had the record changed, I should say he was full of ego in saying he did. I don't believe it at all. I should say now it was Mr. Harley L. Clarke."

He then related the details of the automobile accident on Long Island, in which his chauffeur was killed and Mr. Fox was disabled, and that when he was able to return to New York, it was only "two or three days before everything went to hell in the stock market."

Mr. Fox said, "It has been well advertised that the Fox company when it got into difficulty owed $91,000,000 and the Loew purchase was only $73,000,000," and the difference, totaling some $20,000,000, was incurred in the purchase of control of the Gaumont Company, of England, which he was urged to purchase by Mr. Otterson and Mr. Stuart, according to Mr. Fox's testimony.

"I have been wondering," said Mr. Fox, "what was the reason for the advice those men had given me, to enter those additional contracts. Was it because they thought the Fox company ought to own the British company? Or was it to get me into such a position where I definitely could not get myself out of it?"

Mr. Fox then asked, "Was that the beginning of the conspiracy I am complaining abou and that finally culminated in the capture of those companies from me?"

"Then it appeared," he continued, "that Mr.

SAVED PARAMOUNT 23 MILLIONS, SAYS HERTZ; DENIES FAVORITISM

Zirn's Challenges Bring Warm Replies; Former Finance Chairman Denies Receivership Was Discussed Before He Quit

Testifying that during his 14 months' chairmanship of the Paramount Publix financial committee he had reduced company costs by $23,000,000, John Hertz took the stand again Monday at an adjourned meeting of creditors for cross examination by Samuel Zirn, attorney for a Paramount bondholders' group.

Efforts to evoke admission that he had shown favoritism in his capacity as chairman were rebuffed repeatedly by Mr. Hertz, who, despite the two-hour session in the morning, and innuendos of Mr. Zirn, maintained a calm and smiling attitude throughout four and one-half hours of questioning by the seemingly tireless attorney.

Exchange Becomes Heated

Twice, however, the former Chicago motor magnate lost a trace of his composure when he sternly told Mr. Zirn that he at all times had considered only the interests of the company, and that he had resigned only because of disagreements with Adolph Zukor over policy.

Mr. Hertz said he had assumed the finance committee chairmanship under the persuasion of Mr. Zukor and Sir William Wiseman, a partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Paramount bankers.

During the questioning of Mr. Hertz on the Paramount credit transaction in 1932 by which Film Production Corporation, a new Paramount subsidiary, obtained credit from 12 banks, Mr. Zirn declared that "the results of your stewardship were that Paramount Publix was left as a mere shell, its assets held by subsidiary companies and creditor banks given a preference before you gave up the sinking ship. Isn't that so?"

Calls Question "Ignorant"

Mr. Hertz, in direct answer, characterized the question as "an ignorant one." Despite this, he said, he would give ideas of the results of his stewardship.

"I went over the company with a fine-tooth comb and worked myself silly trying to keep it a going concern," Mr. Hertz said. "I reduced operating costs, in 1932, $23,000,000 as compared with 1931. I brought them down from $133,000,000, where they were at the end of 1931, to $110,000,000 by the end of 1932. I obtained rental reductions of $10,000,000. I secured the cancellation of a lease at Rochester, N. Y., from the Eastman Kodak Company that had several years to run and was costing us $200,000 annually. I had 200 telephones taken out of the home office."

"And as a result of your improvement the company went into a disgraceful bankruptcy at the end of 14 months," Mr. Zirn commented.

"If that's what the record shows," replied Mr. Hertz with a smile.

Immediately attorneys for the Paramount trustees voiced their objections to Mr. Zirn's use of the word "disgraceful" as applied to the company's bankruptcy. Their objection was sustained.

Mr. Zirn endeavored unsuccessfully to show that Mr. Hertz knew that the Chase National Bank of New York, and Lawrence Stern & Co., Chicago, an investment firm, secretly had underwritten a $15,000,000 bond issue floated in August, 1931, by Paramount Publix. This issue was financed by Kuhn, Loeb, & Co., and Hallgarten & Co., with Chase National as trustee, Mr. Hertz declared.

The witness said that as a director of Lawrence Stern & Co., in which he has an investment of $1,000,000, he had no knowledge of it having underwritten the issue. Questioned, he testified that his son-in-law was vice-president, treasurer and a director of the investment company.

Replying to a direct question, Mr. Hertz said he never had sold any Paramount Publix stock "short." He testified he had bought some of the company's stock in conjunction with Albert D. Lasker, former Paramount director, but that it had been sold eventually at a loss to both of them. Mr. Hertz said he believed it was less than 20,000 shares.

Mr. Hertz decried the allegation that he had drawn $104,000 as a salary for the year prior to his resignation, as had been said by Paramount executives at various times the past three months. He explained that his contract called for a drawing account of $2,700 weekly, "of which I drew $1,700 weekly and contributed $1,000 a week to the company."

Regarding the $7,500 payment made on his resignation, identified earlier in the proceedings as balance due on a lease for a New York apartment occupied by Mr. Hertz, he said it was the only payment made him after his resignation.

"You see, I settled my claims against the company more cheaply than did the executives who resigned from it ahead of me," he remarked.

Denies Discussing Receivership

Mr. Hertz then reiterated his denial there had been any discussion of receivership or bankruptcy prior to his resignation, at the same time denying that a prepared press statement tending to show that his efforts to solve the company's financial difficulties had not been completely successful, had been prepared to announce a consent receivership January 2.

"I worked for Paramount from 9 or 10 in the morning until 7 or 8 at night," he testified. "I took an hour for lunch and only two vacations, one at Miami and one at my Cary, Ill., farm." His contract involved only a "part time arrangement."

Mr. Hertz told the meeting that the reason for Paramount's retention of the Lord-Thomas-Logan advertising agency following the election of Mr. Lasker, agency head, to the Paramount directorate, was because he "had helped convince Paramount that Lord and Thomas and Logan was one of the most efficient agencies in the country."

He said further that the switch to Lord and Thomas from Hanff, Metzger & Co. had followed the resignation of Sidney R. Kent from Paramount. Mr. Kent had been in charge of advertising up to that time, Mr. Hertz said.

Defends Broadcasting Sale

Sale of a half interest in the Columbia Broadcasting System by Paramount Nov. 4, 1932, was declared contrary to the interests of the Paramount investors by Mr. Zirn. Mr. Hertz said he deserved a "gold medal" for effecting the transaction, that the deal was an opportunity to "turn a loss into a profit; that the company got rid of a debt and obtained a cash profit of $1,200,000 through the deal, and did it by performing a legal contract."

Mr. Hertz declared he had sought to have the stock purchase plan participated in by company employees reorganized in 1932 to make of it a "profit sharing" plan at such time as the company's operations became profitable again.

Throughout the questioning Mr. Zirn was warned time and again by Referee Henry K. Davis to cease his allegations and "malicious" innuendos. At one time the referee charged Mr. Zirn with "misbehavior." On another occasion an allusion to "racketeering" was made by Godfrey Goldmark, Paramount attorney, in commenting on the fiery Mr. Zirn's procedure.

Mr. Hertz first was questioned by H. J. Friendly, attorney for the Paramount trustees, in connection with the renewal of a Paramount credit note for $292,170, held for Louis L. and Meyer Marks, former Chicago exhibitors, by the Continental Illinois Bank as agent.

Company Wins Government Refund of $7,276,394 for Over-Taxation; Action for Removal of Trustees Up Again Monday

Over-Assessments Announced

Over-assessments of income tax and interest totaling $7,276,394 in favor of Famous Players Lasky Corporation and subsidiaries, now Paramount Publix, were announced last week by the Internal Revenue Bureau at Washington.

In the $7,200,000 are over-assessments in 1929 returns of $216,465 for Paramount-Famous-Lasky and $465,863 for each of 15 subsidiaries, including A. H. Blank Theatre Corp., A. H. Blank Theatre Co. of Nebraska, Connecticut Operating Co., Imperial Theatre Co., Mountain States Theatre Corp., Olympia Operating Co., Olympia Theatres, Publix Enterprises, Publix-Iowa, Publix-Nebraska, Publix-Ohio, Rhode Island Theatres, Southern Enterprises of Texas, Tennessee Enterprises and Toledo Paramount.

The remaining $71,980 represents over-assessments of small sums in returns running back as far as 1922 against Famous Players-Lasky, Paramount-Famous-Lasky, Metropolitan Film Co. of Texas, Miami Enterprises, Rialto Theatre Corp. of Virginia, Park Realty Co., New York and Pacific Coast Amusement Co., Fountain Theatres Corp. and Missouri Theatre Corp.

The tax rebate was due to duplications resulting from mergers of subsidiaries with the parent company, according to the Internal Revenue Bureau.

Meanwhile, an action with Mr. Zirn as complainant seeking removal of the Paramount trustees, Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson, is scheduled for hearing in the U. S. circuit court of appeals, New York, Dec. 4.

It was announced late last week that N. L. Nathanson, president of Famous Players Canadian Corp., has been attending conferences in New York with executives of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., with reference to plans now being formulated for drafting reorganization arrangements for Paramount.

Sir William Wiseman has presided over all the meetings.

On Thursday Referee Davis handed down a decision instructing the Paramount trustees to turn over to the trustees in bankruptcy of Sono Art Co. and Metropolitan Sound Studios, Inc., the sum of $15,388, claimed by them as a trust fund.

ALL MUST FORMALLY SIGN BY JAN. 10 of the NRA Trade Association Division; Blackwell Smith, associate general counsel, and Franklin S. Pollak, of the Compliance Board.

In extending the arm of the Government over the motion picture industry, the President enunciated policies permitting it to regulate itself, but providing for strict federal supervision with power of veto and initiative. In this principle, some observers at Capitol Hill were inclined to see a policy of gradually returning to industry the right of self-regulation, but with full Government authority to supervise and direct. This differs with the earlier policy of the NRA, which was generally believed to be intended for Government regulation of industry, and was said to give to this industry more sweeping power than has been provided for any others, with the exception of the oil industry.

Mr. Roosevelt is said to have accepted the recommendation of General Johnson when he refused federal censorship of motion pictures. The government censorship of pictures "will never be done," said General Johnson. But the President instructed Dr. Lowell to "observe" the operations of the industry to keep its own rules in this respect.

Immediately following the affixing of the Presidential signature to the film code, General Johnson issued a statement which said in part:

"The moving picture code sets up in the code itself the names of the code authority, composed of balanced representation among the various adverse interests in production, distribution and exhibition. For this reason, the President reserved to the Administrator the right to review, and, if necessary, disapprove any action by the code authority or to remove any such member and to add members of any employer class.

"The code contains drastic provisions against excessive salaries. The President has exempted writers and dramatists from these, and suspended their operation as to others for further experience with the actual operation of the code authority.

"The President is asking also a full report in ninety days on all unfair practices in the industry, including a full report on excessive salaries or other emoluments in the industry, both as to artists and as to executives and their families, and he expects the industry to comply fully with the legai requirements."

Of extreme importance, then, to Hollywood's creative talent, which has been kicking up quite a fuss lately over the clause which would govern socalled "excessive" star salaries, was the executive order which suspended, for the time being, at least, the socalled "drastic" provision in the code for control over "exorbitant" salaries of Hollywood.

Basically involved in the suspension of the salary control clause was the recognition by the President of the fact that the success of the code depended on its administration, and before going into such a controversial subject arbitrarily, it was said the President wanted a chance to see if the code would work.

The salary clause, under the unfair trade practices provisions for producers, would have authorized penalties for the bidding up of stars' salaries to extravagant figures by competing producers. Under its terms such bidding could not start until thirty days before expiration of contracts.

General Johnson said that the motion picture code is highly specialized to fit an industry which has no parallel in other businesses.

The film code was not made public until General Johnson returned to Washington on Wednesday, from Warm Springs, and a stopover at Atlanta. He described it at that time as a detailed document providing for studies of salaries paid actors and executives, of alleged unfair trade practices and of the problem of censorship prior to the establishment of hard and fast rules of conduct.

General Johnson explained that there had been no changes in the document at it existed in the socalled "third revision" of the "Rosenblatt draft," except for the suspension of the provisions against bidding up of salaries for a trial period.

Nowhere in the code are "excessive salaries" defined.

Awaits Public Reaction

The whole code, General Johnson added, is a basis of study, and "the public reaction will have a lot to do with it."

Mr. Johnson credited Eddie Cantor with a suggestion that Hollywood's stars be put on a royalty basis, indicating that the comedian's suggestion had met with some favor.

Mr. Cantor traveled eastward from Hollywood to Warm Springs, last week, as the accredited representative of Hollywood's creative talent who were objecting to salary regulation. He visited the President at the vacation resort, but word went out that the code was not a subject of discussion.

The code authority will make the proposed ninety-day study of salaries, trade practices and the like, and then report to the Administrator.

It was indicated in New York Wednesday afternoon that labor was pleased with the personnel of the code authority, and this included the principal divisions of organized motion picture workers: the IATSE, Academy, Equity, Screen Writers Guild and the new Actors Guild.

President Roosevelt devoted an energetic afternoon on Monday to work on the twenty odd codes which Mr. Johnson's brief case held when he alighted at Warm Springs over the week end. The film code, therefore, was not the "white haired" document which rested on the Presidential desk when Mr. Roosevelt took pen in hand. It was mixed up with an assorted, and unesthetic lot, among them codes for the following fields: hot air furnaces and investment bankers, anti-friction bearings, pipe nipples and sewer pipes, cigar containers, woolen felts, malleable iron, whisky distillers, radio broadcasting, clay products, waterproofing and whatnot.

Relaxed by a few days in the quiet and warmth of Warm Springs, Mr. Johnson traveled on to Atlanta, arriving late Monday. From that point on, until he dropped out of the skies in a plane at Washington Wednesday noon, the General appeared to be "lost" to the outside world.

Inquiries at Atlanta late Tuesday to establish the itinerary of General Johnson's travels to Washington and his NRA headquarters, where a copy of the official document was awaited both by his own staff and by the industry, brought a statement that the Administrator had "gone to the movies."

Eddie Cantor Speaks

Stating that he did not know how the code authority was "going to work," Mr. Cantor issued a message to the industry asking that the code—regardless of what may be in it—be given a fair trial.

"There are probably a great many things in the code with which all parties will not agree," he said. "I, for example, am against the provisions of Article 5, which governs, as it does, socalled talent "raids" and salary control, but, in spite of this, I think changes will eventually be made in this and any other clauses which may prove to be working disadvantages. However, we might as well make up our minds to at least give the whole code a fair trial."

Mr. Cantor said he felt the producers themselves would eventually see the wisdom of eliminating the salary clauses entirely and that no control of actors' salaries is possible because they are not paid by the producers but by the public.

Mr. Cantor said he believed that the code may ultimately have the effect of cutting down production costs and eliminating the "unnecessary things in the industry." He was referring to "relatives and highly paid executives who do nothing to earn their prodigious salaries."

Despite the fact that the comedian was ready and eager to discuss the code, he admitted he "really knew very little about it." At this point, Eddie insisted upon getting in his little joke.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "I haven't yet been officially notified of my appointment to the code authority. Do you think it's on the level? Maybe the President thought: 'Eddie, you told me a lot of jokes while here at Warm Springs, now here's one for you.'"

Commenting on the appointment to the code authority of Dr. Lowell, Mr. Cantor said:

"I don't know Dr. Lowell, but I do know there is plenty of room for an industry 'house cleaning' that is long overdue. You cannot go on in any business if part of that business is diseased. If Dr. Lowell succeeds in helping to cure the industry of its diseases he may well become its saviour."

Miss Dressler "Surprised"

From Hollywood, Marie Dressler expressed "complete surprise" over her appointment to the code authority by President Roosevelt.

"Since the President wants me to serve I will do all I can to help," Miss Dressler said. "I feel that it is up to all of us to jump in and help President Roosevelt in the splendid work he is doing for our country and his people at this time."

Dr. Lowell, code authority, is honorary president of the Motion Picture Research Council and president-emeritus of Harvard University. He is, by his own admission, "distinctly not a film fan." In spite of this, he for years has campaigned against films as being detrimental to the juvenile mind.

EXECUTIVE ORDER

"An application having been duly made, pursuant to and in full compliance with the provisions of Title 1 of the National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933, for my approval of a code of fair competition for the motion picture industry, and a hearing having been held thereon, and the Administrator having rendered his report containing an analysis of the said code of fair competition together with his recommendations and findings with respect thereto, and the Administrator having found that the said code of fair competition complies in all respects with the pertinent provisions of Title 1 of said act and that the requirements of clauses (1) and (2) of subsection (A) of Section 3 of the said Act have been met:

(b) In the event, however, that there exist in the particular community organizations of such employees above mentioned, members of which were directly and regularly employed by the Exhibitor or Exhibitors on August 23, 1933, and which organizations are affiliated as above set forth, and (1) no prevailing scale of wages and maximum number of hours for such employees exist in such community with respect to such employees, or (2) any dispute should arise as to what is the minimum scale of wages or the maximum number of hours of labor with respect to any of such employees for a particular class of theatre or theatres in any particular community, then and in either of those events such disputes shall be determined as follows:

(1) If the question at issue arises with an organization of such employees affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, then a representative appointed by the National President of such affiliated organization, together with a representative appointed by the Exhibitors, shall examine into the facts and determine the existing minimum scale of wages and maximum number of hours of labor for such class of theatre or theatres in such particular locality, and in the event they cannot agree upon the same, they shall mutually designate an impartial third person who shall be empowered to sit with such representatives, review the facts and finally determine such dispute, with the proviso, however, that in the event such representatives cannot mutually agree upon such third person, then the Administrator shall designate such third person; or

(2) If the question at issue arises with unorganized employees or with an organization of such employees not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and if in said community there exist members of such affiliated organization directly and regularly employed by an Exhibitor or Exhibitors, then a representative of such unorganized employees, or, as the case may be, a representative appointed by the President of such unaffiliated organization or both, together with a representative appointed by the National President of such affiliated organization above referred to, together with a representative appointed by the Exhibitors, shall examine into the facts and unanimously determine the existing scale of wages and maximum number of hours of labor for such class of theatre or theatres in such particular community, and in the event they cannot unanimously agree upon the same, they shall mutually designate an impartial person who shall be empowered to sit with such representatives, review the facts, and finally determine such dispute, with the proviso, however, that in the event such representatives cannot mutually agree upon such impartial person, then the Administrator shall designate such impartial person; or

(3) If the question at issue arises with unorganized employees or with an organization of such employees not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and not, subject to the foregoing provisions of subparagraphs (1) and (2) of paragraph (b) hereof, then a representative of such unorganized employees, or, as the case may be, a representative of the President of such unaffiliated organization or both together with a representative appointed by the Exhibitors, shall examine into the facts and determine the existing minimum scale of wages and maximum hours of labor, for such class of theatre or theatres in such particular locality, and in the event they cannot agree upon the same, they shall mutually designate an impartial person who shall be empowered to sit with such representatives, review the facts and finally determine such dispute, with the proviso, however, that in the event such representatives cannot mutually agree upon such impartial person, then the Administrator shall designate such impartial person.

(c) Pending the determination of any such dispute, the rate of wages then paid by the Exhibitor in such theatre or theatres in such community, and the maximum number of hours then in force (if not more than the hours provided for in this Code) shall not be changed so as to decrease wages or increase hours.

(d) In order to effectuate the foregoing provisions of this Section 6 hereof, and pending the determination of any dispute as above specified, the employees herein embraced and provided for agree that they shall not strike, and the Exhibitors agree that they shall not lock out such employees.

Section 7. In no event shall the duties of any of the employees hereinabove specified in Section 6 (a) directly and regularly employed by the Exhibitors as of August 23, 1933, be increased so as to decrease the number of such employees employed in any theatre or theatres in any community, except by mutual consent.

Section 8. With respect to any employee not hereinbefore provided for, such employee when directly and regularly employed by the Exhibitors shall be paid not less than forty (40) cents per hour.

Section 9. By reason of the professional character of their employment, the minimum wage and maximum hours of employment of employees performing the duties of musicians shall as heretofore be established by prevailing labor agreements, understandings, or practices.

Section 10. With respect to disputes arising between employees and employers in the EXHIBITION branch of the Motion Picture Industry, the parties pledge themselves to attempt to arbitrate all such disputes.

Section 11. The Administrator after such notice and hearing as he shall prescribe may revise or modify any determination of any dispute pursuant to Section 6 of PART 1, of division C of this Article IV

PART 2. ACTOR EMPLOYEES IN VAUDEVILLE AND PRESENTATION MOTION PICTURE THEATRES

SECTION 1. DEFINITIONS

(a) Presentation and vaudeville shall include both permanent and traveling companies of artists playing presentation and vaudeville houses, but is not intended to include: amateur shows, "rep" shows, "tab" shows, "tent" shows, "wagon" shows, "truck" shows, "medicine" shows, "show-boat" or "burlesque," as these terms are understood in the theatre.

(b) A "traveling" company, as used in this Code, means a company which moves from theatre to theatre irrespective of locality.

SECTION 2. AUDITIONS

(a) Principals. It shall be an unfair trade practice for any Exhibitor or independent contractor under the guise of public audition to break-in, try-out or to require a performer to render service for less than the minimum salary established by this code. This shall not prohibit, however, the appearance or participation of any performer in benefit performances which have been approved by the performer or by any bona fide organization of the performer's own choosing.

(b) Chorus. It shall be an unfair trade practice for any manager or independent contractor, under the guise of a public audition, break-in, or try-out, to require the chorus to render services for less than the minimum salary established by this Code. This shall not prohibit, however, the appearance of the chorus or participation in benefit performances which have been approved by the chorus or any bona fide organization of the chorus' own choosing.

SECTION 3. REHEARSALS

(a) Principals. Rehearsal period for principals shall be limited to four weeks, and they shall be guaranteed two consecutive weeks' compensation for employment for said four weeks of rehearsals, which shall immediately follow the rehearsal period. In the event that any rehearsal over four weeks is required there shall be compensation for an additional consecutive week's playing time guaranteed for each week's rehearsal. This shall not apply, however, to principals, owning their own acts.

(b) Chorus. No Exhibitor or independent contractor shall require for an engagement of only one week any chorus person to rehearse in excess of five (5) days, nor for an engagement of two or more weeks to rehearse in excess of two (2) weeks. Any such engagement shall follow immediately such respective rehearsal periods. The Chorus shall not be required to rehearse for more than forty (40) hours a week and rehearsal shall be considered to be continuous from the time the chorus is called on the first day of rehearsal until the opening day. For each additional week of rehearsal there shall be compensation for an additional week's consecutive employment.

SECTION 4. MAXIMUM HOURS AND MINIMUM WAGES

(a) Principals. Owing to the peculiar nature of the stage presentation and vaudeville business and the unique conditions prevailing therein, the necessary policy and variations in the operation of such theatres, the changing nature of the entertainment and the fact that such entertainment is of a character requiring the services of artists of unique and distinctive ability who cannot be replaced, it is recognized that it is impossible to fix the maximum hours per week of artists appearing in such theatres.

(1) For performers with more than two years' theatrical experience, there shall be a minimum wage of forty ($40.) dollars weekly net.

(2) For performers with less than two years' theatrical experience, there shall be a minimum wage of twenty-five ($25) dollars weekly net.

(3) The minimum wage of performers employed on a perdiem basis shall be seven dollars and fifty cents ($7.50) per day net.

(b) Chorus. No singing or dancing chorus person shall be required to work more than forty (40) hours in any week and there shall be one day out of every seven during which the chorus shall be released from work with pay. Working time shall include the entire time of a performance or presentation in which the chorus appears in one or more numbers as an integral part of the presentation, and all rehearsal time excluding dressing and undressing time. No chorus person shall be required to report at a theatre before nine o'clock in the morning.

On the day a chorus person is released with pay, such chorus person shall not be required to rehearse or report to the theatre or perform any service. This provision for a free day shall not apply to traveling companies.

(1) There shall be a minimum wage of thirty ($30.) dollars per week in any De Luxe Theatre.

(2) There shall be a minimum wage of thirty-five ($35) dollars per week in traveling companies.

(3) There shall be a minimum wage of twenty-five ($25) dollars per week in other than De Luxe Theatres.

(4) Wherever a theatre augments the chorus by employing additional chorus persons such additional chorus persons shall not rehearse more than five (5) days.

(5) It shall be an unfair trade practice for any Exhibitor or independent contractor to engage any chorus person under any agreement which would reduce the net salary below the minimum wage through the payment of any fee or commission to any agency (whether such fee is paid by the Exhibitor or independent contractor or by the chorus), or by any other form of deduction.

(6) After the first two weeks of consecutive employment, if a lay-off is necessary, the Exhibitor or independent contractor shall pay each chorus person not less than three ($3) dollars per day for each day of lay-off. In connection with a traveling unit after the first two weeks of consecutive employment, if lay-off is caused on account of traveling, the Exhibitor or independent contractor shall be allowed two days traveling without pay for each four weeks of employment West of the Rockies, and one day's traveling without pay for each four weeks of employment East of the Rockies.

(7) Wherever on August 23, 1933, any theatre paid a rate to chorus persons in excess of the minimum wages or employed chorus persons for a number of hours per week of labor less than the maximum hours, said higher wage and lesser number of hours shall be deemed to be, and are hereby declared to be, the minimum scale of wages and maximum hours of labor with respect to such theatres in this section of the Code.

SECTION 5. GENERAL PROVISIONS

(a) If in any city or place where by custom Sunday performances by living actors, or the performance of particular classes of acts, are not given, no performer or chorus person engaged to work in such city or place shall be required to perform or give performances of such particular class of act in such city or in any other place on the Sunday of the week for which such performer or chorus person was engaged to render services in such city or place.

(b) Wherever any unit travelling company or artist is required to give more than the regular number of performances established in the theatres in which they appear, said unit, travelling company or artist, all artists and chorus persons shall be paid for said extra performances pro rata.

SECTION 6. CHORUS TRANSPORTATION

(a) Transportation of the chorus when required to travel, including transportation from point of organization and back, including sleepers, shall be paid by the employer whether Exhibitor or independent contractor.

(b) If individual notice of contract termination is given, the chorus shall only be paid in cash the amount of the cost of transportation and sleeper of the chorus and baggage back to the point of origin whether the chorus returns immediately or not.

SECTION 7. WARDROBE

(a) Principals. The Exhibitor or independent contractor shall furnish to every artist in a presentation unit or traveling company (not including what is commonly known as a vaudeville act) and receiving less than fifty ($50) dollars per week, without charge, all hats, costumes, wigs, shoes, tights and stockings and other necessary stage wardrobe excepting street clothes.

(b) Chorus. The Exhibitor or independent contractor shall furnish the chorus, without charge, with all hats, costumes, wigs, shoes, tights, and stockings and other necessary stage wardrobe.

SECTION 8. ARBITRATION

(a) Arbitration of all disputes under this section of this Article of the Code shall be in accordance with the arbitration provisions of this Code as hereafter generally provided.

SECTION 9. CHILD LABOR

(a) On or after the effective date of this Code, no person under sixteen (16) years of age shall be employed as a principal or chorus person in connection with the exhibition of motion pictures, provided, however, where a State law provides a higher minimum age, no person under the age specified by said State law shall be employed in that State, and provided further, however, where a role or roles are to be filled or appearances made by a child or children, an Exhibitor or independent contractor may utilize the services of such child or children upon his compliance with the provisions of State laws appertaining thereto.

Section 10. The Code Authority may receive complaints with respect to alleged violations by an independent contractor of any of the foregoing Sections of this PART 2 and may after notice and hearing and with the approval of the Administrator prescribe rules and regulations governing the relations between Exhibitors and independent contractors guilty of any such violations.

ARTICLE V
UNFAIR PRACTICES

A. GENERAL

PART 1. The defamation of competitors by falsely imputing to them dishonorable conduct, inability to perform contracts, questionable credit standing, or by other false representations or by the false disparagement of the grade or quality of their motion pictures or theatres, shall be deemed to be an unfair trade practice.

PART 2. The publishing or circulating of threats or suits or any other legal proceedings not in good faith, with the tendency or effect of harassing competitors or intimidating their customers, shall be deemed to be an unfair trade practice.

PART 3. Securing confidential information concerning the business of a competitor by a false or misleading statement or representation, by a false impersonation of one in authority, by bribery, or by any other unfair method, shall be deemed to be an unfair trade practice.

PART 4. To avoid the payment of sums unreasonably in excess of the fair value of personal services which results in unfair and destructive competition, the Code Authority shall have power with the approval of the Administrator to investigate whether in any case any employer in the motion picture industry has agreed to pay an unreasonably excessive inducement to any person to enter into the employ of such employer. If the Code Authority finds that such employer has done so, the Code Authority shall have the power, with the approval of the Administrator to impose an assessment against such employer in the amount of the unreasonable excess payment to such person, not, however, to exceed the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars ($10,000.00), and to make public its findings, but nothing in this PART shall in any manner impair the validity or enforceability of such agreement of employment. All such assessments shall be paid to the Code Authority for use by it in the Administration of its functions.

B. PRODUCERS

PART 1. It shall be an unfair trade practice for any Producer to aid, abet, or assist in the voluntary release or dismissal of any author, dramatist or actor employed in rendering his exclusive services in connection with the production of a "legitimate" drama or musical comedy for the purposes of securing the services of such author, dramatist or actor.

PART 2. It shall be an unfair trade practice for a number of Producers who, in the usual and ordinary course of business, rent their respective studios or studio facilities to Producers (other than their affiliated companies), to conspire, agree, or take joint action to prevent any responsible Producer or Producers from renting such studios or studio facilities.

PART 3. It shall be an unfair trade practice for a Producer to knowingly employ as an "extra" any member of the immediate family of any employee or any person who is not obliged to depend upon "extra" work as a means of livelihood, unless the exigencies of production require an exception to be made.

PART 4. SECTION 1

No Producer, directly or indirectly, shall transact any business relating to the production of motion pictures with any agent who under the procedure hereinafter set forth shall be found by the Agency Committee:

(a) to have given, offered or promised to any employee of any Producer any gift or gratuity to influence the action of such employee in relation to the business of such Producers;

(b) to have alienated or enticed, or to have attempted to alienate or entice, any employee under written contract of employment, from such employment, or to have induced or advised without justification any employee to do any act or thing in conflict with such employee's obligation to perform in good faith any contract of employment, whether oral or written;

(c) knowingly to have made any materially false representation to any Producer in negotiations with such Producer for or affecting the employment or contemplated employment of any person represented by such agent;

(d) to have violated or evaded or to have attempted to violate or evade, directly or indirectly, any of the provisions of PARTS 4 or 5 of this ARTICLE V.

(e) to have failed or refused to have registered as an agent, in the event that such registration is required as provided for in Section 3 of this PART, or to have transacted business as an agent after his registration shall have been revoked, cancelled, or suspended.

Section 2. The Agency Committee shall consist of ten (10) members, five (5) of whom shall be Producers or Producers' representatives named by the Code Authority, and the other five (5) shall consist of one agent, one actor, one writer, one director and one technician, who shall be selected by the Administrator from nominations as to each class named respectively by agents, actors, writers, directors and technicians, in such equitable manner as may be prescribed by the Administrator.

Section 3. In order to effectuate this PART, the Agency Committee may recommend to the Administrator uniform terms and conditions for and an appropriate procedure for the registration of all agents with whom Producers may transact business relating to the production of motion pictures, and for the suspension, revocation, or cancellation of any such registration and appropriate rules and regulations affecting the agents as provided for herein. Such recommendations of the Agency Committee, together with the recommendations of the individual members thereof, shall be submitted in writing to the Administrator, who after such notice and hearing as he may prescribe, may approve or modify such recommendations. Upon approval by the Administrator, such recommendations shall have full force and effect as provisions of this Code. No agent shall be deprived of the right of registration without affording such agent a full and fair opportunity to be heard, and without the approval of the Administrator. Should it at any time be determined to provide for the registration of agents as hereinabove set forth, then all persons regularly transacting business as agents at such time shall be entitled to registration as a matter of course, provided application is made to the Agency Committee within thirty (30) days thereafter.

Section 4. The Agency Committee may, after due notice and hearing, and with the approval of the Administrator, set up rules of fair practice governing relations between Producers and agents, writers, actors, directors and technicians.

Section 5. The Agency Committee shall make findings of fact concerning any matter coming before it pursuant to the provisions of this part and shall make such recommendations to the Administrator as to it may deem proper if the Committee is unanimous, otherwise separate recommendations may be submitted, together with a report that the Committee has disagreed. No hearing or proceeding shall be conducted without due notice and a full and fair opportunity to all interested parties to appear and be heard. A complete transcript of all testimony and arguments shall be made and certified to the Administrator, together with the recommendations of the members of the Committee. The Administrator shall approve, reject or modify such recommendations or any of them and may conduct such further investigations and hearings as to him may seem necessary or advisable. The order of the Administrator shall be final.

Section 6. The Agency Committee, subject to the approval of the Administrator, shall have authority to require all Producers to furnish such information as may be desired to effectuate the provisions of this PART.

Section 7. The Agency Committee shall have full power and authority to prescribe reasonable rules of procedure for determining all matters of dispute or controversy which may properly arise before such Committee in connection with this PART.

Section 8. The term "agent" as used herein shall apply to any person (including firms, corporations or associations), who, directly or indirectly, for a fee or other valuable consideration, procures, promises or undertakes to procure employment for any person for or in connection with the production of motion pictures.

Section 9. The provisions of ARTICLE II, Section 7, of this Code shall not supersede the operation of this PART 4 and the following PART 4 (A).

Section 10. It shall be an unfair trade practice for any Producer, or any employee of a Producer, directly or indirectly, to engage in, carry on, or in any way be financially interested in or connected with the business of an agent as herein denned, without making known such fact to the Agency Committee within twenty (20) days from the effective date, or if such interest is acquired subsequent to the effective date, then within ten (10) days after the acquisition of such interest. The Agency Committee shall require such public disclosure to be made of such interest as it may deem advisable; and the Agency Committee may make such further rules in connection with the subject matter of this Section as it sees fit, subject to the approval of the Administrator.

PART 4 (A).

Should the Administrator determine at any time upon a fair showing, after notice, that a set of fair practices should be adopted governing relations between Producers and any one of the following classes: writers, directors, technicians, actors and agents, a special committee shall be appointed for that purpose. The Producers and the class interested in such fair practices in each instance shall be entitled to equal representation on such committee.

The Committee members shall be appointed in the manner and its proceedings and those of the Administrator shall be the same, as above provided in the case of the Agency Committee.

At the same time that the findings or report of the Committee shall be sent to the Administrator, the same shall be made public in such manner as may be determined by the Administrator.

PART 5. SECTION 1.

No Producer, directly or indirectly, secretly or otherwise shall

(a) Entice or alienate from his employment any employee of any other Producer or induce or advise any such employee to do anything in conflict or inconsistent with such employee's obligation to perform in good faith any contract of employment.

(b) Foment dissension, discord or strife between any employee of any other Producer and his employer with the effect of securing the employee's release from employment or a change in the terms of any contract under which the employee is engaged or of causing the employee to be or become dissatisfied with his subsisting contract.

(c) In any manner whatsoever negotiate with or make any offer for or to any employee under written contract to any other Producer prior to the last thirty (30) days of the term of the contract of employment, regardless of the compensation.

Section 2. All production employees rendering services of an artistic, creative, technical or executive nature, for the purpose of this PART, shall be classified as follows:

(a) Employees not under written contract who are employed at not less than $250.00 per week or $2,500.00 per picture.

(b) Employees under written contract, for a period, inclusive of options, if any, of less than one year, whose compensation is not less than $250.00 per week or $2,500.00 per picture.

(c) Employees under written contract for the period of at least one year, or at least three pictures, inclusive of options, if any, whose compensation is not less than $250.00 per week (exclusive of lay-off periods) or $2,500.00 per picture.

The term "contract" as used in subdivisions (b) and (c) shall be deemed to mean and include not only any subsisting contract with any Producer, but also any prior contract with such Producer or with any parent, subsidiary or predecessor corporation of such Producer, provided that the employment thereunder has been or may be continuous.

(d) Nothing hereinbefore in subdivision (c) of Section 1 or in subdivisions (a), (b) and (c) of this Section contained shall apply to so-called "free lance" players, writers, directors or other employees who are engaged to render services of an artistic nature in connection with one or two pictures only, unless the actual period of employment of any such employee is intended to or shall cover a minimum period of one year.

Section 3. Should any Producer make any offer for the services of any employee of any other Producer, and such employee is classified within either subdivision (a), (b), (c) or (d) of Section 2, and registered as hereinafter in Section 6 provided, then on the same day such offer is made, the Producer making such offer shall notify the employing Producer in writing that such offer has been made, and shall state the full and complete terms and conditions thereof, including particularly the compensation, the proposed period of employment, and any additional special terms. Simultaneously, a copy of said notice shall be delivered to the Registrar hereinafter provided for. The employing Producer thereupon shall be allowed a reasonable opportunity, not exceeding three (3) days, to be determined by the Registrar as hereinafter in Section 6 provided, within which time to negotiate for and contract with such employee for his continued services, on such terms as may be mutually acceptable, but the employee in every instance shall have the full and independent choice as to which offer he will accept. Any offer made by any Producer and reported to the employing Producer shall be conditional upon the right of the employing Producer as hereinabove provided, and shall be a firm offer not to expire until at least twenty-four (24) hours after the period permitted the employing Producer to negotiate as herein provided for.

The notice hereinabove provided for need be given, however, with reference to employees classified in subdivisions (b) and (c) of Section 2, only upon the condition that prior to the last thirty (30) day period of employment the employing Producer shall have made an offer in good faith to such employee for a renewal or extension of his contract of employment and shall have communicated that fact to the Registrar.

Section 4. Should any Producer desire to continue, renew or extend the period of employment of any employee classified within subdivision (c) of Section 2 hereof, and if he shall have evidenced such desire by making an offer in good faith to such employee prior to the last thirty (30) day period of his employment and such offer be rejected, and provided the compensation of such employee last paid by the employing Producer was at least $500.00 per week or $5,000.00 per picture, such Producer nevertheless shall be entitled to notice of offers which may be made to such employee by other Producers, during the period hereinafter provided, following the termination of such employment. Should any other Producer make any offer for the services of any such employee within such period, then on the same day that such offer is made such Producer shall notify the former employing Producer and the Registrar in like manner as is provided for in Section 3. The same procedure, rules and conditions shall govern with reference to offers made under this Section as are provided for in Section 3, to the end that:

(a) the former employing Producer shall be entitled to a reasonable period not exceeding three (3) days within which to negotiate and contract for the services of the employee in question;

(b) the offer of the second Producer shall continue as a firm offer for twenty-four (24) hours beyond the period referred to in subdivision (a); and

(c) the employee at all times shall have a free and independent choice as to which offer he will accept.

The period during which the first employing Producer shall be entitled to notice of offers made by other Producers, as hereinabove provided for, shall be three (3) months from the date of termination of the first employment in all cases where the compensation for the employee in connection with the former employment was at the rate of less than $1,000 per week (exclusive of lay-off periods), or if the employee was employed on a picture basis, less than $10,000 per picture. In all other cases where the compensation was equal to or in excess of the above amounts, the period shall be six (6) months.

Section 5. No Producer, Distributor or Exhibitor shall violate or aid or abet in the violation of this PART. It shall be an unfair trade practice for any Producer to use coercion to prevent offers being made any employee by other Producers.

Section 6. The Code Authority shall appoint a standing committee, which shall have full power and authority to determine the good faith of any offer made by the employing Producer, so as to entitle such Producer to notice of subsequent offers, as hereinabove provided for, and to determine whether the period within which such notice must be given should be for three (3) months or six (6) months. The Registrar shall be appointed and removed by said standing committee at will, and any act or decision of the Registrar shall be subject to review, reversal or modification by said committee or by the Code Authority on its own motion or on application of any interested party.

The Registrar shall provide an appropriate method whereby all Producers may ascertain in each instance when, and the period during which, notices of offers are to be transmitted to the employing or former employing Producer. Said Registrar shall also prescribe the procedure so as to prevent any employing or any former employing Producer from any unreasonable delay or from withholding any action or decision permitted under the provisions hereof, to the end that the immediate employment of any persons with whom any other Producer desires to contract shall not be unreasonably delayed or prevented. In such connection the Registrar shall have power in any instance to designate a reasonable period, in no event to exceed three (3) days, within which the second Producer shall be precluded from executing any proposed contract with the employee or former employee of the first employing or former employing Producer.

Notwithstanding anything contained in this PART to the contrary, the provisions of this PART shall apply only to employees whose names are registered with the Registrar by the employing Producer, and the right of registration or continued registration may be determined in any instance by the standing committee either upon its own motion or on application of any person interested, including the employee affected. In the event of the termination for any reason whatsoever of the employment of any person whose name is registered, the former employing Producer shall notify the Registrar in writing forthwith of such termination. Any Producer may withdraw from registration the name of any employee or by written notice served on the Registrar may waive the right to be notified of offers made to any employee by any other Producer, but he shall not refrain from registering the name of any employee, withdraw any name so registered or waive any such right to notice by virtue of any agreement to that effect with the employee. The Registrar shall provide an appropriate method for notifying all Producers promptly of all registrations, withdrawal of registrations, terminations of employment and waivers.

Section 7. If the Code Authority, or any committee appointed by it for that purpose, after notice and hearing shall find that any employee of any Producer has refused without just cause to render services under any contract of employment, the Code Authority shall have full power and authority, with the approval of the Administrator, to order all Producers to refrain from employing any such person in connection with the business of producing motion pictures for such period of time as may be designated by the Code Authority, and it shall be an unfair trade practice for any Producer to employ such person in violation of such order, or for any Distributor or Exhibitor, respectively, to distribute or exhibit any picture produced during the period prescribed by the Code Authority by or with the aid of such person. Such hearing shall be conducted only upon due notice. A full and fair opportunity shall be afforded to all interested parties to appear. A complete transcript of all testimony and arguments, together with the findings and order of the Code Authority shall be made and certified to the Administrator, who may approve, reject or modify such order, and in such connection conduct such further investigations and hearings as to him may seem necessary or advisable. The order of the Administrator shall be final.

Section 8. If any Producer deliberately, willfully, or persistently violates any of the provisions of this PART and the Code Authority so finds, and such finding is upheld by the Administrator, the Code Authority, with the approval of the Administrator, shall have power to impose such restrictions, prohibitions or conditions as it may deem proper upon the distribution or exhibition of motion pictures produced by any such offending Producer. Due notice of the ruling of the Code Authority, as approved by the Administrator shall be published in such manner as the Code Authority prescribes.

PART 6.

(a) No cartoon Producer shall employ any person during such time as he is employed full time by another.

(b) No cartoon Producer shall make any offer directly or indirectly of any money inducement or advantage of any kind to any employee of any other cartoon Producer in an effort to entice, persuade or induce such employee to leave or become dissatisfied or to breach any contract covering his employment.

(c) No cartoon Producer shall adapt a cartoon character of another in such manner that the use of the adapted character shall constitute an appropriation by him of the good will of the creator.

C. PRODUCERS-DISTRIBUTORS

PART 1. Where any contract granting the motion picture rights in any dramatic or dramatico-musical work specifies a date prior to which no motion picture based upon such work may be publicly exhibited, it shall be deemed to be an unfair trade practice for any Producer or Distributor to permit the public exhibition of such motion picture prior to such date.

PART 2.

(a) It shall be deemed to be an unfair trade practice for any Producer or Distributor, by any of its employees or through other persons who have a direct or indirect interest, whether financial or otherwise, in any such Producer or Distributor, to knowingly and intentionally directly or indirectly interfere with existing relations between an Outside or Associated Producer and a Producer or Distributor, or to do anything to alienate or entice any such Outside or Associated Producer away from a Producer or Distributor, or to do anything which would tend to create discord or strife between such Outside or Associated Producer and a Producer or Distributor, or foment dissension between them, for the purpose of inducing such Outside or Associated Producer to breach or attempt to breach any existing contracts between it and any Producer or Distributor, or to secure a change in the terms and conditions of any existing contract between any such Outside or Associated Producer and a Producer or Distributor.

(b) To effectuate the foregoing, no Producer or Distributor shall negotiate with or make any offer for or to any such Outside or Associated Producer at any time prior to sixty (60) days before the termination of any existing agreement between such Outside or Associated Producer and any other Producer or Distributor, or not prior to sixty (60) days before the date when such Outside or Associated Producer shall fulfill its delivery commitment to the Producer or Distributor with whom it has contractual obligations, whichever date is earlier.

D. DISTRIBUTION

PART 1. No Distributor shall threaten or coerce or intimidate any Exhibitor to enter into any contract for the exhibition of motion pictures, or to pay higher film rentals by the commission of any overt act evidencing an intention to build or otherwise acquire a motion picture theatre for operation in competition with such Exhibitor, but nothing in this ARTICLE shall in any way abridge the right of a Producer or Distributor in good faith to build or otherwise acquire a motion picture theatre in any location.

PART 2. No Distributor's employee shall use his position with the Distributor to interfere with the licensing of motion pictures by an Exhibitor operating a theatre in competition with a theatre in which such employee may have a direct or indirect interest, provided, however, that an employee of a Distributor shall not be deemed to have an interest in any theatre affiliated with such Distributor.

PART 3. (a) No Distributor shall substitute for any feature motion picture described in the contract therefor as that of a named star or stars or named director or named well-known author, book or play one of any other star or stars, director, author, book or play, nor shall such Distributor substitute any other feature motion picture for one which in the contract therefor is designated "no substitute;" and no Exhibitor shall be required to accept any such substitute motion picture.

(b) Nothing in this ARTICLE contained shall be interpreted to prohibit any Distributor from changing the title of any motion picture contracted for, from making changes, alterations and adaptations of any story, book, or play upon which it is based and from substituting for any such story, book or play another story, book or play, or from changing the director, the cast, or any member thereof of any such motion picture, except as hereinabove specifically prohibited.

(c) If for any such author, book or play there is substituted another author, book or play, notice of such substitution shall be given by a paid advertisement of not less than one-quarter page in at least one issue of a national trade publication before the release date of the motion picture in which such substitution has been made.

PART 4. (a) It shall be an unfair practice for any Distributor to license the exhibition of its motion pictures for exhibition by any non-theatrical account contrary to any determination, restriction, or elimination by a local Grievance Board which such exhibition shall be determined by such Grievance Board provided for in this Code to be unfair to an established motion picture theatre.

(b) Nothing in this PART shall be interpreted to prohibit the licensing of motion pictures for exhibition at army posts, or camps, or on board ships of the United States Navy or ships engaged in carrying passengers to foreign or domestic ports or at educational or religious institutions or at institutions housing "shut-ins," such as prisons, hospitals, orphanages, etc.

PART 5. No Distributor shall require as a condition of entering into a contract for the licensing of the exhibition of feature motion pictures that the Exhibitor contract also for the licensing of the exhibition of a greater number of short subjects (excepting news-reels) in proportion to the total number of short subjects required by such Exhibitor, than the proportion of the feature pictures for which a contract is negotiated bears to the total number of feature pictures required by the Exhibitor.

PART 6. No Distributor shall divulge or authorize or knowingly permit to be divulged by any employee or checker any information received in the checking of the receipts of its motion pictures, except that such information may be divulged in any arbitration or grievance proceeding or litigation concerning a controversy and for any Government or Code Authority report.

PART 7. No Distributor shall convey or transfer its assets for the purpose of avoiding the delivery to any Exhibitor of any feature motion picture licensed for exhibition by such Exhibitor.

PART 8. No Distributor shall refuse to make a fair adjustment of the license fees for the exhibition rights of a number of pictures licensed in a group for a stated average sum per picture and so stated in the license agreement, if the total number of pictures so licensed by any Exhibitor are not delivered by such Distributor, provided such Exhibitor shall have fully and completely performed all the terms and conditions of such license on the part of the Exhibitor to be performed. Any dispute or controversy concerning any such adjustment shall be determined by a Local Grievance Board provided for in this Code.

PART 9. (a) No Distributor shall require any specific day or days of the week for the exhibition of specified pictures or class of pictures unless specifically provided for in the Exhibitor's contract therefor and in no event if the license fee therefor is a fixed sum only.

(b) Where under an exhibition contract which provides that the rental to be paid by the Exhibitor for any feature motion picture specified therein shall be determined in whole or in part upon a percentage basis and that said picture shall be played by the Exhibitor upon a designated day or days of the week and the Exhibitor seeks to be relieved from the obligation to exhibit such motion picture upon such designated day or days for the reason only that the subject and character of the motion picture so designated are unsuitable for exhibition at the Exhibitor's theatre on such day or days, the claim of the Exhibitor shall be determined by the Local Grievance Board provided for by this Code, and the Distributor, if such Local Board so determines, shall relieve the Exhibitor from the obligation to play the moton picture upon the day or days designated by the Distributor; provided that the Exhibitor makes such claim within three (3) days after receipt of the notice of availability of such feature picture. In such cases the said Local Board shall proceed to determine the matter upon forty-eight (48) hours' notice if the Distributor so desires.

(c) If the said Local Board shall sustain the claim of the Exhibitor:

(1) the Distributor shall have the right to designate for the same day or dates another motion picture licensed upon a percentage basis, upon the same or similar terms as the motion picture in question, if there be one licensed; and to designate the motion picture objected to for a later date or dates but upon another day or other days of the week; and (2) the award of the said Local Board shall not be deemed to apply to any other theatre in the same or any other location.

(d) Where because of a proceeding before a Local Grievance Board, or because of an award of such Local Board, it shall be impractical to serve subsequent-run Exhibitors in compliance with any notice of availability or confirmed play dates given any such subsequent-run Exhibitors, the distributor shall have the right to change such play dates.

PART 10. No Distributor shall refuse to deliver to any Exhibitor any feature motion picture licensed under an exhibition contract therefor because of such Exhibitor's default in the performance of any exhibition contract licensing the exhibition of short subjects of such Distributor, or vice versa, provided such Exhibitor has agreed to arbitrate all claims and controversies arising under all existing Optional Standard License Agreements between them.

PART 11. (a) If any Exhibitor has contracted to exhibit more than fifty per cent (50%) of the total number of motion pictures announced for release during any given season by a Distributor and such Distributor shall during such season generally release any feature motion picture in addition to the number so announced, such Distributor shall first offer to the Exhibitor for license such additional motion pictures for exhibition at the Exhibitor's theatre, provided that at the time of such offer such Exhibitor shall have duly performed all the terms and conditions of all existing exhibition contracts between such Exhibitor and Distributor and is not in default thereunder.

(b) In cases where two Exhibitors have each contracted to exhibit, respectively, an equal division (i.e., 50%) of the number of motion pictures announced for release by a Distributor during any given season, and the Distributor shall generally release during such season any feature motion picture in addition to the number so announced, such Distributor shall first offer such additional motion picture for license to one of such Exhibitors, in the discretion of the Distributor, provided that at the time of such offer such Exhibitor shall have duly performed all the terms and conditions of all existing exhibition contracts between such Exhibitor and Distributor and is not in default thereunder.

PART 12. In each territory wherein any Distributor maintains an exchange, such Distributor shall abide by the regulations promulgated by the Code Authority for the prevention of fire, for the holding of fire drills, and rigid monthly inspections, the inspection of prints, the storing of inflammable material, the maintenance and testing of sprinkler systems and fire extinguishers, the avoidance of smoking and other cautions, methods and devises to protect the lives of employees and the public and to insure safety against fire hazards.

E. EXHIBITORS

PART 1. Any Exhibitor entering into a contract for the exhibition of motion pictures which permits the Exhibitor to select from the total number of pictures licensed less than eighty-five per cent (85%) of the total number, and to reject the remainder, shall by written notice to the Distributor reject each of such motion pictures not to exceed the number which may be rejected, within twenty-one (21) days after its date of availability in the exchange territory wherein is located the Exhibitor's theatre, and upon the Exhibitor's failing to give such notice of rejection, each of such pictures shall be deemed to have been selected.

PART 2. No Exhibitor shall contract for a license to exhibit more motion pictures than such Exhibitor reasonably shall require for exhibition in any theatre or theatres operated by such Exhibitor, with the intent or effect of depriving a competing Exhibitor from contracting to exhibit such excess number of motion pictures, provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit any Exhibitor from contracting for a reasonable number of motion pictures in excess of the number which are actually to be exhibited in the theatre or theatres of such Exhibitor in order to reasonably protect such Exhibitor against non-delivery of motion pictures.

No Exhibitor shall (a) lower the admission prices publicly announced or advertised for his theatre by giving rebates in the form of lotteries, prizes, reduced script books, coupons, throw-away tickets, or by two-for-one admissions, or by other methods or devices of similar nature which directly or indirectly lower or tend to lower such announced admission prices and which are unfair to competing Exhibitors, or which deceive the public; or (b) fail at all times to maintain the minimum price of admission specified in any contract licensing the exhibition of any motion picture during the exhibition thereof. This Section shall not be deemed to prohibit Exhibitors from reducing or increasing their admission scales as they see fit, except as may be prohibited by exhibition contracts.

Section 2. The giving of rebates such as premiums in the form of gifts or other things of value shall be deemed to be included within the provisions of Section 1 of this ARTICLE in those areas as shall be defined by each local Clearance and Grievance Board, where the Exhibitors operating not less than seventy-five per cent (75%) of the number of the then actively and continuously operated theatres not affiliated with Distributors or Producers and the Exhibitors operating not less than seventy-five per cent (75%) of the number of the then actively and continuously operated theatres affiliated with Distributors or Producers have both declared in writing that the giving of rebates in such form shall not be permitted. For the purpose of such declaration each Exhibitor shall be entitled to one vote for each theatre then actively and continuously operated by such Exhibitor.

Section 3. In case any Exhibitor is found after notice and hearing by a Local Grievance Board provided for in this Code, to have violated any provision of this PART, and if such Local Board shall on account thereof declare that such Exhibitor shall not be permitted to license the exhibition of any motion picture unless the Exhibitor ceases and desists from such violation, the Local Grievance Board shall have power to direct that Distributors of motion pictures shall refuse to enter into license contracts for the exhibition of their respective motion pictures by such Exhibitor and shall refuse to make further deliveries of motion pictures to such Exhibitor under existing license agreements executed after the effective date of this Code if the Exhibitor fails or refuses to so cease and desist.

Section 4. Notwithstanding any action which may be taken by the Exhibitors in any area as above in this Part 3 defined, ruling out the giving of rebates as defined in Section 1 hereof, such ruling shall not become effective until ninety (90) days after such action on the part of such Exhibitors as aforesaid.

PART 4. No Exhibitor shall transfer the ownership or possession of a theatre or theatres operated by any such Exhibitor for the purpose of avoiding uncompleted contracts for the exhibition of motion pictures at such theatre or theatres. Any disputes or controversies with respect to any transfer shall be submitted to and determined by a Local Grievance Board, and the findings of such Board shall be binding upon all parties concerned.

PART 5. (a) No Exhibitor licensed to exhibit a motion picture subsequent to its exhibition by another Exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof shall advertise such motion picture by any means of advertising prior to or during its exhibition by such other Exhibitor.

(b) Notwithstanding anything herein contained, in the event any Exhibitor shall make complaint that the restrictions embraced in this PART work an unfair hardship on him, the Local Grievance Board shall have the right to hear such complaint and after determination of the facts presented shall fix and specify the time limit within which such Exhibitor may advertise such motion picture; provided, however, that should the subsequent-run Exhibitor be granted permission to advertise before the completion of said prior run, he shall not advertise prior to the commencement of said prior run, nor shall he have the right to advertise in any way, shape, manner or form, or issue any statement that the prices of admission are or will be less than the admission prices charged by the Exhibitor having the first or prior run of such motion picture; provided further, however, that such subsequent-run Exhibitor may be granted the right in cases where the run of such Exhibitor follows the prior run in or within a period of seven (7) days to advertise upon the screen of the Exhibitor or to distribute within the Exhibitor's theatre a printed program or mail such printed program to a list of regular patrons, such programs to be limited to an announcement of the motion pictures which will be there exhibited during the period of not more than seven (7) days immediately following.

(c) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit any Exhibitor from advertising generally all of the feature motion pictures licensed for exhibition by such Exhibitor as a group, but such general advertising shall not refer to any one of such motion pictures at any time prior to its exhibition by any other Exhibitor having the first or immediately prior run thereof excepting as hereinabove provided.

PART 6. To prevent disturbance of the continued possession of a theatre by an Exhibitor, it shall be an unfair trade practice for any person engaged in the motion picture industry knowingly and intentionally, directly or indirectly, to interfere with pending negotiations between such Exhibitor and any other party pertaining to or affecting the possession, operation or occupancy of any such theatre then actually operated by such Exhibitor, or in respect of any modification, renewal or extension of any agreement affecting the same, for the purpose of preventing the consummation of such negotiations so as to deprive such Exhibitor of the continued operation, possession or occupancy of such theatre.

PART 7. No Exhibitor shall exhibit a motion picture previous to dawn of the first licensed and booked day of exhibition without securing express written permission therefor under the license agreement.

F. DISTRIBUTORS-EXHIBITORS

PART 1. The so-called Optional Standard License Agreement (1933) negotiated by Exhibitors and now being used by a large number of Distributors shall be the form of license contract to be used by Distributors for licensing the exhibition of motion pictures, unless the parties mutually agree that a different form be used, and excepting that in case any condition or provision thereof is in conflict or inconsistent with any provision of this Code, such condition or provision of said Optional Standard License Agreement shall be deemed amended to conform with such provision of this Code, it being the intention that the provisions of this Code shall govern. Individual Distributor sales policy provisions may be inserted in the Schedule of such form but shall not be contradictory of any provisions thereof.

PART 2. (a) The arbitration of all disputes between Exhibitors and Distributors arising under any exhibition contract, if the parties shall agree on arbitration, shall be in accordance with the optional arbitration clause of the so-called Optional Standard License Agreement, provided for in this Code, except as the provisions of such clause may be modified by the provisions of this Code.

(b) By stipulation of the parties to any dispute growing out of an exhibition contract, the number of arbitrators to be appointed by each party may be reduced to one, with power in the two thus appointed, if they cannot agree upon an award, to appoint an umpire as provided in said optional arbitration clause.

PART 3. No Exhibitor or Distributor shall induce or seek to induce the breach of any subsisting contract licensing the exhibition of motion pictures.

PART 4. No Exhibitor or Distributor shall give any gratuity or make any offer of any gratuity for the purpose of procuring advantages that would not otherwise be procurable, or as an inducement to influence a Distributor or Exhibitor, or representative of either not to deal with any competing or other Exhibitors, or Distributors.

PART 5. No Exhibitor or Distributor shall make any disclosure of box office receipts for publication except necessary reports to stockholders, credit and governmental agencies and to other like bodies. No Exhibitor or Distributor shall be responsible for disclosures in violation of this PART made by agents not authorized to do so.

PART 6. (a) If in any license agreement for the exhibition of feature motion pictures the Exhibitor has contracted to exhibit all of the motion pictures offered at one time by the Distributor to the Exhibitor and the license fees of all thereof average not more than $250.00 or less, the Exhibitor shall have the privilege to exclude from such license agreement not to exceed ten percent (10%) of the total number of the motion pictures so licensed; provided the Exhibitor

(1) is not in default under such license agreement, and

(2) shall have complied with all of the provisions thereof, if any, for the exhibition of such motion pictures at specified intervals.

(b) Such privilege of exclusion may be exercised only upon the following terms and conditions:

(1) The Exhibitor shall give to the Distributor written notice of each motion picture to be excluded within fourteen (14) days after the general release date thereof in the exchange territory out of which the Exhibitor is served.

(2) The Exhibitor may exclude without payment therefor one (1) motion picture of each group of ten (10) of the number of feature motion pictures specified in the license agreement provided he has paid for the other nine (9) of such group.

(3) If such privilege of exclusion is not exercised as provided in paragraph (b) (2) above, the Exhibitor may nevertheless exercise such privilege by paying the license fee of each motion picture excluded with the notice of its exclusion. In such case, such payment shall be credited against such tenth or succeeding tenth motion picture, as the case may be, which the Exhibitor would otherwise be privileged to exclude as provided in paragraph (b) (2) above.

If the only or last group licensed is less than ten (10) and more than five (5) motion pictures, the privilege to exclude shall apply provided the Exhibitor has paid for all motion pictures but one of such group.

(c) Upon the failure or refusal of the Exhibitor to comply with any term or condition of such license agreement, or to comply with any arbitration award in respect thereto, the privilege of exclusion forthwith shall be revoked and the Exhibitor shall be liable for and pay to the Distributor the license fees of all motion pictures theretofore excluded.

(d) If the license fee of any feature motion picture specified in the license agreement is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the receipts of the Exhibitor's theatre, such license fee (for the purpose of computing the average license fee of all of the motion pictures licensed) shall be determined as follows:

(1) Average the license fees of all of the Distributor's feature motion pictures exhibited upon a percentage basis at the Exhibitor's theatre, during the period of one year prior to the term of such license agreement.

(2) If none of the Distributor's feature motion pictures were exhibited upon a percentage basis at such theatre during said period, average the license fees of all feature motion pictures exhibited upon a percentage basis at such theatre during the said period.

(e) If the rental of any motion picture excluded is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the receipts of the Exhibitor's theatre, the sum to be paid by the Exhibitor as provided in paragraph (b) (3) hereof shall be determined as follows:

(1) Average the gross receipts of all the Distributor's feature motion pictures exhibited at the Exhibitor's theatre during the ninety (90) day period preceding the Exhibitor's notice of exclusion, and apply to such average the percentage terms specified in the license agreement for the picture excluded.

(2) If no feature motion pictures of the Distributor were exhibited at the Exhibitor's theatre during said ninety (90) day period, average the daily gross receipts of the Exhibitor's theatre for the period of thirty (30) operating days preceding the Exhibitor's notice of exclusion and apply to such average the percentage terms specified in the license agreement for the picture excluded.

(f) In computing the number of feature motion pictures which may be excluded hereunder, fractions of more than one-half (½) shall be regarded as one (1).

(g) Upon the exclusion of each feature motion picture, the license therefor and all rights thereunder shall terminate and shall revert to the Distributor.

(h) The Optional Standard License Agreement referred to in PART 1 hereof shall be deemed amended by substituting in place of Article FIFTEENTH of such contract the provisions of this PART.

ARTICLE VI

PART 1. CLEARANCE AND ZONING BOARDS

Section 1. To provide against clearance of unreasonable length and/or area in any exchange territory, fair, just, reasonable and equitable schedules of clearance and zoning may be prescribed by a Local Clearance and Zoning Board created for such territory.

Section 2. Each such Board shall be appointed by the Code Authority and shall consist of two representatives of Distributors, one of whom shall be a National Distributor with theatre affiliations and one of whom shall be a Distributor without circuit theatre affiliations; two representatives of first-run theatres located in such territory, one of whom shall be an affiliated Exhibitor, if there be one, and one of whom shall be an unaffiliated Exhibitor; and two representatives of subsequent-run unaffiliated theatres operating within such territory; and one person approved by the Administrator who shall have no direct or indirect affiliation with any branch of the motion picture industry who shall be regarded as the impartial representative of the Code Authority and who shall vote on any question before the Board only in the case where the Board is deadlocked. There shall be a Chairman of each Board, selected by a majority vote of the members of the Board. Any vacancy in the Board shall be filled from the class of members in which the vacancy occurred.

Section 3. Each Local Clearance and Zoning Board shall, promptly after its creation, and prior to January 1, 1934, and prior to January 1st of each year thereafter, formulate, prescribe and publish for its territory, schedules of clearance as in Section 1 above described, for the season next ensuing. Such schedules may classify theatres by zones or other classifications suited to local conditions, but for the sole purpose of fixing the maximum clearance in length of time and area after the conclusion of the prior runs of such theatres. Each Board may after fair and reasonable notice and hearing to interested parties change, modify or vary any part of the schedule set up by it, provided that any such change or modification shall not in any wise apply to, affect or modify any exhibition contract made subject to or in reliance upon or pursuant to any such schedules, without the prior written consent of the parties to such contract.

Section 4. Each Board when making any classification of theatres or when fixing the maximum period or area of clearance in respect of any theatre shall, among other things, consider and give due regard to the following factors:

(a) that clearance to a very considerable extent determines the rental value of motion pictures;

(b) that exhibitions of the same motion picture within the same competitive area at too short an interval after the conclusion of a preceding run or runs thereof by unduly restricting the competitive

HIGH STANDARD OF ETHICS PLEDGED

area in which clearance is limited, depreciates the rental value of motion pictures; and

(c) that all such depreciations of the rental values of motion pictures tend to reduce the number of motion pictures produced, discourages the production of motion pictures of quality involving large investments of capital, labor, skill and enterprise and thereby tend to reduce employment.

(d) that unreasonable clearance to a considerable extent affects the value of motion pictures for subsequent-run theatres.

(e) that unreasonable clearance depreciates the potential return from motion pictures to subsequent-run theatres.

(f) that unreasonable clearance as to time and area diminishes the potential revenue to Distributor and subsequent-run Exhibitor.

Section 5. The decision of each Board upon any question shall be determined by a majority vote, but in case the Board is evenly divided, such question shall be submitted for determination to the impartial representative of the Code Authority, who is provided for in Section 2 of this PART. The decision of the Board and/or the impartial representative, as the case may be, shall be in writing.

Section 6. It shall be the duty of each such Board to promptly publish the schedules formulated by it, and file a copy thereof immediately with the Code Authority.

Section 7. (a) Any party aggrieved by the schedules shall promptly and not later than thirty (30) days after publication thereof, file a protest in writing with the Board issuing them. Thereupon such Board shall promptly convene and give reasonable notice of hearing to all parties concerned or having an interest in the proceeding and hear them and accept from them all papers and evidence. The Board shall have power to make reasonable rules respecting notice of the time, place and manner of hearing. The Board shall make its decision within fifteen (15) days from the filing of the protest, or within three (3) days after the parties shall have been fully heard, whichever date is sooner. Any party aggrieved by the decision shall have the absolute right to appeal therefrom to the Code Authority, provided such appeal be filed or mailed by registered mail or delivered in writing not later than five (5) days after the decision of the Local Board is rendered, in which case the protest, with all evidence taken before the Local Clearance and Zoning Board, shall be referred to the Code Authority.

(b) All persons interested in the decision shall have the right to appear before the Code Authority and present additional evidence. The Code Authority, after investigating such protest and reviewing the evidence theretofore taken and considering the additional evidence, if any, shall promptly render its decision, and not later than fifteen (15) days from and after the date of the hearing upon the appeal. The requirement as to the various steps herein prescribed shall be mandatory in order to give full relief before the buying season commences.

Section 8. (a) The schedules presented and/or decisions made by any Local Clearance and Zoning Board and/or decisions of the Code Authority upon any appeal to it, shall be binding upon all Distributors and Exhibitors in the territory affected.

(b) Pending the final determination of any dispute or controversy, all existing contracts between the disputants shall continue to be performed in every respect.

Section 9. The jurisdiction of the Local Clearance and Zoning Board shall be limited as herein specifically provided and such Board shall hear no questions other than those pertaining strictly to clearance and zoning matters.

PART 2. GRIEVANCE BOARDS

Section 1. The complaint of any Exhibitor that a competing Exhibitor has committed any of the acts set forth in the following paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) with the intention and effect of depriving, without just cause, the complaining Exhibitor of a sufficient number of motion pictures to operate such Exhibitor's theatre, shall be referred for determination to a Local Grievance Board constituted as hereinafter provided:

(a) The licensing of more motion pictures than are reasonably required.

(b) The adoption of an unfairly competing operating policy of unnecessary and too frequent changes of motion pictures.

(c) The exaction without just cause of an agreement from any Distributor as a condition for entering into a contract for motion pictures that such Distributor refrain from licensing its motion pictures to the complaining Exhibitor.

(d) The commission of any other similar acts with the intent and effect of depriving without just cause the complaining Exhibitor of a sufficient number of motion pictures to operate such Exhibitor's theatre.

Section 2. Each such complaint shall be in writing and made immediately after the commission of the act or acts complained of, or in cases where an act or acts is threatened, immediately after notice thereof, and the Local Grievance Board after a fair and impartial consideration of all of the facts presented, a full, expeditious and complete hearing of all the parties concerned, including the Exhibitors directly involved, the Distributors having contracts with the Exhibitor complained against, and Exhibitors having contracts for runs subsequent to each of the Exhibitors directly involved, and if it deems it necessary, an independent investigation of the facts, shall make a prompt determination of each complaint submitted to it.

Section 3. The Local Grievance Board shall determine whether or not any Exhibitor complained of has committed any of the acts specified in paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Section 1 of PART 2 hereof, and shall make findings of fact in such regard. The Local Grievance Board upon the facts found shall make an award (a) dismissing the complaint, or (b) granting such relief as the Local Board may deem appropriate. The Local Grievance Board shall not have power to award damages. No award shall be made in favor of a complaining Exhibitor unless the Local Grievance Board shall find as a fact that the complaining Exhibitor is able, ready and willing to fully carry out and comply with all of the terms and conditions which may be fixed by the Local Grievance Board as a condition for making the award, which terms and conditions shall in no event be less favorable to the Distributor concerned than those contained in the license contract of the Exhibitor complained of, including the Distributor's loss of revenue, if any, resulting from the elimination of or reduction of revenue from any subsequent run or runs made necessary by such award, and such other terms and conditions as the Local Grievance Board may prescribe.

Section 4. All complaints and grievances of exhibitors and distributors concerning provisions of this Code or otherwise, and not specifically designated to be heard or passed upon in the first instance by the Code Authority or by arbitration or by the Local Clearance and Zoning Board shall be heard by the Local Grievance Board, and if such Local Board by a majority vote of the representatives thereon shall deem that any such complaint or grievance shall be certified to the Code Authority for determination, it shall be so certified, and the Code Authority shall consider and determine the same; otherwise such complaint or grievance shall be dismissed with a right of appeal from such dismissal to the Code Authority. Such proceedings before the Local Grievance Board and before the Code Authority shall be within the periods of time hereinafter prescribed in Sections 6 and 7 hereof.

Section 5. Each Distributor shall have the right to license all or any number of the motion pictures distributed by such Distributor for exhibition at theatres affiliated with such Distributor, and no Local Grievance Board shall have jurisdiction to hear or determine any complaint by any Exhibitor based upon the fact that a Distributor has licensed the motion pictures distributed by it for exhibition at theatres affiliated with such Distributor.

Section 6. (a) There shall be established a Local Grievance Board, appointed by the Code Authority, in each exchange territory. Each such Board shall consist of two representatives of Distributors, one of whom shall be a National Distributor with theatre affiliations and one of whom shall be a Distributor without circuit theatre affiliations, and two representatives of Exhibitors, one of whom shall be an affiliated Exhibitor, if there be one, and one of whom shall be an unaffiliated Exhibitor, and one person who shall have no direct or indirect affiliation with any branch of the motion picture industry, who shall be approved by the Administrator, who shall be regarded as the impartial representative of the Code Authority, and who shall vote on any question before the Board only in the case where the Board is deadlocked. There shall be a Chairman of each Board, selected by a majority vote of the members of the Board. Any vacancy in the Board shall be filled from the class of members in which the vacancy occurred. No member of such Board shall sit on any matter involving his own or his company's interest.

(b) The decision of each Local Board upon any question submitted to it shall be determined by a majority vote, but in case the Board is evenly divided, such question shall be submitted for determination to the impartial representative of the Code Authority, as provided in paragraph (a) of this Section. The decision of the Board and/or the impartial representative, as the case may be, shall be in writing. All decisions of the Local Board shall be made within fifteen (15) days from the filing of the protest, grievance, or complaint, or within three (3) business days after the parties shall have been fully heard, whichever date is earlier.

Section 7. (a) Any party aggrieved by any decision of the Local Board shall have the absolute right to appeal therefrom to the Code Authority, provided such appeal be filed or mailed by registered mail or delivered in writing not later than five (5) days after the decision of the Local Board is rendered, in which case the grievance or complaint, together with all the evidence taken before the Local Board shall be referred to the Code Authority.

(b) Pending the determination of such appeal, the determination order or other action of the Local Grievance Board shall be stayed.

(c) Any party aggrieved shall have the right to appear before the Code Authority and present additional evidence. The Code Authority, after investigating the complaint or grievance and reviewing the evidence theretofore taken, and considering the additional evidence, if any, shall promptly render its decision not later than fifteen (15) days from and after the date when the parties have been fully heard on appeal.

Section 8. No Exhibitor or Distributor shall be entitled to file any complaint under this or any other ARTICLE of this Code unless such Exhibitor or Distributor shall have duly executed this Code in its entirety within forty-five (45) days after it is signed by the President of the United States, and/or forty-five (45) days after engaging in the motion picture industry, and shall have thereby agreed to comply with all the requirements of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Evidence of such compliance shall be filed with the Code Authority.

PART 3. All members appointed to serve on respective Clearance and Zoning Boards and Local Grievance Boards shall be persons of good repute and of good standing in the industry, and shall upon acceptance of appointment subscribe and file with the Administrator an oath to fairly and impartially determine whatever issue is presented to the Board to which such member has been appointed. No such Board shall contain in its membership more than one representative of any Distributor or Exhibitor.

PART 4. If a member of any board provided for by this Article VI ceases to belong to the class he represents upon such board, his membership shall terminate and the Code Authority shall fill the vacancy so caused by designating a representative of the same class.

ARTICLE VII
GENERAL TRADE POLICY PROVISIONS

PART 1. The industry pledges its combined strength to maintain right moral standards in the production of motion pictures as a form of entertainment. To that end the industry pledges itself to and shall adhere to the regulations promulgated by and within the industry to assure the attainment of such purpose.

PART 2. The industry pledges its combined strength to maintain the best standards of advertising and publicity procedure. To that end the industry pledges itself to and shall adhere to the regulations promulgated by and within the industry to assure the attainment of such purpose.

ARTICLE VIII
MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

PART 1. Any Exhibitor forwarding or delivering to another Exhibitor a print of a motion picture at the request or upon the order of the Distributor thereof, shall, but only for such purpose, be deemed to be the agent of such Distributor.

PART 2. (a) Wherever in this Code arbitration of any matter is provided for, other than arbitration as provided in the Optional Standard License Agreement (1933) or as may be otherwise specifically provided for, such matter shall be submitted for determination to an Arbitration Board. Such Arbitration Board shall consist of four (4) members. Each of the groups concerned in such matter shall appoint two of such members. In any such case where arbitration is to be used as provided in this Code, upon the written request of either group to the dispute or controversy the group making such request shall name therein two arbitrators, stating the business address and business or business connection of each, and shall designate therein the date, time and place of the hearing of such controversy. The date of such hearing shall not be earlier than seven (7) days from the date of the sending of such notice, unless it shall be claimed in such notice that irreparable injury will result unless there is a speedy determination of such controversy, in which case such hearing may be designated to be held earlier than the said seven-day period.

(b) Within five (5) days from the mailing of such request for arbitration, or within twenty-four (24) hours, if the date of such hearing shall be earlier than seven (7) days from the date of the sending of such notice, the group upon whom such request is made shall name two arbitrators in a written notice mailed or delivered to the other party, stating therein the business address and business or business connection of each arbitrator. If either group fails or refuses to name the arbitrators as herein provided, or if any arbitrator so named shall fail or refuse to act, or be unable to serve, or shall be challenged, and others are or another arbitrator qualified and then available to act is not appointed, others or another arbitrator may be appointed by the other group as the case may be.

Dietz Heads Committee On Code Ad Conformity

Howard Dietz, advertising, publicity and exploitation director for MGM, has been named chairman of a committee of three to administer the advertising clause in the industry code signed this week by President Roosevelt. S. Charles Einfeld of Warner and John Flinn, representing the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, are the other members. Meetings have already been held at the Hays office in New York with J. J. McCarthy, representing the MPPDA.

Memphis Mayor Forbids Standing Room Ticket Sale

Mayor Overton of Memphis has issued an order to all local theatres, forbidding them to sell tickets on the basis of standing room, when all seats are sold. Tickets may be sold only when there is sufficient provision for standing in a lobby. The ruling came as a result of the crowds which thronged the Warner for the first night of "Footlight Parade." The theatre indicated the ruling cut heavily into its second day's receipts.

UFA MAINTAINS LEVEL IN YEAR'S TURNOVER

Gross Income Drops Only 3 Per Cent Despite Severe Test of General Business; 20 German Films Made, 18 Are Foreign

by J. K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

In the face of a serious year for the motion picture business of Europe in general, Ufa has succeeded in maintaining close to the same level of turnover as in the 1931-32 period. The amount was reichsmarks 28,048,724 as against 29,011,587, a decline of only 3 per cent in total income. A dividend will not be paid, however, the decision being instead to continue the policy of filling up the sinking fund. In the previous year 4 per cent was paid.

The German industry was subjected to severe trial during the year, what with the decrease of theatre attendance due to steadily growing unemployment, the insane competition which resulted, the depreciated foreign currencies, the exchange restrictions, and the quota regulations. The Government is going on with reconstruction of the business as undertaken by the Spitzen-organization and now a part of the program of the State Film Chamber.

20 German Films, 18 Foreign

The production of Ufa features in 1932-33 amounted to 20 German films and 18 in foreign languages. Besides 19 German and 20 foreign educational films, 10 short features and 201 newsreels were made by Ufa. The production of industrial and advertising films was increased. The turnover of this department showed an upward trend.

The various Ufa studios have been used for 66 per cent of their total capacity. The same percentage was reached in 1931-32, compared with 83 per cent in 1930-31. The use of the studios was higher in the first six months of the year (75 per cent). In the first month of the current year it decreased, due to the smaller number of German producers. The number of subsidiaries was diminished, being 73 in 1931-32 compared with 64 in the current year. The reduction of turnover in distribution amounted to 8 per cent. Overhead expenses and service charges were reduced.

Following were the attendances at Ufa cinemas in Germany in the last three years, including Danzig and the Saar territory: 1932-33, 28,412,409; 1931-32, 30,669,787; 1930-31, 29,333,967.

Admission Prices Reduced

Production of income of the theatres was greater than the decrease in attendances, owing to a lowering of the admission prices.

Ufa increased its theatre circuit with the following cinemas: Universum Dresden, seating capacity 1,067; Phoebus Palast Munich, seating capacity, 2,175; Ufa Palast Nuremberg, 2,041; Königstadt Berlin, seating capacity $1,200; Gloria Palast Harburg, seating capacity 1,189; Ufa Palast Krefeld, seating capacity 923. Three other cinemas have been turned over to competitive companies.

The Ufa circuit (including the Free State Danzig and the Saar territory) on May 31, 1933, amounted to 97 halls with a total seating capacity of 106,302, compared with 97 theatres with 103,299 seats on May 31, 1932.

Although the depreciation of foreign currencies and the quota regulations affected the foreign business, the turnover of the Ufa in foreign countries for the months June, 1932, to January, 1933, amounted to reichsmarks 6,100,000 compared with reichsmarks 6,000,000 in the same months of the preceding year. A boycott of the German film by several countries after Jan. 31, 1933, resulted in a reduction of the income from the foreign market, but failed to weaken the position of the company in other countries.

Following are highlights of the Ufa statement:

	(in million reichsmarks)
Nominal capital	45.	45	45

Buildings in the Reich	3,829,100
Factories and other buildings	3,978,362
Reconstruction on houses and theatres	1,959,019
Machines and power stations	2,884,069

Ufa disposed of 196 patents and specifications. The film represented a value of reichsmarks 21,339,323 compared with 21,746,647 in the preceding year.

Ufa controlled 64 subsidiaries in Germany and foreign countries and was represented with reichsmarks 16,360,642 in these various enterprises.

The unfinished and finished but not yet shown pictures represent a value of reichsmarks 3,652,305.

Liabilities towards bank amounted to reichsmarks 7,443,323. For increased production, especially for the production of foreign feature films in the summer months, an agreement was effected with the "Treuhand-Verwaltung für das Deutsch-Holländische Finanzabkommen G.m.b.H. Berlin," which originally was to run until Dec. 31, 1934, and involving the sum of three million Dutch florins. This credit has been extended to Nov. 30, 1936. Up to May 31, 1933, reichsmarks 4,428,393 equal to 2,599,585 Dutch florins were used out of this fund.

WHERE DOES THE

As you read this the hands of millions of people are shoving their money through the box-office grilles of hundreds of theatres throughout the country in the greatest day-and-date presentation in show history!

Millions of dollars are being exchanged for joyful hours! "Little Women" has made this a real Thanksgiving for the showmen of America.

Where does the money come from? . . . it's the "earmarked" money we told you about! . . . the money reserved, set aside by its owners for this show and this show alone, for no other picture has had such magic to play divinely upon the heart strings of young and old.

That is why attendance records in every city are being broken, why runs are being extended, why doors are being opened earlier and extra shows given to accommodate the crowds.

It's the money "earmarked" for "Little Women" that is coming in!

COLUMBIA'S QUARTER EARNINGS $241,778

Equals $1.36 a Share on 169,359 Common Shares, After All Charges, Against $1.23 for Same Period Last Year

Earnings of Columbia Pictures Corporation for the three months ended Sept. 30, 1933, continued on an upward trend, totaling $241,778, which, after all charges, preferred dividends and provision for federal income tax, is equal to approximately $1.36 a share on 169,359 common shares outstanding. This compares with $220,027, or $1.23 a share on the common, for the same quarterly period last year.

Typical of a similar situation in other companies, Columbia's current report to stockholders indicated that an analysis of the returns for the third period, and the subsequent profit, shows a substantial increase in earnings from the foreign field, because of the greater value of foreign currencies in terms of the dollar. (The foreign currency situation and its relation to foreign distribution activities of American companies are analyzed in detail on page 11.)

Columbia's consolidated balance sheet as of September 30 showed total current and working assets of $4,881,294, and current liabilities of $953,214. Total assets were $6,668,942.

Included in current assets were: Cash, $960,224; advances to outside producers and accounts receivable, $782,509, and released and completed productions, film stock, advertising accessories, scenarios, $3,138,560.

The company listed investments of $186,313 in, and advances to wholly-owned subsidiaries and branches abroad.

Fixed assets were $1,294,136, after reserves of $795,881 for depreciation. The company had prepaid $173,414 of expenses.

Consolidated statement of operations for the three months ended September 30, including operations in foreign countries, follows:

Net profit before amortization of film, interest charges and federal income tax*..		$1,445,114.20
Deduct: Amortization of film..	$1,190,178.43
Interest charges	1,018.73

Net profit before federal income tax.....		$282,782.02
Provision for federal income tax.....		41,003.39
Net profit carried to surplus.....		$241,778.63

After deducting $7,042.05 depreciation of furniture and fixtures in head office and branches charged to profit and loss.*

Depreciation of studios and studio equipment during the period amounting to $38,710.92 has been capitalized as production cost and is being written off as film amortization.

Following is Columbia's earned surplus account for the third quarter of 1933, also embracing operations of foreign branches:

Balance, July 1, 1933.....	$1,984,938.58
Deduct: Preferred dividends.....	12,945.75
	$1,971,992.83
Add: Net profit for the three months to September 30, 1933.....	241,778.63
Balance, September 30, 1933, carried to balance sheet	$2,213,771.46

Principal liabilities were: Current, $953,214; mortgages and purchase contracts payable after one year, $218,136; deferred income, $230,986; reserves for contingencies, $400,411; capital surplus, $61,917; earned surplus, $2,213,771, and capital stock of $2,069,196, divided as follows:

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The big show staged by William Fox at Washington for the senators who are digging into Wall Street's motion picture manipulations, was at least successful from the standpoint of bulk press notices, getting more space for Mr. Fox than the biggest super-epic of the old Theda Bara days.

Mr. Fox even tried to promote a bit of press agentry on the witness stand for the Fox book which Upton Sinclair compiled.

Asked to tell the story of his transactions with the bankers, Fox attempted to place in the record a copy of his book. But Ferdinand Pecora, senatorial counsel, objected. If he hadn't, the newspapers would have had to run it as a fiction serial in the magazine sections.

Replying to Mr. Pecora's objection, Fox said: "Well, I can't tell the story, then, because I brought the wrong grip and left all my papers at home." Which would seem to indicate that Mr. Fox's memory was not up to par.

"Tell us the best you can from memory," Pecora urged. And without any hesitancy, Mr. Fox then proved that his mental retentiveness for names, dates and places is most trustworthy. Several dozen newspaper pages proved that.

One of the hundreds of newspaper pieces about the Washington situation was written by Louis Gannett for the New York Herald-Tribune. Said Mr. Gannett:

> "'Upton Sinclair Presents William Fox' reads the title of a book that appeared last spring; and some of us wondered how Sinclair dared publish it, in view of all the violent reflections it contained upon names great in downtown New York. There were weird stories about the book, too: rumors that Fox had contracted with Sinclair to write it for him, and then made his peace with the wolves of Wall Street, leaving Sinclair to finance the venture alone. And now the newspapers are writing a book singularly like it, in the testimony coming out in Washington; but this time the title seems to read 'Ferdinand Pecora Presents William Fox'."

In a telegram from her home at Beverly Hills, Sylvia Sidney asked her attorney in New York to proceed speedily with the suit of her father, Victor Kosow, who, after many years, seeks to annul her adoption by Dr. Sigmund Sidney, her foster-father. Miss Sidney told the attorney that she needed "peace of mind," without which, she added, her new Paramount picture, "involving an investment of $400,000 to my employers," would be in jeopardy.

We have a vague recollection of Miss Sidney having abandoned work last August in "The Way to Love," despite the pleas and entreaties of her employers and fellow workers. Retakes finally cost the company a neat $100,000.

Mr. Hal Horne, personally, does not believe in the principles of the NRA labor provisions. He frequently arrives at United Artists' advertising-publicity sanctorum at seven in the morning—which is practically the middle of the night for most of New York's film executives.

Spokesmen for the girl performers in burlesque urged the NRA to set a $30 a week minimum for the chorines on the ground that under the present low wages, dancers are in constant exposure to a "life of shame." Are we to assume, then, that a burlesque dancer cannot be saintly without a $30 guarantee?

The "luck of the Irish" also applies to Sam Goldwyn.

Mr. Goldwyn took a licking to the tune of $300,000 when he junked Anna Sten's "Nana" and started all over. But he has gotten that back, and more, as a result of appreciation of the pound sterling, which has accounted for improved rental profits in England for "Kid From Spain."

In order to build up the grosses in England, Mr. Goldwyn followed his theory that "nothing ventured, nothing gained," and took $25,000 from his own pockets for a special advertising campaign in British newspapers.

Captain Volney Pfeiffer, the distinguished animal expert of William R. Ferguson's MGM exploitation staff, was invited to appear at the last Sunday evening gathering of the Catholic Actors' Guild in New York, and to bring with him the two penguins which Mr. Ferguson imported from the Antarctic, or some place, as exploitation subjects for "Eskimo."

The captain was demonstrating the gentility of his trained rock-hoppers, and, holding one in his arms, said: "Kiss poppa, baby." Apparently something went wrong. The great auk opened its beak and fastened itself securely to Mr. Pfeiffer's schnozzola, doing great damage.

After the performance, Mr. Gerald Griffin, president of the Guild, and other high dignitaries, rushed to the stage and congratulated the captain. They thought it was a great trick. But Volney thinks that he has on his hands a couple of "jackass" penguins of the genus Spheniscus.

Almost any day we expect to hear of a wholesale migration of writers from Hollywood to Russia—which might be a good thing—now that Columbia's Lewis Milestone has returned from Moscow with stories about fabulous authors' salaries in the Soviet. He says they are paid 30,000 gold rubles a month, which, at the current rate of exchange—about 86 cents—would approximate $25,800, or $309,600 a year. That makes those enormous salaries of Hollywood—over which the Administration seems to be annoyed—appear like the weekly stipend of a child laborer working part time in a New England textile mill.

However, we might warn our ambitious Hollywood writers who contemplate making a trip to the Russian paradise for the literati, that there is a catch or two to Russia's rubles. The money cannot be taken out of the country. And after amassing a pile, the Soviet will probably "borrow" it.

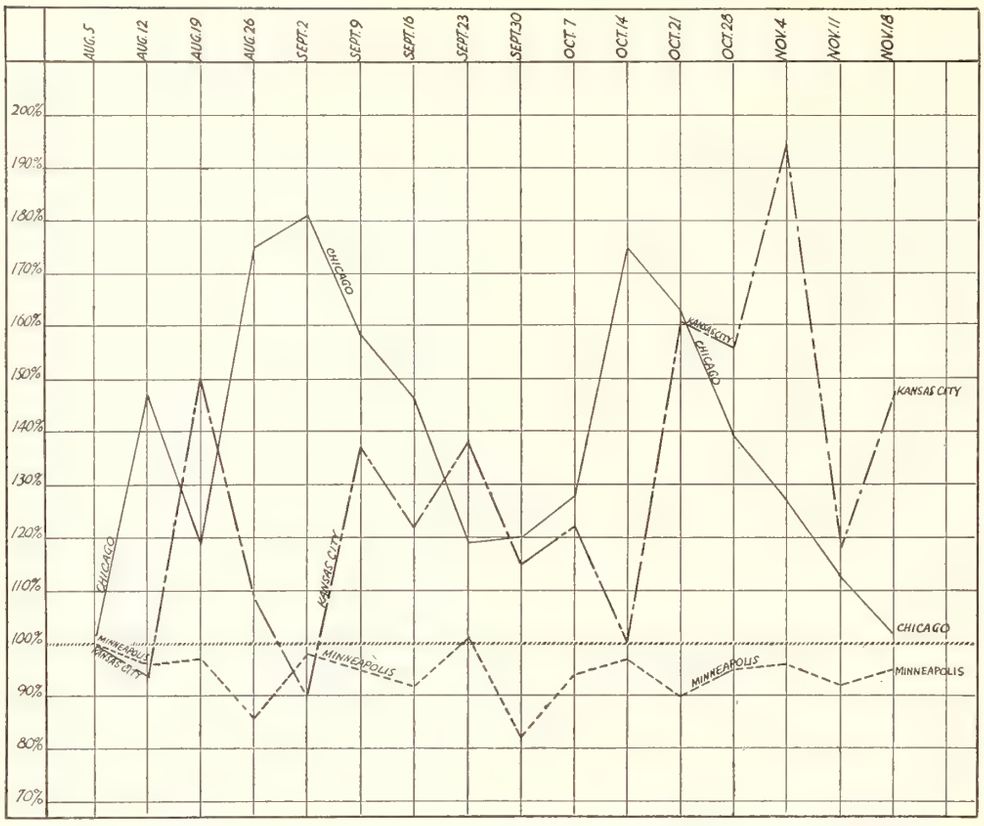
To the popular tune of "Hollywood fascinates me," nineteen-year-old Janet Snowden, heiress to oil millions, arrived at the front gates to the studios the other morning to try a career in motion pictures, traveling incognito and with a matronly guardian. What an approach!

Young Janet got herself some page one publicity in August when she married and abandoned, all within five days, one of Italy's young princes, Don Francisco di Sirignano Caravita. The wealthy Miss Snowden said her husband deceived her as to his financial standing.



The subject of this graph is the business done in three Midwestern cities—Chicago, Minneapolis and Kansas City—for the sixteen-weeks period from August 5, 1933, to November 18. The receipts in each city for the first week of this period, the one ended August 5, are taken as 100 per cent for that city.

FRANK WILSTACH DEAD; IN THEATRE ALL HIS LIFE

Handled Press Relations in M. P. P. D. A. Office Five Years; Compiled 'Dictionary of Similes,' Wrote 'Wild Bill Hickok'

Frank Jenner Wilstach, handling press relations and assistant to Will H. Hays in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, died in Manhattan Hospital, New York, on Tuesday after an illness of four weeks. He was 68 years of age.

Frank J. Wilstach

The funeral was to be private, by desire of Mrs. Wilstach. Interment was to be from W. J. Dargeon Chapel, on Friday afternoon, to be followed by cremation, in accordance with Mr. Wilstach's expressed desire.

For more than five years Mr. Wilstach was attached to the New York office of the MPPDA. He was well known to reporters of the New York trade and newspaper press; to "leg-men" and dramatic critics throughout the country; to many in every walk of theatrical life.

Entered Film Business in 1923

His entire life was devoted to the theatre—even after his entrance into motion picture affairs back in 1923, when he joined Famous Players, which subsequently became Famous Players-Lasky, and later Paramount Publix. His wide knowledge and data of things theatrical kept his telephone at the Hays office constantly buzzing.

Born in Lafayette, Ind., in 1865, he studied at Purdue University from 1879 to 1881. In 1889 he married Edith May Hudnall of San Francisco.

Embarking on his theatrical career the same year, he was business manager for De Wolf Hopper for two years. From 1902 to 1908 he managed Viola Allen, and subsequently handled the theatrical affairs of William Faversham, Mrs. Leslie Carter, E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe, Weber and Fields, Lillian Russell, Mrs. Patrick Campbell, Frank Daniels and many others. For years he was advance publicity man for the Shuberts, and, following this, was general press representative for Sam E. Harris.

Re-discovered Surtees

Mr. Wilstach also has been credited with re-discovery of the English novelist, Robert Smith Surtees, whose stories of a cockney grocer are believed to have suggested a basis for the "Pickwick Papers" of Charles Dickens. Mr. Wilstach's newspaper articles on Surtees 25 years ago caused considerable comment throughout the literary world.

Mr. Wilstach had collected similes for more than 20 years, and his "Dictionary," published in 1916 and revised in 1924, is said to be the most complete standard work of its kind in the world. Classical as well as modern writers have been represented in this work, which was supplemented each year by the best similes the author and his friends could gather from current periodicals, books and newspapers. In his "Best Similes of 1932," Mr. Wilstach observed that "sports writers, columnists and motion picture critics were becoming prolific simile collectors."

The story of how Frank Wilstach happened to pick similes as the object of a collection is as strange as any.

The Story of "Wildfire"

Many years ago, while working on a Boston newspaper, he found three different newspapers on his desk, all of them using in their first paragraphs on a state house story the identical phrase, "The news spread like wildfire." This upset Mr. Wilstach.

"Wildfire," he said, "is erysipelas. Look it up. Wildfire is a disease which sheep get. Furthermore, wildfire is a bolt of sheet lightning, unaccompanied by thunder. So I said to myself: 'I'm going to end this wildfire business.' And that's how I started out collecting similes."

Mr. Wilstach's collection grew and grew, until he found it feasible to have them published in dictionary form. Among those who contributed and augmented his collection were Benjamin De Casseres, Arthur "Bugs" Baer, Jim Tully and H. L. Mencken, all of whom were great personal friends.

An exceedingly accurate description of Frank Wilstach was offered this week, as follows:

"Tall, erect, with silvered hair, a florid face and a persistent habit of peering over the top of his spectacles, Mr. Wilstach had acquaintances in every part of the country. His one boast was that there was not a city or village with more than 2,000 population in which he had not stayed overnight at some time during his career as press agent. In later years this resulted in his most notable eccentricity, the habit of constantly glancing at his watch during conversations as if he had to catch a train. His friends never could make him realize that he no longer was on the road. . . ."

Hays Pays Tribute

Few men have had a wider acquaintance among authors, actors and producers in the entertainment business. He had an encyclopaedic knowledge of the theatre, and many notable figures of the American stage were helped in their rise to fame by the exploitation campaigns conducted by him.

"Kindly, sympathetic, able, his loss will be felt deeply by the many thousands that came in contact with Frank J. Wilstach, both in business as well as in social life," said Mr. Hays Tuesday. "He was a man of sterling character."

Mr. Wilstach will be recalled as the author of "Wilstach's Dictionary of Similes," and "Wild Bill Hickok, The Prince of Pistoleers." He was a member of the Lambs Club in New York.

He is survived by his wife, a son, John, and a brother, Paul, also a theatrical manager.

Poli-Sagal Take Fox New England

S. Z. Poli and Louis M. Sagal this week resumed operation of the former Fox New England circuit when the houses reverted to Poli-New England. Originally it was contemplated that the 18 houses would pass into the hands of Mr. Poli and Mr. Sagal on November 15, but because of delays in reorganization, final negotiations were put off until November 29.

The two veteran theatre men will enter into a three-year management contract with Poli-New England Corporation, in accordance with the reorganization plans. Several deals for the theatre circuit have been under way for many months, Loew's and Harry C. Arthur having been reported as offering $10,000 weekly rental for the group.

Within the next month Halsey, Stuart & Company will issue a list of new securities for the corporation, with an issue of $7,074,200 in first mortgage five per cent bonds, due 1958; $7,084,200 in general mortgage five per cent income bonds, due 1983; $600,000 in five per cent unsecured income notes, due 1958, and 5,000 no par value common stock. Meanwhile in Bridgeport, Conn., Federal Judge Edwin S. Thomas authorized payment of $195,603 for fees and disbursements in connection with legal services by the receivers of Fox-New England. The receivers are Benjamin Slade, Thomas J. Spellacy and Samuel Spring.

Feature on Catholic Church To Have Premiere This Week

"Through the Centuries," a feature picture produced by Beacon Films, Inc., will have its world premiere on Friday evening, December 1, at the Warner theatre, New York, before an invited audience. This engagement will be limited to two weeks.

The story, written by Francis X. Talbot, S.J., tells of the growth and missionary adventures of the Catholic Church from the crucifixion of Christ to the present day.

Kent Returns From Europe Accompanied by Mark Ostrer

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, returned to New York from a European business trip Tuesday. He was accompanied by Walter J. Hutchinson, managing director of Fox in England, and Mark Ostrer, managing director of Gaumont-British.

Mr. Kent probably will remain in New York, pending organization activities of the code authority, his appointment to which was officially confirmed Tuesday.

Universal to Move

Universal's home office will be moved from 730 Fifth Avenue, New York, to Radio City around the first of the year, if lease negotiations are consummated within the next few days. Universal's 10-year lease on its present quarters expires May 1, 1934.

Double Bill Ban Lifted in Germany

The unexpected relaxation of the German government's film policy, permitting the practice of doube-featuring among the nation's exhibitors, will have little beneficial effect on American companies importing films into Germany. The permission to run more than single-feature programs carries with it a proviso that the second feature must not be more than 1,600 meters in length. Few American features could possibly be cut down in conformity and still retain any semblance of entertainment.

Berlin film leaders anticipate the single feature policy will be restored within a few months, according to George R. Canty, American trade commissioner at Berlin. A feature initially of the Film Chamber's recovery program was the elimination of double bills, but the order to that effect was almost wholly ignored by the rank and file of German exhibitors, seeking to safeguard their investments. The Film Chamber, following the special election, seems suddenly anxious to appease the provincial theatre owners, and consequently rescinded the ban on double bills.

During September, 1933, it is reported, there were 381 theatres operating in Berlin, with an attendance total of 4,148,783, and total receipts of 3,257,206 marks. Corresponding figures for September, 1932, showed 379 theatres, an attendance total of 4,502,872, and receipts aggregating 3,486,-140 marks.

Tri-Ergon Wins Injunction Against Eastern Theatres

An injunction restraining Wilmer & Vincent Corporation theatres and Altoona Publix Corporation from making further use of sound equipment allegedly infringing patents held by the American Tri-Ergon Corporation and Tri-Ergon Holding, A.G., of St. Gall, Switzerland, was granted Monday in United States district court, Scranton, Pa., by Judge Albert W. Johnson.

The ruling also requests an accounting of profits. William Fox is the owner of the American rights of Tri-Ergon sound patents, and several suits, involving similar charges, are pending in state and federal courts against large producers, exhibitors, RCA Victor and Electrical Research Products, Inc.

The American Society for the Protection of the Motion Picture Theatre last week issued a warning to exhibitors as a result of the Scranton decision, stating that the decision establishes the American Tri-Ergon Corporation's right to collect damages from all exhibitors of sound motion pictures for their unauthorized use of these patents.

Sam Jacobson Resigns Universal Studio Post

Sam Jacobson, Universal production executive, resigned last week as a result of disagreements over salary, according to reports from Hollywood. Carl Laemmle, Jr., has accepted the resignation. It is understood Mr. Jacobson has received an offer to return to New York, where he formerly edited Universal's newsreel, to take charge of eastern production for a major producer.

IN MEMORIAM

KANE OF PROHIBITION OFF ON BIG TRIP

Robert T ("Bob") Kane, of the Prohibition Film Corporation, is leaving New York within the next few days on an extended tour of the United States and Canada for the purpose of closing contracts which are being held in abeyance for territorial rights on his company's big feature, "Prohibition." Mr. Kane will make practically every important motion picture trade centre in the country, going south to the Gulf of Mexico and west to the Pacific Coast.

"BOB" KANE

The Prohibition people have been quite successful in their campaign with the big feature and are in possession of satisfactory offers for practically all available territory. Just as soon as the contracts have been signed the prints of the feature which the various territorial rights buyers wish to buy will be delivered and the picture will be released throughout the country.

Mr. Kane announces that just as soon as "Prohibition" is in the hands of the territorial rights men, another big feature even more timely in its subject matter will be produced, the same capital promoting it.

Casting about in our imperishable memory for an item suitable for the signalization of the end of the Noble Experiment, we came upon a merry glimmering that sent us, bent like a beagle to the trail, into the archives of Quigley Publications, from which we emerged in dusty glee with this choice item pertaining to the career of handsome Bob Kane, the only producer who looks exactly like a matinee idol. It was in Motion Picture News of July 25, in the far away year of 1915, that Mr. Kane's yeoman service to the cause of Art and Prohibition was thus recorded. It is perhaps fitting to remark, without prejudice, that a lot of water and seltzer have gone over the dam since the days when Mr. Kane went out to sell "Prohibition."

Wisconsin Group Opposes Doubles

The MPTO of Wisconsin, in the final session of its annual convention at Milwaukee last Thursday, declared double featuring an uneconomic practice, and voted its elimination by the establishment of regional districts. In addition was voted a plan seeking the cooperation of distributors in setting back release dates to at least six months in order to discourage duals among those exhibitors who insist on maintaining the policy.

Fred S. Meyer, who was re-elected president of the organization, agreed that it cannot compel exhibitors to discard double billing, but indicated his belief that delayed release dates will be an important factor. The board of directors, now numbering 21, will determine the breakup of the state into districts. Regional vice presidents are to be appointed to handle enforcement of the program.

The unit went on record in strong opposition to salacious advertising, and voted for strong enforcement of the morality code, support of the NRA and an industry code. A decision was reached to fight, through the MPTOA, the music tax of 10 per cent per seat under the present copyright law. A suggestion, proposed by Mr. Meyer, was adopted, making the MPTOA the criterion as to what is and is not non-theatrical competition. The organization voted to increase the membership dues from five to 10 cents per seat. A check showed 137 members paid up. The by-laws were amended to permit exchange and union men to hold office.

Officers elected, in addition to Mr. Meyers, were as follows: Jack Sillıman, Appleton, vice-president; W. L. Ainsworth of Fon du Lac and Ernest Langemack of Milwaukee, secretary and treasurer, respectively. H. S. Gallup of Marquette, Mich.; George Huebner of Oconomowoc, and Max Krofta of Racine were dropped as directors, but the following were re-elected: Mr. Ainsworth, A. C. Berkholtz, West Bend; H. C. Buchanan, Superior; Frank Koppelberger, LaCrosse; Martin Thomas, Iron Mountain, Mich.; L. F. Thurwachter, Waukesha, and the following from Milwaukee: Earl and George Fischer, H. F. Fitzgerald, J. S. Grauman, Mr. Gutenberg, Mr. Langemack, Paul Lengheinrich, Jr., Mr. Meyer and David E. Weshner. New directors are: William Roob, Port Washington; Robert Buiterman, Manitowoc; Mr. Silliman, Appleton; Ross Baldwin, A. D. Kvool and Johnny Jones of Milwaukee.

Butterfield Closing Eight

The Butterfield circuit of Michigan, with headquarters in Detroit, will close eight houses December 2, though all are expected to reopen after the holidays. Included are: Bijou, Battle Creek; Palace, Flint; Capitol, Jackson; Gladmer, Lansing; Strand, Pontiac; Desmond, Port Huron; Franklin, Saginaw; Martha Washington, Ypsilanti.

James M. Brennan Dead

James M. Brennan, 60, theatre builder and operator in Jersey City, died last week at his home there following a heart attack. He owned three local houses.

Universal Rings The Bell Again!

Close on the heels of those two smash hits, "Only Yesterday" and "The Invisible Man," comes the third one. Whoopee! Three in a row!

Says Hollywood Reporter:

"Universal, with 'Counsellor at Law,' steps right to the fore with a Class A picture for all classes. This one is full of the stuff that all audiences not only understand, but like . . . Universal has spared not a thing to make it a top-notch attraction . . . should do big things in your theatre."

Says Daily Variety:

"Exceptionally fine blending of superb performances, direction and presentation, with John Barrymore leading an array of attractive names, makes 'Counsellor at Law' a box-office natural. Appeal should be as strong for men as for women . . . Sock, comedy, dramatic buildup and theme values of the play have been retained."

COPELAND JOINS INDUSTRY DEFENSE AT SENATE QUIZ ON CRIME CONTROL

Milliken Reopens Attack on Research Council Findings As Short and Forman Testify; Dr. Simon Hits Censorship

That oft-refuted charge that motion pictures contribute to child delinquency came in for heated repetition and rebuttal at hearings conducted in New York last week by the United States Senate sub-committee on crime control. The two-day session, which closed Friday, was at the Bar Association building in New York, where the first Motion Picture Code hearings by Sol. A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator, were conducted in June.

Highlights of the argumentation and concomitant developments were:

Rev. William Short, director of the Motion Picture Research Council, charged that "motion pictures as now shown induce strongly to crime."

Henry James Forman, compiler of a summary of the nine-volumed report of the Council, financed by the Payne Foundation, declared that studies at Yale had indicated that children who attended motion pictures regularly had lower deportment records, lower study grades and a lower spirit of cooperation than other children.

These arguments were challenged by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; Gabriel L. Hess, of counsel for the MPPDA; Anthony Muto, representing the Film Boards of Trade, and Dr. Carleton Simon, who told the subcommittee that statistics "actually indicate that crime among youths was more prevalent formerly than at present."

Senator Royal S. Copeland said he believed the industry was working to improve itself and added: "I am opposed to official censorship because in the last analysis the public must decide what it wants."

In the November issue of the Parents Magazine, George J. Hecht, publisher, proposed local ordinances throughout the nation which would designate that at least one afternoon and one evening performance a week be limited exclusively to family audience pictures so adjudged by a local motion picture commission.

Former Governor Milliken, a leader of the defense of the motion picture business at the hearings, declared the investigators had used improper "technique" in their researches, charging that their questions had been directed to abnormal children, that "leading" questions had been given, and that case histories of the children had not been submitted.

Mr. Milliken said the producers for years had been working with thousands of groups to effect improvement. To his assertion that members of the advisory board of the Council itself were not familiar with the findings of its own investigators, Mr. Short replied that the conclusions had been withheld so that those conducting the work would not be open to accusations that they had been influenced from the outside.

The testimony of Rev. Mr. Short, Mr. Forman and Prof. Paul G. Cressey of New York University was interrupted at times by the representatives of the industry. This prompted editorial observations by the New York Herald-Tribune, which, while decrying any form of censorship, said:

"The industry must show an honest concern for the fact that its output is not only diversion for jaded adults, but a big part of young America's educational environment. . . . Such tactics as the film company spokesmen employed not only rouse the curiosity of all sober Americans in the charges against 'crime films,' but predispose each and all of us to suspect that they may be valid."

The way was paved for the film defense at the hearing when Dr. Simon launched an attack on censorship, basing his remarks on his "experience during 35 years of contact with the criminal underworld in my researches as criminologist and my close association with the police department in the City of New York and other organizations elsewhere."

Crime cannot be suppressed by suppressing news of crime, Dr. Simon said, yet "allegedly scientific conclusions drawn from studies of delinquent children are becoming the vehicles for a new wave of propaganda directed against the freedom of speech, the freedom of the press, and free expression through the radio and on the screen." He warned that if these "studies" were correct as to conclusions, newspapers could not justifiably publish details of a train wreck, a suicide, a baseball game or even congressional debates.

"To the minds so constituted or warped," said the speaker, "there is more suggestive nudity in the statues and paintings of the Metropolitan Museum of Art than even in the most sophisticated of motion picture productions."

Dr. Simon referred indirectly to the Research Council report, which was treated in detail in the June 10 issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD and answered the Council's findings with quotations from the report of the British Commission on Educational and Cultural Films, "The Film in National Life," published last year.

Fewer Youthful Criminals

With statistics from New York state prisons—Sing Sing, Clinton and Auburn—Dr. Simon showed that 50 years ago the percentage of youthful criminals was greater than that of older age, but that comparisons with criminality of 35 years ago proved that "we had more serious crime formerly than at present."

The Research Council's investigations also were referred to by the publisher of Parents' Magazine, but as having "proved conclusively the harm being done to the juvenile mind." With the caution that "censorship is no solution," Mr. Hecht proposed that certain times be provided, by local legislation, for the showing of "family audience" type pictures. He suggested enactment of local ordinances "in as many communities as possible" providing for licensing of motion picture theatres on condition that on at least one afternoon and evening, on Friday or Saturday or Sunday, and at as many additional performances as the exhibitor might desire, "there shall be exhibited only those films which have been approved as being suitable for family audiences by a local motion picture commission."

Under the terms of the "model ordinance," children under 10 years of age would not be admitted to motion picture theatres except at the "family audience" performance, and then only if accompanied by a parent, teacher or guardian. Those in the age group 10 to 17, inclusive, would be admitted to the "family audience" performance unaccompanied, but to other showings only with guardian, teacher or parent.

HE'S PAID FOR SWATTING STARS

Many a person may have had an impulse to swat a screen star, on occasion. It may have been a director when the sequence has gone wrong, or perhaps even a patron. But here's a man who gets paid for it.

Universal Newsreel in its current issue tells all about it, and shows Ed Keyes going about his duties.

It all has to do with house flies and the filming of feature pictures. Mr. Keyes is privileged to strike anyone, anywhere, if there's a Musca Domestica buzzing about. Directors and supervisors say thousands of dollars have been lost each year when flies, attracted by heat and the lights in the studio, have landed on the faces of featured players working in front of the cameras.

After many expensive devices had been tried out, and found wanting, Ed Keyes solved the problem. Before going to work he massages his head with molasses and arms himself with a fly swatter. He roams about the set, getting close to players as possible and attracting flies to himself.

Seattle Operators Get $68.33 Per Week, Not $50

Operators in downtown Seattle theatres get $68.33 per week instead of the $50 reported by MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S correspondent in that territory in the October 21 issue. Reports for the salaries of stage hands also were inaccurate, according to O. M. Jacobson, IATSE representative in Tacoma. Stage hands receive $11 per day and not $6, as the article reported.

King for A Night

Comedy-Drama

Many things in this show besides the basic prizefighter angle should prove selling points. Predominantly a composite character study, it offers a different romantic twist, has several unusual comedy situations, rises to many exciting points and concludes with a stark dramatic finale. Because of the subject treated and the characters woven in, as well as their achievements and disappointments, human interest is strongly maintained.

The title being practically meaningless and quite apt to suggest something else, story content and personalities seem to be the important factors in drawing attention. The fact that it is not a picture likely to arouse spontaneous enthusiasm calls for energetic application of the values at hand.

The story concerns a minister's son and daughter, small towners. Bud knows how to use his dukes and he and his sister are pals in pulling the wool over their father's eyes. Eventually belting over a pug in the local club, a fact which straight-laced brother John calls to the reverend's attention, Bud casts aside all sham and under the guidance of a couple of managers embarks on a fight career. In New York, as a soda jerker, fights being few and far between, he meets Evelyn a second time, and as comedy situations intervene, she introduces him to Douglas, big shot promoter. In the meantime, sister Lillian has come to town and with Evelyn's assistance has obtained a night-club job. Douglas becomes interested in her and she, realizing that being nice to the promoter will insure Bud a short cut to success, strings along. Several bits of fight atmosphere interluding, Bud is in line for a shot at the Champ. The day of the battle he learns about the Douglas-Lillian relationship. He arrives in the promoter's apartment just as Lillian has shot Douglas.

Back home the Reverend Gloves family listens to the radio broadcast of Bud's thrilling win as the event is shown on the screen. Next morning they read that the new champion has been arrested for murder. Covering his sister, Bud confesses and is sentenced to death. Reverend Gloves rushes to his son's side. A dramatic, tear-stirring father and son sequence precedes Bud's death march. He bravely spurns his father's offers of consolation as the dimming lights indicate the switch has been thrown to snuff out his life, a sacrifice for a crime he did not commit, a martyr that his sister's honor might be spotless.

Finely done as is the finale, it nevertheless is the sad ending that always constitutes a showmanship problem. It creates a situation that makes the picture difficult to sell. Getting around it resolves itself into a question as to how well you understand your audiences. Morris handles the part expertly, which suggests that his name and picture character be given considerable attention. Play up the minister son angle, the boy who had his hour of glory know that no matter how tough his ring battle had been, he still had a sterner one to fight. There's quite a moral lesson in the picture, with which to appeal to men and women, supplemented by the fight action for the men and the father-son angle for the women.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Lady Killer

(Warner Bros.)

Comedy

Comedy is the keynote as "Lady Killer" takes a broad satirical dip into the inside workings of crookdom and slips behind the scenes of a motion picture studio. Action is fast and exciting, dialogue punchy and full of lines that can be interpreted in many ways. Both generate lots of fast, furious fun. Cagney wallops the dames again. In turn he gets pushed around himself a bit.

Covering a wide range of activities, the fun motif predominating, semi-episodic treatment makes possible many diverse audience-interesting angles. Drama, topically colored, features the early inside crook-working sequences. Farcical foolishness, love interest, together with pointing light ridicule at Hollywood, feature the in-between action. These scenes are laugh-riots as Cagney, his own fan mail army, plots himself into stardom. Melodrama, in which comedy is not ignored, is the vein of the wind-up scene wherein the two distinct stories are merged.

The show makes no pretense to be anything else than every-day entertainment, and besides the grown-ups, there's lots of laugh content for the youngsters.

Dan, made a sucker by the Myra-Spade gang, gets wise, cuts himself in on their penny ante racket and turns it into big business. Things getting hot after Mrs. Marley is victimized, Dan and Myra land in Los Angeles. Picked up by the cops, Dan is in the cooler as Myra blows with his dough. Hired as an extra, there's lots of fun as Dan, falling in love with Lois, the studio's prize beauty, gets hep to the racket of how stars are made and by writing himself bales of letters makes himself a star.

Sitting pretty, Dan and Lois get a shock when Myra is found in his bed. The gang is back and it's up to Dan to be the finger man again, or else. Buying it off, Spade, Myra and Duke double-cross by looting Lois' apartment. On his past association Dan is picked up. Turning melodramatic, Myra bails Dan out, before Lois can, with the idea of knocking him off. But Dan smells a rat and has a carload of cops follow Myra's car as well as the one carrying his old playmates. The anti-climax is a shoot-'em-up affair, with screen heroics transferred to realism, and Dan is rehabilitated with his bosses and the world of fans as the true story is told.

Title not so significant, particularly in connection with the pugnacious Cagney character, cast and story values should carry the exploitation load. With inside crook and Hollywood atmosphere to work with, ballyhoo ideas should suggest themselves. Cagney's letter-writing gag can be adapted in scores of different ways, such as post cards signed with his name inviting his fans to see the show. Also there might be lobby displays of phoney fan mail letters and wires all laudatory to Dan, the ex-usher who became a star. Might be a good idea to turn your theatre into a Hollywood post office and put up prizes for the best letter writers. Aim all your activities toward the point that the whole thing is a lot of straightaway fun with a host of little things rather than one big sensation to amuse the greatest number.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Screen play by Ben Markson and Lillie Hayward. From the original story by Rosalind Keating Shaffer. Supervisor, Henry Blanke. Photography by Tony Gaudio. Sitting Pretty

(Paramount-Rogers)

Musical Comedy-Drama

A combination musical comedy, light romance drama that steps out of the back-stage cycle and builds its story in a music publishing office and a Hollywood motion picture studio. Following the girl-glamour spectacle trend, the finale is an elaborate interpretation of the Sally Rand fan dance. Mirrors are used to accentuate the illusion that the set is filled with hundreds of girls and to heighten the kaleidoscopic effect of the geometrically patterned dance arrangements. The idea is novel and eye-filling and at the same time provides a talk-about asset in contrast with current climax spectacles.

The story centers on Parker and Pendleton, a couple of song writers, victims of the Tin Pan Alley depression, who thumb their way to Hollywood and as a result of Parker's gall eventually crash the gates. Parker, tantalized by the vampy siren star, Gloria, goes Hollywood in a big way, walking out on his partner. Then comes the downfall as the siren airs him after the studio has washed him up. Old friendship asserts itself as the "in right" Pendleton stays in Parker's corner, and an accidental meeting with a director, Davidson, productive of much fun, gets them another audition before Clarke, the producer, and Agent Tannenbaum. Their song number is the basis for the picture's big finale and Parker, restored to grace, is glad to find that his pal has married Dorothy, the girl he passed up for Gloria.

Song numbers, of which "Meandering With Miranda," "Good Morning Glory," "Lazy Liza" and "Did You Ever See a Dream Walking" are outstanding, assume more importance as entertainment assets than the basic story. Put across by Oakie, Haley, Jarrett, the Pickens Sisters and the chorus ensemble, they possess that rhythmic click that patrons will remember to whistle and hum.

In this era of musicals, the different environment of "Sitting Pretty" should be emphasized. Song titles easily can be tied with the title to concoct a tricky, curiosity-inveigling advance campaign. Add to this suggestions plucked from the dialogue and situations and it should not be too difficult to convince patrons that the show is different and interesting enough to merit their support.

A concentration on the light human interest comedy, with broad suggestions of what happens to a dumb smart guy when he goes Hollywood and a promise that they will see something when they see the spectacular finale, looks to be the best medium of exciting patron attention. Names are adequate, with Oakie, Ginger Rogers, Thelma Todd, Gregory Ratoff and the broadcasting Pickens Sisters in the cast. In Jack Haley, who shares the lead with Oakie, there is a new personality to talk about.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Mam'zelle Nitouche

(Protex)

Operetta

Light and entertaining, musically pleasing, "Mam'zelle Nitouche," or "Miss Touch-Me-Not," is a gay adaptation of a French operetta, done in an attractive fashion, of no particular consequence as to story, yet contriving, chiefly by reason of the work of the leading players, to be amusing and lively.

It is easy to follow the development of the story, despite the complete use of the French dialogue. This is partly accounted for by the employment of English subtitle translations of certain important bits of dialogue, and partly by the extreme simplicity of the story itself. Yet the average exhibitor faces a problem in selling the feature to his patronage, unless he is in a French community. The most adaptable theatre for the showing of this picture, then, is the smaller, intimate type of house in the large, metropolitan center, where foreign films will draw a certain patronage almost without regard to their origin.

The smaller exhibitor might engage the attention of the school authorities, offering special performances for French classes and the like. This should awaken interest, with the promise of an easily understood, amusing yarn, woven with bright and wholly engaging melody. The names, of course, mean absolutely nothing in American theatres.

Star pupil in a convent is Janie Marese, possessed of an extremely attractive voice. Unknown to the stern mother superior, the convent's organist and music teacher, Raimu, the film's amusing comedian, has composed an operetta, going under one name at the convent, under another at the theatre. Mlle. Marese discovers his secret, and incidentally memorizes the libretto. She learns of arrangements for her engagement to a young man whom she never has seen, and that she is supposed to go to Paris to prepare for the wedding. Meanwhile, the major, brother of the mother superior, finds Raimu at the theatre in the arms of the leading woman, of whom he is more than fond.

Despite Raimu's premiere, he is supposed to accompany Mlle. Marese to Paris, but parks her in a hotel while he conducts the orchestra. She escapes, accidentally meets the young man she is to marry at the theatre, and when the leading lady turns temperamental, takes the part—and "puts it over." Then, as the major charges after him, the two escape, back to the convent, where the story comes out and the girl and her fiance, whom she had not recognized during their encounters, are married.

Play up the light, gay, musical entertainment qualities and remember the schools.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Braunberger-Richebe. Distributed by Protex Pictures Company. Directed by Charles David. Adapted from the French operetta by Melhac and Milhaud. Music by Herve. Release date, November 18, 1933. Running time, 90 minutes.

From Headquarters

(Warner)

Mystery

Here's a one-hour lesson in the application of scientific knowledge and apparatus to the detection of crime, "From Headquarters." The exhibitor does not have for sale a very mysterious mystery, however, and, concomitantly, not all the rapid-fire action of the police variety that might be expected. Nevertheless, the exhibitor may well promise a highly interesting production that goes more deeply into crime detection from headquarters than have most of its predecessors.

It is, by the same token, perhaps the sort of thing which is much more readily apt to appeal to the masculine than the feminine patrons. The film may be sold most particularly to the vast host of mystery readers who find their best reading enjoyment in perusal of the ratiocinative type of mystery story. Graphically are pictured the methods of deduction employed with the aid of mechanical and scientific appliances.

The microscope, the bullet, the autopsy, the medical examiner, the ballistics expert with his testing apparatus are virtually the heroes of the piece, providing the larger amount of interest. From the marquee standpoint, concerning the human element, there are George Brent, Margaret Lindsay, Eugene Pallette, and Hugh Herbert for comedy relief, all familiar names. The obvious lack of important box office name strength would indicate the necessity of making the mystery and the method of deduction the most important selling angles. The title gives opportunity for police department tieups, with the lobby use of the apparatus of crime detection, which is almost certain to attract a goodly amount of pedestrian attention.

When the suicide of a wealthy, eccentric gun collector suddenly turns out to be murder, the clever lieutenant, Brent, and his constant competitor, the confident sergeant, Pallette, go to work. Pallette accepts the obvious, places the guilt upon Miss Lindsay, show girl, one time sweetheart of Brent and friend of the victim, and upon her brother, Theodore Newton. Brent works deductively from the laboratory, with the aid of the medical examiner, and establishes the complicity of Robert Barrat, supposed rug dealer, actually implicated with the dead man in a blackmail racket.

Hugh Herbert as the headquarters bail-bond fixer is amusing, and action is packed into the closing minutes when a general alarm is sounded and the building is sealed by armed guards, riot guns at ready.

Put the emphasis on the picture's clear explanation of how detectives work at headquarters, a view behind the scenes in the homicide bureau. The film is, in its field, entertaining, but more than that, it contains a definite amount of general interest in its picturization of police methods. There's much for the youngsters, boys especially. Make the most of the show girl phase for feminine appeal.—Aaronson, New York.

Farewell to Love

(Madison)

Drama with Music

The exhibitor is confronted with several selling problems in attempting to merchandise "Farewell to Love" to his patronage. The film is an English version of a recent German picture, and was made in England, though the setting is confined to a locale centered in Naples and the Island of Capri. The scenery is consequently of unusual quality, which adds a certain effective background to the film as a whole.

The cast presents a curious combination. In the lead is the splendid-voiced tenor, Jan Kiepura, European player who was starred in "Be Mine Tonight." Sharing the feminine lead are Heather Angel, growing in popularity in American films, having been imported recently from England, and Betty Stockfield, exclusively an English performer, and quite unknown in this country. The rest of the cast is English. Kiepura's previous role, especially if the exhibitor has played "Be Mine Tonight," is a selling wedge for him. Miss Angel's current work is good support for her name.

Due partly to poor sound reproduction, or recording, or both, but only partially, the language, at least of the English performers, is almost indistinguishable on numerous occasions. In addition, pronounced English inflection of the speakers presents an obstacle to the exhibitor. Of the singing of Kiepura the exhibitor may talk much in his selling. It becomes virtually his best angle, since the story is elderly in theme and in no way unusual in its development. Kiepura, a guide in Naples, is in love with Miss Angel, who keeps house for Philip Easton, English sculptor. Miss Stockfield, wealthy visitor, is captivated by the voice of Kiepura, and he in turn becomes infatuated with her. She persuades him to go to London with her to study, where he is extremely jealous of her masculine friends. The evening before his concert, he learns she has financed the engagement, and leaves suddenly for Naples and Miss Angel, who forgives him in approved and expected fashion. A return to the early incongruities of sound pictures is permitted to intrude when, about to sing for Miss Stockfield in the center of a vast Italian ruin, Kiepura is suddenly accompanied by a full symphonic orchestra, coming from no discernible source.

The exhibitor is virtually compelled to rely upon the voice of Kiepura, his appearance in the earlier picture, and the name of Heather Angel for his selling approach. The English origin of the picture might better not be emphasized to any extent, while the theme, of the infatuated singer who learns his error and returns to his first love, probably will add comparatively little to the campaign. It is an adult attraction exclusively.—AARONSON, New York.

By Appointment Only

(Chesterfield)

Drama

A certain amount of novelty of story situation removes something of the showmanship problem of the exhibitor. Though there are a few familiar names, the cast as a whole offers little opportunity for marquee pull of its own accord. Lew Cody and Aileen Pringle share the lead, though the heroine is more accurately Sally O'Neill, who supposedly a girl of 14 in the earlier sequences, is not as convincing as she might be.

Cody is a successful surgeon, drawing large fees from neurotic, wealthy women who border on the hypochondriac, and treating poor folk without charge. He is in love with the socially ambitious Miss Pringle, his fiancee, but sees rather little of her. A woman dies of heart disease in his office, and the orphaned daughter, Miss O'Neil, is befriended by Cody. He takes her to his home, and calls upon Miss Pringle for advice. She is at the moment troubled by the actions of her brother, Edward Morgan, infatuated with a girl who is finally bought off by Cody. Miss Pringle refuses to have anything interfere with Cody's career, and arranges for the girl to attend a school, while Cody undertakes advanced practice on the Continent. He is away three years and returns to find the child developed into a woman, with whom Morgan is in love.

He refuses to permit them to marry, and in a stormy scene Morgan accuses Cody of himself being in love with Miss O'Neil. Miss Pringle breaks their engagement. Miss O'Neil meets Morgan, and a wild automobile ride results in a crash and injury to Miss O'Neil. Cody saves her life on the operating table and she is apparently about to marry him. A somewhat unexpected conclusion brings the marriage of Morgan and Miss O'Neil instead and the reconciliation of Cody and Miss Pringle.

The best selling angle probably will be a playup of the situation which finds an eminent surgeon befriending a young orphan girl, falling in love with her several years later, and then giving her up to the younger man who is in love with her as well.—AARONSON, New York.

Havana Widows

Comedy

Two quick-witted burlesque girls-about-town, off to Havana to snare themselves a millionaire and running into complications innumerable, should give the exhibitor plenty of opportunity for some real laugh ballyhoo. It is all nothing but comedy, fast moving, active and amusing, with a half-dozen comedy players who handle their dialogue and situations in such a manner as to bring out all the fun.

There is plenty of cast material for the marquee. Good ballyhoo can be woven around the names of Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell, Guy Kibbee, Allen Jenkins and Frank McHugh, in a comedy of high feminine financial chiseling in Havana, with Guy Kibbee as the "chiselee."

Miss Blondell and Miss Farrell suddenly drop their burlesque jobs to catch a millionaire and some easy dough in Havana. Their boarder, Jenkins, gunman-bodyguard for Ralph Ince, is talked into collecting $1,500 for them, though he does a little matter of forging to get it from Ince. He promises to return it in 30 days. His girl, Miss Blondell, is supposed to be visiting a sick aunt in Kansas. In the Havana hotel, the pair of "diggers" hit upon Kibbee as a likely proposition, and connect with the perpetually inebriated and highly amusing McHugh, lawyer who specializes in such breach of promise suits as will collect for him and his "clients."

They set the stage for Kibbee, but in the meanwhile Jenkins learns where they have gone and Ince learns of the forgery, and Jenkins hot-foots it for Havana. McHugh ruins the first play for Kibbee by showing up not only drunk, but also with Jenkins. To make it worse, Miss Blondell falls for Kibbee's son, Lyle Talbot. The next move is to lure Kibbee to a deserted house, have some of his clothing taken and photograph him with Miss Blondell pursuing—her advantage. That becomes complicated when a riot starts outside the house, and Ince appears suddenly on the scene. Jenkins lights out from there, with Ince after him, while a chance photographer shoots the frantic Kibbee in underwear pursued over the roof by the two girls. All arrested, the judge orders them out of Havana, and aboard a boat, Miss Blondell and Talbot seem to be getting along quite well, while Miss Farrell is married to Jenkins, a fact which pleases Ince mightily.

It is straight comedy from first to last, and is to be sold as such. Tieups with local women's wear shops, for the clothes displays, are ready to hand, as are deals with luggage stores on traveling equipment. Make the most of the marquee possibilities in the cast, and bring in all the laugh angles suggested by the situations in the yarn. The dialogue is fast and amusing and, the whole film, not by any means brilliant, is still good program material of the amusing, diverting kind. It may be played almost any time in the week.—AARONSON, New York.

Girl Trouble

Good Musical

One of the Vitaphone series of musical short subjects in Technicolor, this is definitely a good one, amusing, entertaining, colorful. Featured are Mitchell and Durante, the slap-around comedians, who are diverting in their knock-down-and-drag-out comedy antics. The perpetually drunken playboy is taken to a supposed deserted resort in the West, only to find a chorus rehearsing for a show. With good music, the girls go through their routines, interspersed with vocal efforts, and the work of Mitchell and Durante. Amusing and entertaining material, with the color adding to the effectiveness.—Running time, 23 minutes.

Motor Mania

(Fox)

Thrills

There is a hair-raising thrill for young and old in this number of the Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman series, with the camera trained to the last crash on the demons of the motor track. Recorded are the thrill highlights from the newsreels, as the camera shoots from Ulster, Ireland, to Brooklyn, England, and the death of Clive Dunfee; the Rhone Valley, Berlin, Monte Carlo, Pike's Peak, Daytona Beach, dirt track racing and the smash finale at Indianapolis, topped off with a crash of six speeding racers piling one on the other. Is it smashing, breath-taking thrill stuff, done to the accompaniment of rapid-tempoed dialogue by Lew Lehr. It is worth special billing.—Running time, 9 minutes.

March of the Years

Weak

Considering the material which presents itself in such a short subject series as is indicated by the title, the resulting concoction, meant to be a pictorial record of notable incidents of the near or distant past in the country, is done in a manner highly ineffectual. Too artificial and theatrical in its presentation, it falls far short of what might readily have been expected. Audiences, in all likelihood, will find it disappointing.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Mild West

(Vitaphone)

Fair

A fair number with a musical touch, opening in a saloon of the west, where with guns and song, Gentleman Jim cleans up and Jeanette Reade, as the proprietress, "gets her man," despite the efforts of Olive Borden to beat her to it. Then some years later Miss Borden, still young, takes him away from the elderly Miss Reade. On the warpath, Miss Reade goes to the big town, has herself rejuvenated, and wins back her man as she sings in a night club With a bit of song and dance, in a theatrical appearing set, the subject is fairly entertaining material.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Kennel Kings

(Paramount)

Interesting

Especially interesting to the hosts of dog lovers, who are everywhere, and of general appeal to almost anyone, is this number of the Grantland Rice Sportslights series, wherein are pictured, with the addition of Mr. Rice's explanations, fine specimens of some of the most noted breeds of dogs. Cocker spaniels, Dalamatians, greyhounds, seen racing; the giant St. Bernard and Great Dane, Scotties, English bulls and the keen pointers and setters, making an appealing picture as they flush quail in the brush. A popular subject, interestingly handled. —Running time, 10 minutes.

Gem of the Sea

(Fox)

Excellent

Into its new group of the Margic Carpet of Movietone series of shorts, Fox has injected a moderate amount of dialogue, which serves to inject a certain aspect of personality into the travel subjects. In this instance the Emerald Isle, Ireland, is focussed by the camera, with much of its enchanting scenery and the homely activity of the inhabitants recorded. Predominantly characteristic of this and the other of these subjects is the brilliant photography, in clarity and angle effect unsurpassed. Ed Thorgensen does well with the dialogue rendition. General appeal and interest makes this a worthwhile subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

JOE PALOOKA

United Artists-Reliance

Bringing to the screen realism the famous Ham Fisher cartoon character, the whimsical pug, Joe Palooka, it's the story here of a country boy, son of an old-time champ, with a yen for the ring, who comes under the wing of a smart promoter and is pushed into a championship. Comedy is the basis for everything, the story being an out-and-out travesty on the fight game. The screen play is by Gertrude Purcell, Jack Jevne and Arthur Kober, who did "Make Me a Star," a similar character picture in which Irwin also starred. Ben Stoloff, adept at handling topical stories, is directing.

Jimmy Durante and Stuart Irwin head the cast, which is of all-star proportions with Lupe Velez, Marjorie Rambeau, Robert Armstrong, Mary Carlisle, Thelma Todd and Bill Cagney (Jimmie's brother) making his screen debut. For atmospheric tinges to the sporting world-night club background, Gus Arheim and his orchestra will be seen and Franklin Ardell, noted oldtime vaudevillian, is included. Several music numbers by Berton Lane and Harold Adamson, one of which is sung by Durante and another by Miss Velez, are featured.

Erwin's character, as a poor dumb, believe-anything guy, is reminiscent of his "Make Me a Star" role which had lots of people sad and glad for him. Durante is the unstoppable manager who dug up the son of a famous father phenom. Rambeau is the mother who took her boy away from the bruising Bob Armstrong. Velez is the night club torch singer, hot for Durante's ballyhooed champ. Mary Carlisle is Palooka's country girl sweetheart. Thelma Todd is the vamp who played heck with Armstrong's fight career.

Production runs all the way from the small town fight clubs to Madison Square Garden and Broadway's bright lights. While there is a definite trend of human interest, broad comedy precludes any seriousness. Besides cast and title, the story is full of situations that are natural ballyhoo and exploitation. The dialogue is fast and slangy, amply counterbalanced by nicely tempoed rapid fire action.

MR. SKITCH

Fox

It looks like the best material Will Rogers has had to work with in a long time. A rollicking auto tour of the western country gives the topical philosopher a chance to dissect national life hilariously by cross sections. Based on a Saturday Evening Post story by Anne Cameron, author of the homely auto camp sagas, the screen play is by Ralph Spence, who collaborated on "Warrior's Husband," and Sonya Levien, whose other previous Rogers contributions are "They Had to See Paris" and "Connecticut Yankee." A glance at the cast, which tabs Zasu Pitts, Harry Green and Eugene Pallette immediately below Rogers, means there will be plenty of laughs. Rochelle Hudson, recently in "Walls of Gold" and Charles Starrett, remembered for his cocky-boy part in "Lady and Gent," carry the romantic roles. Florence Desmond, noted mimic of screen and public celebrities, is the newcomer who rounds out the credited names.

Production values in the see-America auto tour of good cheer yarn are exceptionally important, bringing in as they do stops in Yellowstone Park for glimpses of many of its natural wonders, including Old Faithful, the geyser. Rides through the Rocky Mountains as well as over the prairies from Missouri to the Coast include stops at the Grand Canyon, the notorious Nevada gambling resorts and other famous spots on the tin can tourist trail.

Essentially a comedy in which all participants play up to their established characters and one giving Rogers ample opportunity for timely ad-libbing, it nevertheless combines education with entertainment in a novel manner.

JIMMY AND SALLY

Fox

A comedy romance of youth here is pepped up with plenty of music and excitement. The story and screen play are by William Conselman and Marguerite Roberts. James Tingling is directing. James Dunn and Clair Trevor, whose role in "The Mad Game" stamps her as very promising, have the leads. Principal supporting roles feature Lya Lys; Jed Prouty, of considerable stage fame; Harvery Stephens, the school master of "Worst Woman in Paris," and Joseph Sauers. In line with the Fox policy of introducing new names in strong parts, Gloria Roy, William Pawley, Alma Lloyd, John Arledge and Matt McHugh have important roles. Musical numbers, three outstanding, were written by Jay Gorney and Sidney Claire, who have been credited with the melodies and lyrics of scores of hits.

In story Dunn and Trevor are mutual admirers. Dunn, a publicity man for a meat packing company, sees his bid for fame crash when a store window radio broadcast goes haywire and an elephant wrecks Broadway. Mobsters enter the film when Dunn, shooting for a new publicity job, gets a snooping radio broadcaster to tip the world that a certain gangster is gaga about Lya Lys, night club prima donna. About a dozen big shots think they're the guys. But the gunmen realize they've been made butts of a publicity stunt and Dunn leaves town as Miss Trevor's love cools. After a tough couple of months, he returns to New York. Prouty is glad to have him back, the gangster stunt popularized the night club and enabled him to get rid of Miss Lys. He gets back to the meat packer crowd, and even though Stephens has the inside track on Miss Trevor, he's clever enough to change her mind.

Fast moving, snappy entertainment, production values open the door wide to timely exploitation. A big-idea boy story with Dunn singing "It's the Irish in Me" and Miss Lys "You're My Thrill," showmen have much besides names and title to talk about.

SIXTEEN FATHOMS DEEP

Monogram

Based on the American Magazine story of the same title by Eustace Adams, which has been adapted by B. A. Barringer and Norman Houston, "Sixteen Fathoms Deep" is a romance-tinged action drama of a young sponge diver. Localed among the sponge reefs, practically all the action takes place on and below the sea. Direction is by Armand Schaefer.

Leads are assigned to Sally O'Neal, who recently made her re-entry into pictures in Universal's "Ladies Must Love," and Creighton Chaney, son of the famous Lon, who has been seen in "Bird of Paradise" and "Lucky Devils." The supporting cast includes George Regas, Maurice Black, Constantine Romanoff, Jack Kenney, Lloyd Ingram, George Nash, Si Jenks and Eugene Gehrung.

In story, Chaney is a sponge diver in love with Sally. Buying a boat on borrowed money, he embarks for a cleanup. Villainy inspired by the heavies Regas and Black, supplementing the thrill action of sponge-harvesting, with all its attendant dangers, is made more dramatic as a raging storm, the murderous attempts at high-sea robbery by a mutinous crew, an attack by pirates and a thrilling rescue from the bottom of the sea, give the story plenty of punch. Many authentic sea and underwater sequences add greatly to the color of the story.

Action predominates over dialogue. Production background being quite different from the ordinary sea story set-up, one thrill situation follows another, each permitting the development of the expected climax.

Monogram Lines Up Studio Work Under Raised Budget

First to leave the starting line under the augmented Monogram production budget will be "Woman's Man," "Beggars in Ermine," "Manhattan Love Song" and "Mystery Liner." With two others in the cutting room, the company will have seven completed by this weekend, said L. L. Ostrow, executive producer. Now editing are "Sixteen Fathoms Deep" and "He Couldn't Take It."

H. Staunton Wallach will handle Monogram product in South America, under a deal made by Ritchey Export Corporation, foreign distributors for Monogram. Mr. Wallach's headquarters will be in Buenos Aires. Oscar Hanson's Empire Exchange will handle Monogram product in Canada. W. Ray Johnston, Monogram president, was in Toronto conferring with Mr. Hanson.

"There's too much congestion in there, I can't take it"

PHIL M. DALY TAKES IT BIG!

Read this rave from the Film Daily over the first of Educational's Star Comedy Specials, and then strip for action in exploiting this laugh hit for big additional business:

"... prize entry ... Ernest Truex in 'Mr. Adam' ... something that Al Christie as producer can stack against any of 'em ... a honey for haw-haws, beautiful gals and topical theme with a classy snap ... a banzai and a round of yodels to William Watson and Art Jarrett for the best kidding on Nudism to date ... art cinematography by Bill Steiner ... a beautifully paced example of directorial skill by Al Christie ... now if this sounds like a Rave ... that's exactly what we aimed to convey ..."

'GREAT POSSIBILITIES AS SMASH-HIT'

Says DeCasseres of "Eight Bells"; Calls "Her Master's Voice" Also First-rate Program Stuff

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

EIGHT BELLS

A. C. Blumenthal's production of "Eight Bells," a London hit, written by Percy G. Mandley, while it does not make the grade as a stage play—because so much of importance takes place off stage—has great possibilities as a smash-hit melodrama in pictures. In fact, it is all classical picture stuff—when the scenarist shall have put on the film what we do not see on the boards of the Hudson Theatre.

Locale: On board a full-rigged British ship lying becalmed about five hundred miles off Rio de Janeiro. There is a motley crew of Britishers, Germans, Greeks and Swedes. Time: August, 1914.

There is only one woman on board, the captain's handsome young wife (Colin Clive and Rose Hobart). He's a drunken brute; she is a gentlewoman. There is a romance developing between her and the first mate (romantic type).

The captain suspects. He and the first mate are having a terrific fistic battle in the captain's cabin when biff-bang boom!—a vessel heaves in sight with the news that England has declared war on Germany!

The Germans among the crew demand to be taken to Rio and put ashore. "You'll stick—you — — — —!" bawls the British captain.

Mutiny. The Germans capture the ship. One square-head makes for the captain's wife. She is protected by the new German captain, a sailmaker (Sydney Rumann), who also calls down the British first-made for love-making.

Finally, the Britishers get a pistol. Both the British captain and the German sailmaker-captain are murdered (grand picture stuff here—we do not see it on the stage).

The British get command of the ship again, the first mate has the captain's wife for keeps, while what is left of the crew set about taking the Cumbermere to port (a terrific tropical storm, during the battle, having given them a breeze).

HER MASTER'S VOICE

Roland Young and Laura Hope Crews, who are so notably good on the screen, are no less so on the stage. They appeared in a peppy domestic little comedy by Clare Kummer, and there is nothing for it but to lift up the impeccable and suave Roland and the racy Laura, carry them to Hollywood and have them do this play for our twenty million or so picture addicts.

Homewood, N. J., is the locale of this incredible opus. There we have the Farrars. Ned Farrar (Roland Young) is just a quiet, every-day husband to a wife who is itchy about her voice and her health. Lives with them Mrs. Farrar's mother, who is a real home-town, not too oppressive mother-in-law (comic type).

Blows in the rich Aunt Min (Laura Hope Crews), who is sister to mother-in-law. Ned has just lost his job as secretary to the local banker, a good fellow, crazy about singing and who subsequently falls in love with mother-in-law.

Ned is doing the housework. Aunt Min takes him for the hired man, and when she persuades her niece, Mrs. Farrar, to take a rest cure in her swanky country home, she hires the husband as her gardener, without the knowledge of either wife or mother-in-law.

Big comic scene in third act when the husband crawls into bed, believing his wife is there—on the porch—and finds he is really in bed with Aunt Min. Big rumpus; but all is smoothed out, and Roland Young becomes the chief crooner at the town radio station.

This is all neat, clean and amusing. Nothing to go crazy about in pictures, but a perfect vehicle for the Young-Crews combination. Good dialogue. First-rate program stuff.

THE SCHOOL FOR HUSBANDS

George Arliss having done Disraeli, Voltaire and Alexander Hamilton, I'd like to see him do Molière.

And here's an excellent chance for that superb actor in "The School for Husbands," Molière's comedy done over for the modern trade by Arthur Guiterman and Lawrence Langner.

Sganarelle, the oldish fellow who has a young ward whom he's training to be his wife (and the way she fools him and finally marries, by an old-fashioned but always amusing trick, her young and going lover!), was Molière's favorite part—and, Egad!, Osgood Perkins, who played Sganarelle, made up to look like the immortal French actor-playwright. He was very good—but I was thinking of Arliss all the time in this part. It's costume; but for that matter so is his "Voltaire."

There are plenty of action, color, sex-sports, merriment and sophisticated romance in this naughty, mocking comedy. It was the second Theatre Guild production of the season.

Mon cher producers: There are other classics besides the Bible.

Picture value (with Arliss), 70 per cent.

THE CURTAIN RISES

This clever but somewhat softish comedy by B. M. Kaye signaled the appearance on the stage of Jean Arthur. But so far as the legit. goes, it will take more than Miss Arthur to sock it over.

Scene: Dear old Vienna. Elsa Karling has taken an apartment. Elsa yearns for romance, but she isn't hep to "the game."

She has an actor idol. He scorns her. You see by now that Elsa wants to act. The Great Actor, however, has the cute idea of sending his understudy, Franz, to Elsa to "teach her" acting—and this and that.

Elsa gets her first kiss from the understudy. As they both have been practicing things from the Great Actor's plays, Elsa doesn't know whether she loves the understudy or the big matinee bozo of Vienna.

This is the way she finds out: The Famous Actor's leading lady falls ill and Elsa in a rush order takes the part of Juliet. When she kisses the Great Romeo (both off and on the stage) she finds she loves the understudy.

This sounds like a Janet Gaynor buy.

SPRING IN AUTUMN

Is there anybody out in Hollywood—a middle-aged lady star, preferably—who can stand on her head and sing Puccini? Blanche Yurka does it in "Spring in Autumn," a comedy adapted from the Spanish of Sierra.

This amiable little play is not much to report for the picture trade, although, the central character being a famous operatic star, there may be room to throw in a performance of "Martha" or "Trovatore," or what have you?

The star's daughter is going to be married. So the Great Song Bird thinks it proper to return home to hubby and child to give the thing an air of conventionality.

Well, well, she finds that she loves the hub. that she deserted, and the girl finds out that the fellow she loved wasn't quite the thing. But papa do love mamma!—that's the story.

This is a nice unimportant thing without any rowdy happenings and with a ladylike dialogue.

Picture value, 30 per cent.

THREE AND ONE

Here's a French girl who is made the target of three kinds of approaches by three different kinds of men, all brothers by the same mother, but whose fathers were flitterwees of the artistic featherdom, for the mother is a dancer, something of the Isadora Duncan type, maybe, who, as you know, was a kind of pagan in her California way.

That is the nerts and kernel of "Three in One," from the French of Denys Amiel, done into English, and put on by William Harris, Jr.

The three sons that mamma sics on the girl she has brought home are a pugilist, a concert artist and a bond-and-mortgage hound. Each one makes love to the girl in his own style.

Now, this is somewhat amusing as an idea, but the pace is slow. Charles, the prize-fighter, finally wins, leaving Art and the Bourse flat on their roundhouses.

The less we have of this sort of tripe on the screen the better for real pictures.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 194

Bluebook School Question No. 194 was: (A) Give us your views regarding the use of rheostats, mercury arc rectifiers, transformers and motor generators when the supply is A. C. When it is D. C.

I was agreeably surprised at the number of answers displaying competent understanding of this whole matter, save and except in the matter of mercury arc rectifiers. Many seem to know but little about them, which is perhaps at least partly excusable, since they for the most part say "none have been used in my territory," or words to that effect. The following made good: C. Rau and S. Evans; G. E. Doe; P. Gaeth; L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; W. Ostrum; B. Doe; T. Van Vaulkenburg; H. H. Menefee; J. Wentworth; H. Edwards; D. Goldberg and L. (A) Take a slant at this answer to Section A by our friends, J. T. Ballinger and D. L. Mason. Only the answer of G. E. Doe approaches it in completeness:

"When current supply is A. C. the use of resistance to break down line voltage to arc voltage is wasteful in proportion to the difference in the two," wrote Ballinger and Mason. "All voltage between that of the line and arc must be broken down, or, in other words, consumed—turned into heat—in the rheostat or rheostats. It therefore is wasted, except for the fact that some proportion of such waste has value in stabilizing the arc, causing it to burn steadily. Ten to fifteen volts will be ample for this, however, so that the rest represents pure waste, which of course is registered on the meter and must be paid for. Taking A. C. current through rheostats also provides an A. C. arc, which is unstable except at high amperage—say in excess of sixty of seventy—because of the very, very small craters; also the light is harsh and 'cold' in tone. It is not nearly so pleasing to the eye as is light from a D. C. arc.

"The transformer has, however, the advantage of low first cost as compared with motor generators or mercury arc rectifiers, and low break-down waste. A well planned transformer delivers better than 90 per cent of its primary intake to its secondary output and the arc. It lasts indefinitely and ordinarily costs little or nothing for upkeep.

"The mercury arc rectifier is an instrument employed, for two purposes, in so far as has to do with projection, namely: (a) it transforms the line A. C. to D. C. at the arc; (b) it delivers D. C. at arc voltage. It is not expensive, either in first cost or in upkeep, if handled carefully and intelligently, without subjecting it to overload. Usually its only replacements are bulbs, which are rather expensive, but last a long while unless abused. They have been known to last three to four years, used daily, though I believe that may be considered quite unusual. From what I know about it, I believe a year is more like the average tube life.

"The rectifier delivers slightly pulsating D. C. to the arc. The pulsations are, however, too slight to be noticeable. They are, in fact, reduced to almost nothing by the auto transformer which is an integral part of the device. As compared with the transformer, the first cost and cost of operation is somewhat greater, but except for shaking the bulb at starting, little attention is required. They are so made that by different auto transformer connections the amperage, within certain limits, may be changed at will of the projectionist. Two rectifiers may be connected in parallel, but so far as I know, not in series. The voltage reduction break-down waste is not high, or perhaps it would be more correct to say its efficiency of operation is excellent, though not so high as that of a good transformer.

"I could write pages on motor generators. Unquestionably they are the best we have in the matter of transforming A. C. to D. C. and delivering it to the arc at arc voltage. They cost much more than rheostats, transformers or M. A. rectifiers, and are more expensive in operation. But all that is justified, and, in my opinion, much more than justified by superior excellence in results, dependability and just about everything else. They are highly flexible in the matter of current delivery, having ability to stand even as much as 100 per cent overload for a short space of time, though such abuse should not be tolerated except strictly in case of emergency. They permit change-over without visible evidence of the act upon the screen. They may be had to operate projection arcs either in parallel or series. The current supplied the arc is as close to true D. C. as can be produced by machinery.

"As to the D. C. arc, the transformer and rectifier are 'out,' since there is no need for current rectification. As to rheostats and motor generators, which is the better depends upon what the line voltage is. If 110, as is usual, the rheostat is probably best for several reasons, as follows: (a) First cost of rheostats far less. (b) Upkeep very little as compared with considerable upkeep expense attached to motor generators. (c) Rheostats waste or 'consume' difference in line and arc voltage, but motor generators seldom operate at higher than 55 to 60 per cent efficiency when it comes right down to brass tacks. They probably all will show up considerably higher in laboratory tests, but as our Bluebook and Brother Richardson in his MOTION PICTURE HERALD department many times have pointed out, this will not hold good except when everything is in the very pink of condition, and the 'very pink of condition' is not always found after the machine has been in the hands of some 'machine operator' (of which there still are unfortunately a few among those present) for a period of time.

"If, then, we first consider cost, cost of upkeep and losses inherent in each device, it may be confidently said that the rheostat will be the better if the line voltage be not appreciably in excess of 110 volts, and that the motor generator will be the better if the supply voltage be 220 or more. At the higher voltage the cost of lowering to arc voltage is not in the least increased. In fact, there probably will be a little gain, since high voltage motors are usually claimed to operate at higher efficiency than their lower voltage 'brothers.' On the other hand, the rheostat would waste all the great difference between line and arc voltage, which in watts will be equal to difference between line and arc voltage multiplied by the number of amperes used."

Gentlemen, I compliment our friends, J. T. Ballinger and D. L. Mason. It is one of the best, most complete answers received on any important question in all the years this "school" has been in existence.

Union Sues Theatres, Charging NRA Violations

Charging violations of the President's re-employment agreement, Local 306 of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators Tuesday filed suit in New York supreme court for $1,000,000 damages against the owners of 420 independent theatres in Greater New York.

The suit, filed on behalf of the union by its president, Harry Sherman, names 150 persons and corporations as defendants. Mr. Sherman charged that the defendants signed the re-employment agreement to better business conditions by hiring more men, increasing wages and cutting working hours to 35 a week, but actually, he declared, they cut staffs in half, reduced wages and increased working hours to 52 per week.

RAISED 10 MILLIONS BY 'MIRACLE'

Albert Wiggin had played on important part in the whole transaction, that he was the Santa Claus, or that the Chase National Bank was."

When the crash came, Mr. Fox said, he failed to obtain further loans from Halsey, Stuart, to which he owed $12,000,000, or from Western Electric, to which he was indebted some $15,000,000.

He asked Mr. Clarke for money, and made a "house-to-house canvass" of the principal banks, in order to raise $7,000,000 in addition, to prevent brokers from selling 260,900 shares of Loew's stock that was undermargined.

A "sort of miracle" happened at this juncture, he related, when, at the suggestion of Albert Greenfield, of Philadelphia, he raised $10,000,000 by selling to Warners 25,000 of First National Pictures, which Fox Film previously had received as a "bonus."

Mr. Fox said he distributed the $10,000,000 to the brokers to correct the undercollateralized condition of the 260,900 shares of Loew stock.

In December, 1929, said Mr. Fox, he had no doubt he "would be able to raise all the money and get out of the difficulty," but then the Harriman Bank, and others which made up the loans of $7,000,000, ordered the company's balances in their banks to be applied to the Fox loans.

Hughes Brought into Case

After that, the witness testified, Messrs. Otterson and Stuart indicated they had reached the conclusion that Fox Theatres and Fox Film were bankrupt, and demanded he give them power of attorney to "run these two companies from now on."

Charles Evans Hughes was then brought into the case as a "big lawyer" to represent Mr. Fox.

Having told his complete story to Mr. Hughes, Mr. Fox said, he later was urged by the lawyer to agree to a voting trust with Mr. Stuart and Mr. Otterson, "as the easiest way out." Immediately, he said, a meeting of the trustees was held, at which $490,000 which he had just borrowed on his $6,000,000 life insurance "found itself in the pool to support the Fox stock, stripping me of every dollar that I owned in the world."

Prior to the time the voting trust was set up, Mr. Fox said, Mr. Hays called and told him he had a friend, Harley L. Clarke, of Chicago, who wanted to relieve Mr. Fox "of all this trouble," and that then Mr. Clarke offered him $33,000,000 for his voting shares, which, the witness added, were worth $100,000,000.

Meanwhile, continued Mr. Fox, he had been informed confidentially that there was going to be a "raid" on the Loew stock which would push down the price so far that the margin would be insufficient and his shares of Loew stock would "go overboard."

This caused Mr. Fox to ask Eastman Kodak Company to buy 140,000 shares of the Loew stock for about $45 a share, and while his attorney was en route to Rochester, Mr. Clarke was said to be traveling to New York from Chicago under an alleged promise to pay $33,000,000 for Fox's voting shares in his companies, he testified.

Four minutes before the Stock Exchange opening bell rang on the morning the raid was supposed to have been staged, Mr. Fox said, $6,400,000 was deposited to his account in Bankers Trust, and the brokers were told to deliver the stock to the bank and be paid in full. The raid, then, did not occur.

Mr. Clarke finally arrived on the scene in New York, according to the testimony, prepared to buy Fox's voting shares.

"Let me tell you what the proposal was and see how near jail I was if I listened to Clarke very long," Mr. Fox told the committee. "It was drawn to pay $33,000,000. It was a lot of money in those times. But, of course, there was just a little bit of crookedness to it—not much, just a teeny-weeny little bit. All I was supposed to do if I got $33,000,000 from it was, first, to arrange that Fox Theatres sold to his nominee the 660,900 shares of Loew's stock for $33,000,000. And please bear in mind that within four months later Fox Film paid the theatres company $75,000,000 for those same 660,900 shares, under a plan that Clarke himself arranged.

"All I had to do was listen to his proposal that way and pass the resolutions that would be necessary, selling him this thing that we paid $75,000,000 for, for $33,000,000, and taking $33,000,000 for myself for doing it."

Fox Clashes With Clarke

The Fox testimony brought a clash between the witness and Mr. Clarke at the noon recess on Thursday.

"You gave me the greatest run-around any man ever got," Mr. Fox shouted at Mr. Clarke, "and I'm going to read every damn word into the record."

Mr. Fox was called specifically before the Senate committee to testify regarding the payment of $2,000,000 to him by Mr. Clarke for alleged claims in the Mitchell Camera invention.

The $15,000,000 loan made by Western Electric to Mr. Fox to aid in purchasing the Loew family shares, was granted because the telephone company was in a controversy with Warner Brothers and would rather have Fox obtain the Loew stock than Warners, who also wanted it, according to Mr. Fox's testimony.

Mr. Fox said the Fox Theatres never exercised its control over Loew's. Asked why he wanted Loew's, Mr. Fox told the committee that Loew's was the only theatre company to make money during the depression, and during the last four years had made upwards of $50,000,000.

Details of the payment of $1,000,000 to Samuel Untermyer and $520,000 to Charles Evans Hughes, for legal services, also were heard. However, General Theatres made the payments, by the terms of the agreement made with Mr. Fox when he sold out.

Referring to the Mayer incident, Mr. Fox added that Mr. Mayer had a contract with Loew's and was wondering about its future under the Fox management, if and when a merger was effected. Fox said Mayer indicated he should have participated in the profits from the Loew sale, and when Mayer finally arrived in New York, he told Mayer, "I have reached the conclusion that it is but fair for you to share in the profits. What I would like to say is this: If and when the companies are merged, I will see that the companies pay you $2,000,000 in cash, which would have been fair in the beginning."

Late Thursday afternoon, the senate committee ordered a recess and told Mr. Fox to be on hand Friday morning to continue his story.

Fox Says Wiggin Rebuffed Hoover

Probably the most sensational piece of testimony by Mr. Fox on Friday, the second day of his appearance before the senate finance sub-committee at Washington, was his charge, under oath, that the Hoover Administration tried to arrange a loan, through Claudius Huston, with Mr. Albert Wiggin, and Mr. Huston allegedly was told by Wiggin to "tell the President to mind his own business."

Mr. Wiggin was also quoted by Mr. Fox as saying that he "resented Mr. Hoover's interference in the matter."

Mr. Fox said that he considered Huston to be the agent of the President.

"The last thing the President wanted," Fox testified, "was for a corporation with assets of $300,000,000 to be plunged into receivership."

Resuming the dramatic story of his "sell-out," Mr. Fox said that he had learned that Clarence Dillon, of Dillon, Read and Company and Mr. Wiggin, had "discussed the capture of the Fox companies."

"Bear in mind," Mr. Fox told the committee, "these men in 1929 were almighty."

When he told of asking aid from Richard Hoyt, of Hayden, Stone and Company, which previously had done some Fox financing, and received an unsympathetic reply, Mr. Fox said he told Mr. Hoyt:

"Perhaps you would like to cut out one of my kidneys."

"I would like to cut both of them out," Fox quoted Hoyt as replying.

Charges "Conspiracy" Through Law Suits

Mr. Fox charged on Friday that, in harmony with the alleged "conspiracy" to "strip" him of his properties, 25 lawsuits were brought against the Fox companies in 1929 to embarrass them financially.

Mr. Fox went into considerable detail about his efforts to obtain the effective aid of President Hoover, through Mr. Huston, in "saving his properties." Mr. Huston, said Fox, suggested that he go along with a modification of the voting trust, but "he soon found that it was not possible." Next, according to the witness, Mr. Huston "tried various things to adjust this matter, having conferences with several persons," among them Clarence Dillon. "He knew all of these bankers down there."

After relating the details of concluding conversations with Mr. Huston, after the socalled "President's agent" informed him that he could do nothing with the bankers, Mr. Fox told of a luncheon which he gave at his home, in December, 1929, to his lawyers, among them, Joseph Hartfield. Mr. Fox said that he lost his temper and threatened to shoot Mr. Hartfield, who, he said, evidently was "not representing my companies nor me, and I charged him with it."

"I called this man all the vile, filthy, dirty names that it was human for one person to call another," he said.

It was in January, Mr. Fox testified, that he engaged Samuel Untermyer to represent him, offering him the same proposal of a fee of $1,000,000 if he could save the companies from going into receivership. Mr. Untermyer was engaged because the Wall Street crowd was "afraid" of him, Fox said.

At this point in the testimony, Mr. Fox discussed at great length the participation in the Fox financing of Mr. Aldrich and others, as it pertained to Mr. Aldrich's knowledge of what had transpired in 1929. Mr. Aldrich pointed out that he had no connection with the Chase Bank during that period.

Before concluding his testimony, Mr. Fox charged on Friday that $15,000,000 had "mysteriously" disappeared from the treasury of Fox Theatres since he sold control, and said that Fox Film had not earned a dollar since then. He said that no effort had been made to account for the $15,000,000 allegedly missing.

PRINCIPALS DENY FOX'S CHARGES

"Nobody knows where it went to," he added. "There has never been any effort to say where it went, but 1,300 or 1,400 honest people paid $25 or $30 a share for the stock of the company."

Mr. Fox indicated that about two years ago he received a letter saying that $500,000 yearly salary, under the "sell-out" deal to General Theatres, was being discontinued.

At this point, Chairman Fletcher announced that the hearing was "concluded as far as Mr. Fox is concerned," and that the General Theatres inquiry would be resumed on Monday.

During Friday's testimony by Mr. Fox, several of his charges were denied by principals named in the financing activities.

Mr. Clarke, in brief testimony, near the end of the day, said that Mr. Fox was suffering from "conspiracy hallucinations."

In a statement issued later, Frederick W. Gehle, press representative of the Chase interests, read into the record a denial of the Fox episode referring to Mr. Wiggin and President Hoover. The statement read:

"Following the testimony of Mr. Fox this morning, I talked with A. H. Wiggin on the telephone with reference to Mr. Fox's statement that Mr. Wiggin had said to Claudius Huston that he resented President Hoover's interference in Fox Flm matters, indicating that he would thank the President to mind his own business.

"Mr. Wiggin has authorized me to say that this incident can exist only in Mr. Fox's imagination, the statement being wholly untrue.

"Mr. Huston has never been in Mr. Wiggin's home; as a matter of fact, Mr. Wiggin recalls having met him only once in his life at a large dinner at the University Club in New York City."

As Mr. Fox had pinned his story on Mr. Huston during Friday's testimony, the Senate members of the committee were left somewhat in the dark. They decided to invite anyone who had information concerning Mr. Fox's loss of his properties to appear voluntarily and testify.

Untermyer Defends Fee

Meanwhile, in New York, Samuel Untermyer issued a statement describing as "entirely reasonable" the fee he and his associates received in the Fox Film litigation. Mr. Untermyer disclosed that the amount he received was not, as stated, $1,000,000, but $570,000. Lawyers associated with him in the litigation received the balance, the statement indicated. Mr. Untermyer said that the Fox situation covered a "series of the most heated, intense and widely ramified litigations in the federal and state courts during the brief history of their duration."

Before Mr. Fox concluded his testimony last Friday, it was indicated at the hearing that records of Fox companies will be subpenaed to determine whether the bankers had entered into a conspiracy to take control of the film enterprises away from Mr. Fox, as he charged before the committee.

When Senator Couzens said that Mr. Fox should produce proof of allegations that banks "grabbed" Fox bank deposits to apply against Fox loans before they matured, Mr. Fox said he was unable to prove his allegations, because he would need the assistance of the committee inasmuch as he no longer had charge of any books. Counsel Pecora said the committee would assist Fox if he would furnish the committee with an idea of where to get the proof. Fox listed a dozen New York banks in which he said his companies had loans and deposits.

After reading a letter which Fox said he wrote to the banks asking leniency on the loans, Senator Couzens remarked that it showed that the loans were demand loans and that therefore they were not being called ahead of maturity.

"So charging it off against your balance was legitimate," Senator Couzens said. "This does not agree with your testimony yesterday," he added.

Fox's Charges Stir Senate

Chairman Fletcher on Saturday said that Counsel Pecora had been asked to subpena William Thompson, formerly in the anti-trust division of the Department of Justice, to testify on charges of William Fox that department records had been changed during the Hoover Administration in connection with the Loew stock purchase by Fox.

Later Senator Adams demanded that Louis B. Mayer, be summoned to comment on Fox's testimony. Mr. Fox had said that Mayer told him he had caused the record to be changed from consent to restriction in Fox's purchase of 400,000 Loew shares, and that he would try to have it changed back to approval.

Said Senator Adams:

"I think Pecora should follow up this charge that Department of Justice records were changed. I think he should call Mayer, Thompson and O'Brian. A charge of irregularity in the Government Service ought not to be ignored. It is a serious charge."

Senator Fletcher said he doubted Mr. Mayer had anything to do with the record, and added he did not believe Mr. Mayer would be subpenaed.

It was indicated Saturday that the committee was moving gingerly to check up Fox's testimony. Mr. Pecora later issued a blanket invitation to all persons mentioned by Mr. Fox to appear if they so desired. This included former President Hoover.

Senator Gore demanded that the committee follow up Mr. Fox's charges of a banker's "conspiracy."

Says Financing Saved Fox Film

Continuing, last Wednesday, the interrogation of Murray W. Dodge, former vice-president of Chase Securities Corporation during the time of the Fox financing, Ferdinand Pecora, counsel for the Senate banking committee, brought out the testimony that, through financing of more than $103,000,000 of Fox Film and Fox Theatres and General Theatres Equipment stocks in April, 1930, the failure of the Fox companies was averted. Through this financial operation, control of the two companies passed from William Fox to General Theatres, organized and operated by Harley L. Clarke, president of Utility Power and Light Company, Chicago.

Indicating the Chase interests were responsible for acquisition of the Fox companies by Mr. Clarke and General Theatres, Mr. Dodge testified that the Chase bank and Winthrop Aldrich, its president, stood behind the operations "to the limit."

Mr. Dodge reiterated previous testimony that General Theatres paid William Fox some $15,000,000 cash, plus "other considerations" which amounted to $6,000,000, or a total of $21,000,000, for his control of Fox Film and Fox Theatres, which, according to Mr. Dodge, were confronted at the time with $90,000,000 of obligations falling due. These also were assumed.

Sale of Fox Film "A" stock at $30 a share to a banker group by General Theatres, when the market price was more than 40, brought profits of $3,941,000 in a trading pool managed by Pynchon and Company, in April, 1930, according to the testimony.

In order to finance General Theatres' venture into the Fox and Loew companies, Mr. Wiggin, of Chase, obtained $117,718,750 through sale of various blocs of stock or debentures to syndicates and trading groups. In addition to acquiring the Fox companies, the financing paid to shift control of Loew's, Inc., from Fox Theatres to Fox Film.

Bankers Eager to Participate

Mr. Pecora early last Wednesday sprung a surprise when he revealed confidential memoranda which emphasized the struggle between rival banking houses of Wall Street over the financing which followed acquisition by General Theatres of the Fox companies and Loew's.

Some indicated that Harold L. Stuart, of Halsey, Stuart and Company, who had been the bankers for Mr. Fox, felt they were being crowded out of the picture.

In one of his notes to Mr. Wiggin, Mr. Dodge said: "With Halsey, Stuart out it is possible for me to discuss the whole financing with Kuhn, Loeb again, a thing that I am loath to do unless necessary, as the split-up of the gravy would hurt my feelings."

Later, Mr. Dodge testified he did not intend to convey the impression that he was using the word "gravy" in the accepted sense, but that "prestige" was really what he had meant.

The $117,718,750 of financing used to gain control of the Fox companies and of Loew's, included issuance of $30,000,000 General Theatres debentures; 50,000 shares of General common to Pynchon and Company, for $13,125,000; 133,500 shares of common General Theatres stock and 200,000 shares of Fox Film A, to Halsey, Stuart, for $11,006,250; 103,500 shares of General common to Halsey, Stuart, for $5,625,000; 240,000 shares of Fox Film A to Pynchon for $7,200,000, and $55,000,00 for one-year Fox Film gold notes at 97¾, for $53,762,500.

Mr. Pecora then questioned Mr. Dodge about the numerous and highly complicated financing activities of the various Wall Street groups which participated in the Fox and Loew purchase, and the profits which the various groups earned in the handling of the stock and debenture issues during the financing which resulted in actual purchase of the Fox and Loew companies in 1930, and also in the refinancing of $55,000,000 one year later.

The testimony at this point centered almost exclusively in Wall Street.

The senate banking committee was told, last Wednesday afternoon, about an "inside" memorandum to Mr. Wiggin, dated Feb. 7, 1931, at the time the $55,000,000 Fox Film refinancing was being considered, and in which Mr. Dodge indicated ill feeling existed among certain of the banking groups. Mr. Dodge's note follows:

"We are doing everything to prevent a fight (among the banking groups), as the Lord knows this financing is difficult enough without being torpedoed by Harry Stuart (of Halsey, Stuart, who had said his firm was being 'crowded out'). He is evidently bent on getting control of the management of the company through John Otterson (president of Electrical Research Products) and will use the same methods that the two of them used against Fox to obtain their ends.

"It would be a very profitable and advantageous thing for Stuart and Otterson," continued Mr. Dodge's note, "now that they know they will not have our (Chase) backing in throwing Clarke out of Fox, to make this financing for himself and so obtain control of the Loew stock and of the company for $55,000,000."

Halsey Stuart and Electrical Research previously had participated in Fox financing, before control passed from William Fox, and were trustees—through Harry Stuart and John Otterson, and along with Mr. Fox, in the operation of the companies early in 1930, before Mr. Fox sold out.

Halsey-Stuart, Bank of America, Blair and Company, Lehman Brothers, Dillon Read and Company and Chase Securities handled the original $55,000,000 Fox Film issue of one-year gold notes, issued in April, 1930 for the purchase of the companies, and it was for the refinancing of these notes, due in April, 1931, that Mr. Dodge's communication to Mr. Wiggin, already mentioned, referred.

Mr. Dodge later testified that Halsey, Stuart "finally withdrew from the business entirely and the financing was then definitely in the laps of the Chase Securities Corporation." Mr. Dodge was referring to the refinancing of the issue, and added, "we then had to work fast to see if there was not some possible way of meeting this $55,000,000."

Chase's Film Loss $69,572,180

Enormous Chase write-offs of Fox and General Theatres loans were described Wednesday afternoon by Winthrop W. Aldrich, president of Chase National.

Chase Bank and Chase Securities loaned a total of $89,330,047 to the companies, of which $69,572,180 has been written off and $19,757,866 is now carried on the Chase books, Mr. Aldrich testified. These investments were made during the regime of Albert Wiggin, former chairman of the Chase board, and were revealed when Mr. Aldrich laid before the senate committee a tabulated report showing the status of the Chase interest as of Oct. 1, 1933 (see chart on following page).

This showed that the bank had written off $55,510,588, and Chase Securities, now Chase Corporation, $14,061,591. Chase Corporation now carries only $9,524 on its books. Both write-offs took place some time ago.

Chase Bank bought $29,618,639 of Fox Film Class "A" common stock and wrote off $19,082,076 of this amount. Investments in Wesco Corporation were $18,822,300, of which $14,432,300 has been written off. Total loans and investments in General Theatres Equipment were $21,375,784, of which $21,100,000 has been written off. Out of a total of $2,988,357 in General Theatres stock syndicate loans, $896,211 was written off. Investments in Film Securities Corporation two-year notes of $4,352,994 still are being carried by the bank. General Theatres stock syndicate loans and liabilities of the Chase Securities subsidiary totaled $12,375,073 and all this has been written off, or taken care of by reserves.

Other investments of Chase Securities totaling $1,696,042 in Fox Film, Wesco, General Theatres and Film Securities have been written off to the extent of $1,686,517.

Clarke Again on Stand

Harley L. Clarke, late Wednesday, was recalled to the stand to testify on a $100,000 claim of H. E. Van Duyne, of Los Angeles, said to have been an outgrowth of the purchase of Mitchell Camera Company. Mr. Clarke said the Van Duyne obligation was his own personal obligation, and revealed that Mitchell Camera was bought by him in his own right, and not in the interest of Grandeur, Inc., or General Theatres Equipment.

He testified that Mitchell, of California, was acquired for $1,475,000, but the net worth of assets was shown by Pecora's records to be $250,000. The company's assets later were bought by Mitchell Camera, of Delaware, a corporation formed by Mr. Clarke to take over the patents.

Grandeur was formed by Mr. Clarke and purchased Mitchell Camera of Delaware for $3,100,000. William Fox was said to have been given $2,000,000 of the $3,100,000, which sum Mr. Fox used, according to testimony, in the purchase of Grandeur stock.

Says Fox Dividends Paid, Despite Losses

Causing an uproar at the resumption of the hearings in the General Theatres investigation Monday morning, Chairman Winthrop Aldrich, of the Chase National Bank, and Senator Couzens, clashed violently over revelations that in 1931 Fox Film had paid dividends of $4,104,035, while reporting losses of $5,560,304.

The clash took place after it had been revealed that Chase had lent in 1930 to General Theatres, some $6,000,000—still unpaid—which enabled General to conduct a market operation in Fox Film stock, and after Vice-president Herman Place, of Chase, had testified about the dividends.

The committee returned Harley Clarke to the stand Monday and he testified that the directorate of General Theatres, of which he was then president, had voted him a credit of $228,925 in liquidation of old claims on February 2, 1932, just two days before the corporation went into receivership. Mr. Clarke was then dismissed by the committee so that he might sail for Europe on Wednesday.

The clash between Senator Couzens and Mr. Aldrich followed an attempt by Mr. Aldrich to explain that Mr. Place, the Chase vice-president, who became a director of Fox Film in connection with its reorganization last summer, was not a Fox Film director in 1931, when it paid the $4,104,035 dividend.

Mr. Couzens had remarked during the examination of Mr. Place that the evidence "seems to show a very close affiliation between General Theatres and the Fox Film management, because it will be observed that at the time they were paying these dividends there were notes payable to others of $2,812,000 and there were accounts payable and current expenses of $4,255,000."

"I do not think it safe to say that concerns of that financial standing have been paying dividends during these times," he added.

Senator Couzens remarked that the Fox Film surplus would have been wiped out if the current debts had been paid, but Mr. Place did not think that payment of the debts would have affected the surplus at all.

"That was as far as any available cash to pay dividends was concerned?" asked the Senator.

"Yes," replied Mr. Place.

"In other words," said Senator Couzens, "when you were paying the dividends you were owing the banks and current debts much in excess of any accumulated surplus."

Aldrich Offers Information

Meanwhile, Mr. Aldrich had edged his way to the front and voluntarily took the witness stand, sitting down between Senator Couzens and the witness.

"May I say at this point that Mr. Place was not on the board of the Fox Film at this time, and when you say"—

"Just a minute, Mr. Aldrich," exclaimed Senator Couzens. "I am questioning Mr. Place. I am making some observations with respect to the trial balance, and I am not charging the Chase Bank, or you, at this particular time. And I do not expect to have any interposition of your statement while I am commenting on the trial balance." His face crimson, Senator Couzens declared the hearing will be "run without dictation from Aldrich or anyone else."

Protesting he was only trying to explain, Mr. Aldrich returned to his seat with the remark, "I apologize if I am intervening improperly."

The Chase National's interests in Fox Film at the time of Fox's reorganization in July, 1933, Mr. Place testified, was $31,683,600 face value of debentures and bank loans for the Fox Film Corporation. The bank at that time was also sole owner of $15,000,000 of two-year notes of the Wesco Corporation, which operates a chain of Pacific Coast theatres. Mr. Place testified that Wesco was in default on the notes, which matured April 1, 1933.

"The Wesco situation," he said, "is being dealt with through the medium of certain bankruptcies and reorganizations of the subsidiary groups of theatres. We are consequently very much interested in the outcome."

He said that the Fox Film Corporation and its wholly owned subsidiaries operated at a loss of $16,954,498 during the fifty-three weeks ended Dec. 31, 1932.

Mr. Place admitted that as a result of the reorganization effected last Summer the Fox Film Corporation came "practically not only into the control but into the ownership of the banking syndicate headed by the Chase Securities Corporation."

Mr. Place said the General Theatres Equipment, Inc., had been in receivership since February, 1932, and that Senator Hastings of Delaware was the receiver.

Before concluding his testimony, Harley Clarke on Monday told the committee that the receipts of the motion picture business had been cut in half since 1929.

"The peak of this business was in 1929," he said, "when the theatre receipts throughout the United States were $1,300,000,000. In 1930 those receipts dropped to $1,100,000,000; in 1931 to $900,000,000, and in 1932 to slightly over $700,000,000, a little over half the 1929 peak.

"The first six months of 1933, I am informed, the total revenue in the motion picture business was about $275,000,000, and on the basis of the increased revenue in the last quarter of this year about three months—not the calendar quarter but the last three months—it is estimated that the last three months will bring the total for the half year up to about $425,000,000, which, added to the first six months, will make something over $700,000,000, a most rapid rise, if it is maintained."

Aldrich, president of the Chase bank. The summary showed Chase interests had placed $89,330,047.10 in the film venture and after allowing $69,572,180.44 for reserves or write-offs, now carried this holding at $19,757,866.66. Chase National Bank, according to the summary, wrote off $55,510,588.67 from a total of $75,258,930.83, the amount now being carried at $19,748,342.16; Chase Securities Corporation wrote off $14,061,591.77 from $14,071,116.27, making its final amount $9,524.50.

MAYER AND WIGGIN CONTRADICT FOX

Mr. Dodge placed in the record a statement regarding the Chase financing of Fox Film Corporation in April, 1931, showing that it amounted to $70,897,500, from which the Fox Film Corporation received $27,665,000 for the sale of $30,000,000 of debentures at 92, and $28,800,000 for the sale of 660,000 shares of Loew's, Inc., common stock, while the Wesco Corporation received $14,432,500 for the sale of $15,000,000 of its two-year notes at 96.

Only a little more than $1,791,300 of the $30,000,000 debenture offering, however, was taken by the public, Mr. Dodge testified. As a result of this unsuccessful public offering, the Chase Securities Corporation took up the $30,000,000 of debentures for $20,465,000, including accrued interest, he said.

Mr. Pecora received a telegram Monday from Louis B. Mayer, denying testimony by William Fox that Mr. Mayer had claimed to have caused Department of Justice records to be changed from approval to disapproval of the Fox-Loew film merger.

"Mr. Mayer cannot in this fashion controvert sworn testimony given before this committee," said Mr. Pecora. "If he wants to testify, he will be heard."

Tuesday of this week found Albert Wiggin, the former chairman of Chase, on the stand. Mr. Wiggin flatly denied that he had sent word to President Hoover to "mind his own business." He said that Mr. Fox's story was "absolutely and entirely false."

Mr. Wiggin also presented testimony Tuesday that the Shermar Corporation, his personal company, lost more than $2,000,000 in pool transactions in the stock of Fox Film and General Theatres. However, there were $161,011 profits from pool operations in other General subsidiaries, principally International Projector and National Theatre Supply.

Besides the payment by Shermar and Chase Securities of $1,000,000 in settlement for the defaults of bankrupt members of the pool, Mr. Wiggin's Shermar company lost $1,572,752 in General Equipment operations, but this was offset partially by profits of $332,410 in Fox Film stock activities.

Mr. Pecora then questioned Mr. Wiggin about loans made by the Chase bank to pools operating in the stock of General Theatres and Fox Film, and admitted, after considerable questioning, that, "In the eyes of 1933 we wouldn't have done it. I certainly agree now we shouldn't have made those loans."

Komer Named to Head Detroit Independents

Charles Komer was elected president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Detroit at a meeting of that organization Tuesday. The board of directors include Adrian D. Rosen, attorney; John O'Dell, Joseph Portell, William Schulte and Al Ruttenberg.

The Detroit organization, which is newly formed for the purpose of aiding exhibitors and cooperating with the government in the administration of the code, will hold bimonthly meetings. New officers will be elected at the next meeting.

Florida Refuses to Waive Fees for Itinerant Shows

Operators of itinerant shows and expositions from other states are subject to state and county license fees in Florida, even though they appear under the auspices of a civic or fraternal organization, State Comptroller James M. Lee has decided.

In Jacksonville last week, Colonel Lee clarified the situation following requests from women's groups and American Legion posts that the license fee be eliminated in certain instances. Colonel Lee declared such action on his part would amount to discrimination against operators of shows in continuous operation throughout the year, the reference being particularly to motion picture theatres.

AN OPEN LETTER TO LYLE TALBOT

Dear Lyle:

We always supposed that the beans and sowbelly, together with the plum pudding and huckleberry pie, et cetera, that our wife used to feed you, would eventually develop you into quite a man, but when we saw you last night in "College Coach," and Pat O'Brien sloughed you one on the jaw for disobeying rules and you stood for it, it made us wonder if you were still in the adolescent stage or that our wife's diet had failed to bring the desired result.

When they called signal "33" for you to make a forward pass and you grabbed the ball and dove through the line and went over for a touchdown and won the game for old Calvert, we wanted to pat you on the back, but when Pat caught you making love to his wife and he slapped your ears down we wanted to pat him on the back also.

A Challenge to Pat

You can tell Pat that, while we consider him one of the swellest actors on the screen, yet we object to him slapping our friend around simply for disobeying instructions, and that when we come out there we will take him on, provided our health will permit and provided he does not have a family dependent upon him for support.

One way of "Going Hollywood" is to imagine that the sun, moon and stars revolve around one common center, and too many screen luminaries imagine that they are the "center." This is especially true of the female gender, otherwise known as women, although some men are afflicted in the same way, but we are glad to note that the wheels of your gourd are too well balanced to permit of such an attitude, and we are expecting you to climb up the ladder of screen fame until you sit on the top rung with our good friend Pat O'Brien, at which time we will expect you and Pat to be good friends, but whatever you do don't monkey with another man's wife unless you are positive that her Hubby has gone to Reno.

The next time we come out there we want you to get Pat and the three of us will go down to the "Brown Derby" or the "Tode-In-The-Hole" and have a feed of liver smothered in onions. How does that listen to you, old kid?

Very truly yours.

And just as we finished writing the above the postman brought us a batch of letters, among which we find the following:

Hollywood, Nov. 9th, 1933.

Dear Pa Jenkins:

Have been going to write you ever since I heard you were sick. I just got out of the hospital a couple of weeks ago, where I had been after a very serious auto accident. I am quite well now and have been working in a new picture, "Mandalay," with Kay Francis. Henry B. Walthall was up to see me last week and we were talking about you, Henry is looking fine. Dad and Mother are out here now. They send their love. When you come out you must look me up. You will do this, won't you?

Sincerely,

LYLE TALBOT

There, how's that for a quick response to an open letter that had not been published yet? Some Hollywood folks are not so prompt.

There are spots out here in the corn belt where they have plucked the feathers off of that blue eagle until he looks like he had been run through a dry cleaner.

No, No, Gus Harms!

We have a letter from our old friend, Gus Harms. Gus is the sales manager for the Scott-Ballantyne Co. of Omaha, who handle the Largen sound equipment and cooling device. Gus says he wants us to hurry and get well enough to come down to Omaha and we will go down to Dick's basement and have a Dutch lunch. Can't do it, Gus, can't do it. The Doc won't even let us look at a Schlitz or Budweiser label, and the Doc knows darned well that we seldom look at 'em anyhow. Gus tells us that Bill Bowker has leased his theatre at Dunlap, Iowa, for four years and that he is now a gentleman of leisure. That means that the fish in Minnesota won't stand any more show next summer than a snowball in Yuma, Arizona.

The press and radio tell us that if we want to bring back prosperity we must "buy now." That's no doubt good advice, but what we'd like for them to tell us is what we will use for money.

Estee on the Code

P. G. Estee of Parker, S. D., writes us that the boys up there are hoping we have a speedy recovery. Thanks, boys; we agree with you.

He says that the picture code reads to him like a joke book and that each good clause is nullified by another one. He probbably means that 2 plus 2 equals 4 and 4 minus 4 equals nothing. But that isn't correct. There are some good points in the code provided you can find what they are. We've quit looking. Thanks for your letter, P. G.

Frank Morgan and Alice Brady gave a very delightful performance in "Broadway to Hollywood." We don't know what this picture will do in the cities, but it ought to be thoroughly satisfactory to the smaller communities. Eddie Quillan, the grandson, who was in the picture at the finish, is not only a good actor but he can bowl some, too, we know, for he cleaned us once.

Speaking of Labels

And now comes a letter from E. B. Conant from away down east in Lincoln, N. H. You know that Vermont and New Hampshire is where they have the wooden nutmegs and basswood hams. E. B. says: "You know we cannot get along without your Colyum, so I hope the Doc straps you down until that bad eye can read the label on a bottle, and read it correctly, 10 feet away." Say, boy, who said you couldn't get along without our Colyum? We are not missing Al Capone much, are we?

E. B. says he wants us to come down there, that the fishing and hunting is fine and that there are a lot of swell exhibitors, but why didn't he go on and tell the whole story; tell us about the good buckwheat cakes smothered in maple syrup; the big clam bakes we could have down on the beach; the hazelnuts, the Northern Spy apples and those pretty New Hampshire gals. Oh, Boy; Oh, Boy.

At the top of his letterhead is the word "Charkarohen" and that darned word has kept us awake of nights trying to figure out whether it comes from the Pequod Indian language or is the password of some lodge; anyhow, it keeps our mind off these flowers on the wallpaper. Thanks for your good letter, E. B., and we wish it were possible for us to visit you. Maybe some day; maybe. Anyhow, we wish you the best of everything.

And Those Crooners!

The other night we saw a two-reel subject in which a couple of crooners tried to imitate Russ Columbo. If Russ can't sing any better than those two guys, we will take limburger cheese smeared with asafoetida for ours.

If you have never tried to write a colyum when your mind was foggy and your head sounded like some guy was pounding a bass drum in each ear and your orthography, etymology and syntax was all out of plumb, then don't try it or people may think you are crazy.

SPEAKING OF HOUSE RECORDS

The great god Record having to be served in all accuracy, it has been pointed out that not all Radio City records at the Music Hall are currently being broken by Radio's "Little Women," now playing there. Some weeks ago Fox's "Cavalcade" played that same Music Hall for two weeks and succeeded in drawing through the portals during the first of those weeks some 172,535 patrons, while "Little Women" in its first week drew 165,845. In its second week "Cavalcade" brought 172,064. The second week of "Little Women" is yet to be recorded in full. At least with respect to attendance, "Cavalcade" is still ahead.

What the Picture Did for Me

1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

COCKTAIL HOUR: Bebe Daniels, Randolph Scott—This picture seemed to please the few that came to see it. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 17.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: May Robson—As good a picture as you would care to look at. Drew a good house first night but didn't do so well on second night. No fault of picture, as it is a sweet piece of merchandise. Believe we ran it too hot. No one had ever heard of it, but there should have been two good nights.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

STATE TROOPER: Regis Toomey—Good action picture. Pleased all patrons. Played Friday and Saturday to average business.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THRILL HUNTER, THE: Buck Jones—Pretty good program picture. Jones too windy in this one, and not enough action. Running time, 65 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE: Willard Mack Jean Parker—A simple story told without suggestiveness about the danger to a young, trusting girl who has not been told what may happen to her if she loves unwisely. The bit of the cat and the canary is quite outstanding. I would not class this as a sex picture. I believe that parents should make a special effort to see that their children get to see this. Drawing power above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—A very good little picture and one that the average person will enjoy. Plenty of atction for the men and a little romance for the women. The setting is the African desert, where bandits are attacking the oil company's settlement. Just the type of picture for a one-day showing. We played this one day to a good business and satisfied patrons. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Nov. 17.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WOMAN I STOLE, THE: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—Here is a good picture, splendid recording, and it drew well. Holt has a following that won't give him up. Good acting by all the players and it was liked here. It's a he-man story.—Russell C. Dey, Reedville Movies, Reedville, Va. General patronage.

Empire Films

LETTING IN THE SUNSHINE: Renee Gadd—This would be a splendid picture for a children's show, and I believe would be well liked by the unsophisticated, but it is too silly for the sophisticated. It is a combination of the Marx Brothers, Charlie Chaplin and Harold Lloyd style with a strong dash of Lupino Lane slapstick. There are some very clever slapstick and some excellent dancing, but too many dragged-out scenes. The fifteen who came on opening night either walked out or panned it, and if it had not been for the Armistice holiday I would not have grossed expenses. Running time, 70 minutes.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Can. Rural patronage.

LOOKING AT THE RIGHT SIDE: Gracie Fields—Gracie herself was very good, but the story and supporting cast was decidedly weak. While this show seems to have done big business in all other situations it was not liked here, and flopped badly at the box office.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert Can. Rural patronage.

First National

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—An air story that pleased almost 100 per cent. Barthelmess always goes over in this town, and coupled up with Sally Eilers makes it a wow. Personally think they could have picked someone else for Tom Brown's part that would have been better—just my opinion. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 10-11.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and coal mining patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Fairly good comedy which flopped very badly. Joe gets tiresome, and he certainly has worn out his welcome here.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Can. Rural patronage.

I LOVED A WOMAN: Edward G. Robinson—A great picture for the older people, but the young did not care for it. Did not draw, but all the same it is a big picture. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Nov. 10-11.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MIND READER, THE: Warren William, Constance Cummings—A fairly good comedy romance that packs much entertainment. Principally comedy with a romantic twist and a dramatic climax that should make it very interesting. William as the crystal gazing mind reader is good, as are Cummings and Allen Jenkins. Good entertainment for the whole family. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Nov. 15.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, S. C. General patronage.

Fox

ARIZONA TO BROADWAY: James Dunn—Good crook story and will fill up a bargain night date.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Buddy Rogers and Marian Nixon—Entertaining picture but no drawing power. Business below average. Played Friday and Saturday. Running time, seven reels.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BEST OF ENEMIES: Marian Nixon, Buddy Rogers—Put this on for a school benefit. They filled the theatre two nights. I make the selections for the benefit shows, and when I pick them they must be okay. This was no exception to the rule, and the large audiences were well pleased—also the school faculty, and that is something to crow about. Played Oct. 31.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S GREATEST CASE: Warner Oland—Did standout business on ten cent night. Will draw on any other night and please a lot better than most specials at a much higher price. Buy it, and don't be afraid. It will back you up.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

DEVIL'S IN LOVE, THE: Victor Jory, Loretta Young—The Fox salesman told me this was the picture with a lot of comedy—a very fine show. Perhaps I expected too much, for when I saw it I felt as if I would collapse. The old foreign desert stuff. No good, terrible and everything else that shows disgust. Moral: Never believe a salesman when he is asking for dates. Reaction of audience: Beligerant. Puzzle: Where was I when the show was over? Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 4.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—We did a very good business with this picture and it is the kind that our patrons enjoy. Used some extra advertising, but don't think it was necessary, because our monthly calendars covered the country in a big way and they all picked out this show as one they were going to see. Don't be afraid of it. Step on it and it will deliver.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—A type of picture just suiting the style of these two stars. A real good, entertaining picture. Has everything it takes to make a picture. Business fair. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 6-7.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

LAST TRAIL: George O'Brien—Very good western, as are most of Fox's. This Zane Grey story drew them in and they went out pleased and told me so.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—A little tame, but a good picture for western fans. Played Nov. 18.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—Another good Zane Grey western. O'Brien is well liked here, and with Zane Grey writing and George acting you have a real show. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Nov. 12.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex. General patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—We ran into the first snowstorm of the season and business was away off. However, the show gave good satisfaction. Played Nov. 11.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—A good action picture with a pleasing star. George is a real "he-man" and some horseman. Zane Grey stories are an asset. Drew the average attendance, but pleased. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Oct. 28.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey, Lew Ayres—It is a light comedy story, but oh, boy, it has class. Big draw second and third nights, and they did come the fourth night and called for it. Running time, 74 minutes.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey—Pleasing picture, made with good cast. Two or three tuneful songs with a lot of comedy. Drew just ordinary business and didn't hurt or help the cause.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Considering the unfavorable weather, this picture drew exceptionally well. Patrons liked it, and so did I. Gaynor is the outstanding Fox actress in this community. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Nov. 8.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor—A good picture that will get you some extra business and not only get them but satisfy. Warner Baxter and Walter Connolly do good work and their help puts this over for Janet, who isn't in need of it, but who realizes that she can't make them by her lonesome.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Well, I noticed this picture has been worthy of the three star class. I just do not know how to class it. Those two stars, Gaynor and Baxter, we all know they are class stars, and have billing power for any theatre. I do not believe Warner Baxter has ever failed to please at my theatre in any picture they have ever put him in. But, just Gaynor, while she is full grown, puts me in mind of a mere child. She is too wonderful to be cast as a star in an old Irish story toting pigs around in a basket. She is good in most any picture, but we all know she is too intelligent and well learned in society to be a leading star in such a picture. Put her in a picture where she belongs, and where she can never again see a spark of country life, and where she can never see a shabbily dressed man or a woman. We have had several pictures where she runs the leading part in an old farm plantation, and I have had lots of her admirers tell me this. I do wish she would not play in pictures like this. Take her back to "Daddy Long Legs" and "Sunny Side Up." Give her a new start, and it won't be long till our box office will be smiling like a Hallowe'en pumpkin. We exhibitors do our part. I am doing everything to keep my theatre equipped with the newest and best to please my picture patrons. It is a pleasure to give them the best entertainment they can see no matter where they go. This we have done, and we are now asking cooperation from the producers. Running time, 76 minutes.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Henrietta Crossman—A great pity that we had so few people in for this one. It certainly is not the fault of the picture. The depression in this community is much blacker than ever before. There are about ten pictures every year that will force the bread money to go for pictures. Unfortunately, "Pilgrimage" is not that kind. Some will object to the heroine yelling, "Don't go away, I'm going to have a baby." Running time, 96 minutes. Played Nov. 15.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

but will satisfy generally. Give it to the Legion Auxiliary for a benefit and they'll get you some extra business and help their treasury.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers—Strand Theatre says: "Sorry we did not screen and eliminate the one objectionable scene in this. Otherwise splendid picture." Well, that's just what we did. Had a good house and folks went out saying: "For clean fun and a lot of common sense, we'll take a Will Rogers picture every time." We said, "Oh, yes, always," and looked like the cat that had just swallowed the canary, without batting an eyelash. Some other films that have risque innuendos could be improved thusly.—Mary Hayes Davis, La Belle Theatre, La Belle, Fla. Family patronage.

STATE FAIR: Will Rogers—Did a good business on Friday and Saturday on a return and had quite a number come to see it the second time. It will do better than some you'll have to run and please a lot more.—Mayme F. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY: Janet Gaynor—Did fair on a return and was glad that I traded this for some of the new flops with English dialogue. Good print and pleased better than average program.——Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln Kan. Small town patronage.

WARRIOR'S HUSBAND, THE: Elissa Landi, David Manners—A regular goofy comedy feature that will keep the audience in laughter the whole time. Some gorgeous staging and excellent directing makes this a good show. Fair business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Nov. 6-7.—William A. Crute, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MGM

ANOTHER LANGUAGE: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—A good family picture, but where were my patrons? Theatre was lonesomely empty. I'll swear it was not the fault of the picture. The several who saw it were very well pleased, and went out of their way to tell me so. Played Nov. 6.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Otto Kruger, Madge Evans—This picture is long on footage, but short on entertainment. We were disappointed here. Not much business. Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 13-14.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Madge Evans, Alice Brady—This picture reeks with sexy situations. Otherwise a very nicely acted picture. Did not draw at the box office despite a good title and cast. With everybody out of work, and prices rising, nothing but an extremely popular star or an outstanding production can possibly get them in. Played Nov. 13.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Otto Kruger, Madge Evans—There's a lot of wise-cracks in this picture and they get the laughs. Drew ordinary business but believe that a tieup with a beauty parlor would help plenty.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln. Kan. Small town patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan, Eddie Quillan—A great picture. The acting of Brady and Morgan was wonderful. Quillan made a hit, and patrons were glad to see Quillan back on the screen. Looking forward for the next Quillan picture.—Christ Fourgis, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa. General patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—This is a very fine little show. Has everything the average patron can wish for. Good for any night of the week. Comedy, music and romance. Why do we not have Eddie Quillan more often? The younger set like him. Morgan is quite an actor. The whole cast is "A number one." No adverse criticism by the patrons. Business average. Played Oct. 24.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—Good show but it didn't draw rental. Some very good acting and full of entertainment but something went wrong. One very big ensemble number in color that drew a few oh's and aw's.—Mayme F. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Jean Harlow, Clarke Gable—Good. Was criticized by some, but the young folks liked it, and they are the ones who are keeping the small town theatre on the map. I consider this a much better production than "Red Dust." Running time, 89 minutes. Played Nov. 4-5.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—Played this one rather late. but that seemed no hindrance. Drew above average, and pleased. Anyone who knocks this one is positively perverse. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Oct. 17-18.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

FIVE MORE REPORT IN THIS ISSUE

You are adding the reports of five more contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" in your filing of the comment in this issue. They are:

Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y.; C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas; Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas; Christ Fourgis, Grand Theatre, Mt. Pleasant, Pa.; Mary Hayes Davis, LaBelle Theatre, LaBelle, Fla.

NIGHT FLIGHT: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—Oh, boy, what a dud this is! and such a wonderful aggregation of splendid stars. John and Lionel Barrymore, Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery and Clark Gable will get them in by their past performance. Expecting something, but what a terrible disappointment. No story. A lot of trick photography. Nothing for such stars to do. Should have been made in five reels instead of nine, and run only one day anywhere, if at all.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Tex. Small town patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy—A fast moving comedy packed with laughs. Tracy at his best with good support from Madge Evans and the entire cast. Kept them laughing from start to finish. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Nov. 1-2.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy, Madge Evans—Tracy's name kept many away. His more or less nasal tone is not pleasing to the ear. Did not draw the average business. Those who commented said the picture was all right, but would have enjoyed it more with a handsome actor opposite Evans. Played Oct. 21.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

PEG O' MY HEART: Marion Davies—A wonderful Irish story that should pack them in. However, we didn't get film rental out of it. Played it Sunday afternoon to the smallest crowd that we have had, and it didn't please only 50 per cent, and what that other 50 per cent did to the picture won't do to print. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Nov. 12-13-14.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and coal mining patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warner Baxter, Mae Clarke—This is truly a good picture. Title poor and without pull. Baxter and Myrna Loy wonderful. It will send them away boosting for your theatre. What we need now is more pictures like this.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Tex. Small town patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy, Nat Pendleton—A swell picture from every angle. Again this Baxter comes through with a swell performance. Loy is good too. There is a lot of clever dialogue, especially with Baxter and Loy. Baxter draws well when he has a picture, but Fox almost ruined him with a couple that they had. Myrna has put on a little weight, and is highly becoming. Frankly, I think the public are going Mae West. They seem to like the girls that are not just silhouettes. I may be wrong, but in the last Katharine Hepburn picture that we had she looked drawn and ghastly or else it was the way the picture was lighted. Anyway, I know that the public remarked about the hollows in her cheeks in the picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SOLITAIRE MAN: Herbert Marshall, Elizabeth Allan—Here is one of the most complete flops of the season. Absolutely nothing to it. Patrons walked out on it until at the end there were but a few left to walk. If you have it bought pay for it and don't use it.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Tex. Small town patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady—A delightful picture that you can recommend for the entire family. Pleased young and old. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Nov. 19-20.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN: Lionel Barrymore, Marian Nixon—The answer to the small town exhibitor's prayer. The best picture for the farming communities I have seen for a long time. Barrymore at his best with Stuart Erwin a close second. A picture that sends them away smiling, and the exhibitor does not have to take to the alleys to avoid meeting them the next day. Played Nov. 11-12.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—This picture is okay. The stars are well known, and that helps lots. But went best the first night, second night fair and third night not much. Running time, 88 minutes.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—A natural for any small or large town theatre. Dressler and Beery both much better than in "Min and Bill." Wonderful at box office. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Nov. 10-11.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

TURN BACK THE CLOCK: Lee Tracy—A picture that is different, and real good. If you can get the people in at the beginning of the feature, they will enjoy it much better. Tracy good drawing card here with his never ending line of fast chatter. Running time, 79 minutes. Played Nov. 15-16.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

TURN BACK THE CLOCK: Lee Tracy—A good picture that my patrons didn't seem to care for. The business was not so hot.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Robert Montgomery—Fine production. Recording excellent and the picture was generally liked. Good business on second night. Ann Harding absolutely steals the whole picture, and why not. Run it. It's good.—Russell C. Dey, Reedville Movies, Reedville, Va. General patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Ernest Truex, Una Merkel—Starts out as a gangster story but gradually develops into a good comedy. A real good entertaining picture. Holds the audience interested the whole time. Fair business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Nov. 3-4.—Don. R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Monogram

FIGHTING TEXANS: Rex Bell—According to the attendance at my theatre I feel that the independent westerns are okay. They equal any other company's westerns, and Bell is above the average oldtime actors in looks. The younger element do not pass the remark, "Ah, he is too old." Running time, 59 minutes. Played Oct. 20.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI: Mary Carlisle, Buster Crabbe—True to their proclamation, Monogram has taken its successive step in their progressive campaign to compete with the foremost productions contributed by the leaders in motion picture entertainment. Visualizing the most famous of all fraternity songs, Monogram has produced a most entertaining photoplay with rich comedy and music, which, in standard, will rival if not surpass the popularity of the song itself. Romancing is chiefly around that petite blonde, Mary Carlisle, perfectly selected as to suitability of the role as the sweetheart of the fraternity who renders her performance of a rollicking co-ed with the perfection of a skilled fraternity gal. Buster Crabbe, sharing male honors, is rapidly acquiring popularity as a result of his successful performance with traces of his versatility as an actor already coming into appearance. Ted Fiorito and his internationally famous orchestra supply throughout the three outstanding hits which will become popular with all music lovers around the country. The most famous of all college athletic events is the varsity crew race which brings up the closing events of the program. Other prominent stars included are Charles Starret and Sally Starr with comedy supplied by Eddie Tamblyn and Florence Lake. With the shedding of all traces of amatuerism, Monogram has opened a clear road toward a year of successful showmanship. Treat it the same as other specials. Sky is the limit. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Nov. 19-20-21-22.—William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pa. General patronage.

Paramount

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby—Played this too late, but it drew well. Liked by everyone. Crosby is the whole show. Play it, it will make you money.—Russell C. Dey, Reedville, Movies, Reedville, Va. General patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Jack Oakie, Richard Arlen—Great. Did a nice business considering was late in getting a date on this, and that might have hurt. Will please the younger patrons and would be a swell picture for a school night or pep rally. Some good football shots and some clever songs.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Gary Grant, Fredric March, Jack Oakie—A good picture with comedy, drama and action. Drew good and pleased the men folks.—Played Nov. 10-11.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FAREWELL TO ARMS, A: Gary Cooper—Ran this on Armistice Day. It's a great picture, and will please any time. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Nov. 11.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—This is a natural for the small towns. It has everything. While it is a little preachy about the troubles of the farmer, it is all too true of their state and therefore it is a picture that you can lay to. It has comedy supplied by Roscoe Ates, and there are some clever wisecracks by one of the other principals with Ates as the foil.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

HER BODYGUARD: Edmund Lowe, Wynne Gibson—This picture is mighty good, and yours is a goofy bunch if they fail to like it. It has class, and plenty of everything to put it over. Not too heavy and not too light. It's a darn good picture.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

I LOVED THAT MAN: Edmund Lowe—Lowe, as the confidence man, is great. Nancy Carroll does some good acting as his girl. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 13.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex. General patronage.

INTERNATIONAL HOUSE: W. C. Fields, Stuart Erwin, Sari Maritza—Good show, but you will find plenty of kicks for hall of them cannot follow the picture. It changes too fast for the average patron, and when it is through they do not know what it all was about. Well, that is the point. Just a time passer that is good, we say. Recording is excellent and we think it is well worth playing. Some smut should not be there.—Russell C. Dey, Reedville Movies, Reedville, Va. General patronage.

MAMA LOVES PAPA: Charles Ruggles, Mary Boland—A corking good comedy which for some unaccountable reason attracted small business. Played Nov. 8-9.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Fay Wray, Gary Cooper—Called this a clever romantic drama. The new girl, Frances Fuller, fine, and will be heard from further. Picture clean and entertaining. Played Nov. 12-13.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich, Brian Aherne—Goodbye Dietrich if they give many more like this one. The thinnest story that has ever been incorporated into a picture. The mixer must have gotten mixed up, when she sings, for her voice was poor. She should keep on talking, and not attempt to sing. This Aherne has that cockeyed stilted accent that is a pain in the neck to the corn belt. The only saving grace was Alison Skipworth comedy. My guess from experience is that it will be a washout in the small towns. It just isn't what they want to see. A long way from being the picture "Morocco" was. They build them up, and then tear them down with poor pictures.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott—Zane Grey westerns can't be beat, and this one is one of his best. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Nov. 4.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex. General patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott, Tom Keene—Average westerns don't do any too well here but usually Zane Grey means extra business. Paramount don't make them like they did not so long ago, but they still can make them good enough. Will draw a little better than some of the westerns that you will run.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

THIS DAY AND AGE: Charles Bickford, Judith Allen—This is unquestionably a sensational and courageous picture. However, it is a little too far fetched for the average theatregoer. It is a daring topic, young America, high school youths, taking the law into their own hands. Good entertainment for the whole family, but it will not go over in the small towns. Played one day to average business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played Nov. 16.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THIS DAY AND AGE: Richard Cromwell, Judith Allen—We considered this an exceptional production, but ran into cold, stormy weather. Poor business was the result. Played Nov. 15-16.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Richard Arlen, Claudette Colbert—Goofy, but interesting. Just a happy family gone bughouse carrying people through a depression. Not so hot. Poor attendance on second night. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 13-14.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott, Esther Ralston—Best of the Zane Grey stories pictured. Drew extra business, and pleased. Played Nov. 10-11.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott, Esther Ralston—A typical Zane Grey story which will satisfy the average western fan. Was not up to the average Zane Grey story. They kill 'em all but one boy and girl. Those who like lots of shooting and good outdoor scenery, will enjoy this one.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO

BED OF ROSES: Constance Bennett—I cannot give you any good dope on this one. I lowered my admission, and they did not get much out of the picture. They also did not lose much. Running time, 67 minutes.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BED OF ROSES: Constance Bennett, Joel McCrea—This is better than the average program picture. Very interesting. Pert Kelton steals the picture. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Nov. 4-5.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BEFORE DAWN: Stuart Erwin, Dorothy Wilson—Played this on my serial night. The kids got very much excited—so much that they would go into the lobby for several seconds, shudder, say how spooky it was, and then go back into the auditorium again for another eyeful. They still seem to fall for the mystery style pictures. Not only kids, but the grownups, too. I think they're awful. Played Nov. 3.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DELUGE: Peggy Shannon, Lois Wilson—The spectacular part of this picture is marvelous. I put out 75 per cent more advertising on this one. Tabloids with "world doomed" in big headlines created quite some talk and interest, but with all this advertising campaign the receipts were not much above average. The picture is different, and the patrons seemed to appreciate a departure from the usual style of pictures. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 18.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

DIPLOMANIACES: Wheeler and Woolsey—These two clever comedians well liked here. "Diplomaniaces" no better no worse than "So This Is Africa."—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: William Powell, Ann Harding—People seemed to like the picture, but it failed to draw an average business. Both Harding and Powell very clever, but the sister to Ann should have kept right on picking her cotton. She simply hasn't got It.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garber, Okla. General patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—It is full of disappointments, and did not click for me. Running time, 74 minutes.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—A fine Sunday picture. Excellent entertainment. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Nov. 12-13.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: William Powell, Ann Harding—A trifle heavy. Okay for the sophisticated audiences or where these stars are well liked, but may prove a little boring for the small town patrons. Used it on my midweek bill. Average business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Nov. 8-9.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: William Gargan, Frances Dee—Just the same old cut and dried stuff that leaves the patrons dead in the head, and the exhibitor dead in the box office. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Nov. 11.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

KING KONG: Robert Armstrong—Plenty of action. We need more like this one. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Oct. 15.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex. General patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—Just a program picture, but drew a wonderful crowd, and pleased 100 per cent. George Sidney brings many a laugh as usual. More pictures of this type, and the exhibitors will be better off. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 17-18.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—Played this one pretty late but in spite of this, business was excellent. Consider this picture better than "Diplomaniacs" although ending was rather odd. Played Friday and Saturday. Running time, seven reels.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

United Artists

I COVER THE WATERFRONT: Claudette Colbert, Ben Lyon—This is a wonderful picture. Expertly directed and the acting is perfect. The picture is based on the personal experiences of a waterfront reporter. It is a romantic drama, and contains thrills, excitement, novelty and human interest. One of the best pictures of the season and should prove a box office attraction. Played two days to a good business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 13-14.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor—We were late playing this one, but it does not matter how late you play it. It will pull them in for you, especially the second and third nights.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

YES, MR. BROWN: Jack Buchanan—An enjoyable picture with music and comedy. Good for any night of the week. My patrons liked it and so did I. Drew the average business for one night, but strong enough for two nights. A great relief from newspaper, underworld and all talking pictures. Played Oct. 27.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

ALL AMERICAN: Richard Arlen—Very good picture. Drew a big crowd on Saturday. Running time, 83 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

BIG CAGE, THE: Clyde Beatty—It is a big animal picture full of thrills, and I did okay on this one. Runtime, 75 minutes.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

DON'T BET ON LOVE: Lew Ayres—A good program picture and swell for a double bill. Had a little comedy and some action. Seemed to please. Didn't do much on Friday and Saturday, due, no doubt, to the title.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—These two never fail to register head and shoulders above anything we get. Just signed the new contract and I can say it out loud now.—Ned Pedigo, DeLuxe Theatre, Garer, Okla. General patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: Paul Whiteman and Band—It is one of the most beautiful color pictures ever shown, but no story. Plenty of music and songs. Running time, 63 minutes.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

KING OF JAZZ: John Boles, Paul Whiteman and Band—A very beautiful picture, but just another flop at the box office. Never again will we play a reissue. They are a losing proposition. Running time, 70 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

KING OF THE ARENA: Ken Maynard—This is the first Maynard picture that I have shown since this star left Warner Brothers, and I was rather surprised that this drew more than average amount of adults. The kid attendance was way above average. It is worth the admission price just to see that boy ride. This is a good all around action and thrill drama.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

KING OF THE ARENA: Ken Maynard—A fairly good action picture that pleased the regular serial night fans. Played Nov. 10.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre. Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

LADIES MUST LOVE: June Knight—Not so hot. They walked out on this one. It seems as if it just missed being a good picture. Took an awful nosedive at the box office.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Ia. General patronage.

LADIES MUST LOVE: June Knight, Sally O'Neil—This was not a good Saturday night attraction. We did not expect normal business. We were not surprised. The show seemed to please. Played Nov. 18.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SECRET OF THE BLUE ROOM, THE: Lionel Atwill, Gloria Stuart—Filled the house with this on ten cent night. Heard one little boy say that it sure was scary. Seemed to please the bargain hunters but don't know how the picture would draw on some other night.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

Warner

CAPTURED!: Leslie Howard, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—We consider this a good picture of its kind. Yes, it's rough—so is war. Have a carnival in town and of course did not do much business. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 15-16.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William—Return date for this one, but on account we played this several weeks ago, we must have got them all on the first dates we showed it. That is why we did not do much on it this time. Running time, 102 minutes.—Walter Odom and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—A real picture with a great bunch of stars. No small town can afford to pass this one at any price. It gives your patrons a great treat. Much better than "Forty-second Street." Running time, 98 minutes. Played Nov. 15-16.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LIFE OF JIMMY DOLAN, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Plenty of action in this story of a prize fighter and a dumb detective. Guy Kibbee does well with his little bit. Ran an Owl Show and filled her up. It must have been what they wanted.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

LITTLE GIANT: Edward G. Robinson—Robinson is well liked here. Although this is not up to standard, business was very good. Running time, 74 minutes.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex. General patronage.

MAN FROM MONTEREY, THE: John Wayne—An extra good western that drew above average business.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MARY STEVENS, M.D.: Kay Francis—It seems that our patrons wanted to see the romance of a woman doctor. The story covers considerable ground, and holds the interest all the way. I might object to the fact that the unwed mother theme is here treated so casually, as a matter of course, but it seems to be the thing in so many pictures these days. Drawing power above average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL, THE: James Cagney—The best Cagney had made up to date. Women will go for this one because of the kids. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Oct. 28.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex. General patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL, THE: James Cagney—A very good picture and with an exceptionally good cast. You don't have to wait for the action and this will make you a good picture for any night but Sunday. Drew extra business. And how they liked it! Even the chewers and spitters up in the balcony gave out some favorable comments.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

ONE WAY PASSAGE: William Powell, Kay Francis—Well liked here, but as I had a western with it, and the country people could not get it, the program did not gross expenses. By itself I think "One Way Passage" would have drawn very well.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Can. Rural patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Ran this one as a gangster picture, and had a good Sunday crowd. They all liked it. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Oct. 22.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex. General patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney—Swell. It got them in and they liked it. Jimmy has just begun to get a following and he deserves it. There isn't another bad boy like him and he sure fit this role. If all the pictures were as good as this one, then we would have a fairly consistent gross.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kans. Small town patronage.

SOMEWHERE IN SONORA: John Wayne—Very good western. Did not do so well at the box office. Wayne does not seem to go over very well. Played Nov. 8-9.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

World Wide

BETWEEN FIGHTING MEN: Ken Maynard—Just another bunch of rodeo boys waiting for the season to open.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

BETWEEN FIGHTING MEN: Ken Maynard—Nothing new as a western but good entertainment with some good action throughout. Ken Maynard and the Wonder Horse are the whole thing of course. Business only fair. Running time, 60 min. Played Nov. 3-4.—Don. R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

BETWEEN FIGHTING MEN: Ken Maynard—Good western, excellent for Friday and Saturday runs. Business was average. Running time, six reels.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PAIR OF SOCKS: Moran and Mack—Got a few laughs with his pancakes.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

TALE OF A SHIRT: Terry-Toons—Not so hot. In fact it's tiresome. Running time, one reel.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LURE OF THE ORIENT: Magic Carpet Series—Just like the rest of the Magic Carpets. You get a ride down the Main Stem.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

SLANDER'S TONGUE: Movie Tintype Series—This is the first one of this series that I ran. It brought out some pretty hearty laughs. If the other Tintypes are as good as the first one, there will be no kick. Running time, ten minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

WHERE'S MY WANDERING BOY?: Movie Tintype Series—Get a little kick out of this old stuff. Can't say much for their voice on the side.—Mayme P. Musselman. Small town patronage.

SLIP AT THE SWITCH, A: Chic Sale—Above average comedy.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Can. Rural patronage.

United Artists

BIRDS IN SPRING: Silly Symphonies—Very clever and while it wasn't so funny, it certainly pleased.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

FATHER NOAH'S ARK: Silly Symphonies—Here is a short that will make them like it and talk about it for the next two weeks, until they see another one. This is really good and the color is perfect.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

KING COLE: Silly Symphonies—Excellent, and drew many who otherwise would not have come.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Can. Rural patronage.

KING NEPTUNE: Silly Symphonies—Another good cartoon comedy in color from United Artists. This is one of the most colorful cartoons we have played in our theatre and certainly hope there are many more as good as this one. Running time, ten minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KLONDIKE KID: Mickey Mouse—Good enough cartoon.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MICKY'S GOOD DEED: Mickey Mouse—Got a lot of laughs and pleased generally. Something for the kids when the feature isn't to their liking.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S NIGHTMARE: Mickey Mouse—One of the best Mickey Mouse cartoons made.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Can. Rural patronage.

PET SHOP, THE: Mickey Mouse—A dandy cartoon. Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphonies get the highest rentals, but like everything else in this world, you get what you pay for. Running time, nine minutes.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town and rural patronage.

SANTA'S WORKSHOP: Silly Symphonies—Clever and if you can possibly book it for Christmas week, it will knock 'em over.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

NIGHT ATHLETICS AND BLUE SUNDAYS!

How would you like to run into the competition of night open-air athletics, while the town council bars Sunday showings? Or have you? That's the problem of Ray and Mayme P. Musselman and their Princess theatre at Lincoln, Kansas. Any suggestions would be welcomed at the Princess. Here's the way Mayme Musselman puts it:

"I feel like a heel sitting back and reading the other boys' reports; so here are mine, up to date.

"Have been fighting some stiff competition in night baseball. The town took up collection enough for the lights and the council is donating the field and current. However, with a friendly board of directors, we got the playing time cut to three nights a week, two hours a night. It wouldn't be so bad if the council would allow us to open on Sunday, but they chase all the patrons out of town, nine shows being available within a radius of forty miles. It's tough!"

THREE LITTLE PIGS: Silly Symphonies—Excellent. The color Symphonies are good. The only shorts that pay their board.—B. R. Johnson, Orpheum Theatre, Kerrobert, Can. Rural patronage.

YE OLDEN DAYS: Mickey Mouse—The best Mickey Mouse of the new U. A. group. Something different, and much better sound than the old ones.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

Universal

I KNOW EVERYBODY AND EVERYBODY'S RACKET: Walter Winchell—Only fair comedy. Recording did not seem so good.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

WARREN DOANE BREVITY: We can use more shorts of this nature. A swell vaudeville show with master of ceremonies. Each act the best of its kind. Fast, snappy and funny. A welcome addition to any program.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WARREN DOANE BREVITY: Very good. One of the best, but I think that it is the only one that Universal has. The balance of their comedies are very mediocre.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WARREN DOANE BREVITY: Best two-reeler played in a long time. Patrons call for clean entertainment like this. Too many of the comedies are smutty.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vermont. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BOSKO, THE MUSKETEER: Looney Tunes—Just a fair cartoon. It seems as if Warner is not improving these cartoons as much as they should to keep up with the time. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa.—General patronage.

BOSKO, THE MUSKETEER: Looney Tunes—A good average cartoon. Running time, one reel.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

NAME IS FAMILIAR, THE: Melody Masters—Good musical number.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

"NO" MAN, THE: Broadway Brevities—Another good one from the Broadway Brevity Series. These subjects are all good, and many of them excellent. The color subjects are the best on the market, and should be run in all good theatres.—S. H. Rich, Rich Theatre, Montpelier, Idaho. Town and rural patronage.

NORTHERN EXPOSURE: Broadway Brevities—Good. Running time, 19 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

NOTHING BUT THE TOOTH: Jack Haley—This is a fairly good two-reel comedy, full of laughs and should prove good entertainment to any audience. Better than the last Haley comedy, but there is still lots of room for improvement. Running time, nine minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

ONE STEP AHEAD OF MY SHADOW: Merry Melodies—Nothing wrong with this, but the length. Good music and everything that goes to make a good short. Running time, one reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Small town and coal mining patronage.

RAMBLING ROUND RADIO ROW NO. 3: Pepper Pot—This is a musical review of the radio stars, introducing such favorites as the Lombardo Brothers and Baby Rose Marie. Not as good as the last one, but as a whole it is good entertainment and should please the average audience. Running time, ten minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RAMBLING ROUND RADIO ROW NO. 6: Pepper Pot—This is another good musical review of the radio stars, showing such favorites as the Pickens Sisters and some of Paul Whiteman's boys and several others. Very amusing and good entertainment. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SEEING SAMOA: Pepper Pot—This is a musical travelogue, showing many scenes of beauty and methods of living on the island of Samoa. This is much better entertainment than some of the previous numbers of this series. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

STUCK, STUCK, STUCCO: Pepper Pot—A very poor one-reel subject.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

THAT GOES DOUBLE: Broadway Brevities—Pretty good. Running time, 18 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TOP OF THE WORLD: World Adventure—A very interesting one-reeler, showing scenes in Norway, Iceland and Greenland. This is very educational and interesting. The scenes in the land of the Midnight Sun are beautiful and this should satisfy any audience.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, N. C. General patronage.

20,000 CHEERS FOR THE CHAIN GANG: Broadway Brevities—This is only a fair two-reel act. Running time, two reels.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

WHALE OF A YARN, A: Pepper Pot—This is just another one-reeler of the Pepper Pot series. Only fair entertainment, showing scenes on a whaling boat and how the whales are caught. I sure will be glad when this series is completed and then for some good shorts. Running time, ten minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Serials

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: John Wayne, Ruth Hall—We have run four episodes of this and it has the necessary action and mystery. We believe it is going to be allright, although the acting and direction could certainly be improved.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

MASSES ARE TAKING TO THE ARTISTIC

INTELLECTUAL FILMS AND INTERESTING, TOO

To the Editor of the Herald:

A few years ago it was considered a step in pioneering but bad box office judgment, for a producer to give the public an intellectual picture. Then a producer appeared on the horizon who had the courage, vision and dash for box office indifference to produce an intelligent picture from an intelligent story. Did the producer become a bankrupt as a result of his bold venture? He did not. Neither did the other producers who quickly followed his example by such fine pictures as "Strange Interlude," "Arrowsmith," "Cavalcade" and "The Emperor Jones."

It was once contended that the masses "couldn't take it" as regards anything artistic in the way of films. Well, the masses are taking it, and liking it. And incidentally, the intellectual type of picture has brought a new recruit to the box office; the intellectual and studious type of person. Let's have more of these educational and vastly entertaining pictures.—William Shelby, 185 Florence Ave., Arlington, Mass.

AND WHAT ABOUT PRODUCTION COSTS

To Editor of Motion Picture Herald:

Had Mr. Hart of Hart, Schaffner & Marx publicly declared "our suits and overcoats do cost the wearers a lot of money," or had Mr. Heinz publicly stated that "our products do cost the users a good deal of money," it would have been no more astounding than the remarkable declaration of Irving Thalberg on Page 10 of the Saturday Evening Post of November 4th that

"MOTION PICTURES DO COST A GOOD DEAL—AT THE BOX OFFICE."

This statement would be highly amusing if it were not for the fact that approximately ten million people read the Post every week, and I for one cannot see how it can do our business any good for one of its high executives to publicly declare that we are getting too much for our merchandise.

After reading through Mr. Thalberg's article the second time I have come to the conclusion that he is convinced of the futility of continuing this business unless we simply produce the pictures and dispense with their distribution and exhibition. This is a new thought and it might be in order that it be given serious consideration by those gentlemen in Hollywood who agree with Mr. Thalberg.

I have considerable respect for Mr. Thalberg as a production executive, but when he attempts to step outside his sphere of operation, he, like all of the other gentlemen who have spent most of their lives in Hollywood, takes on more than he can handle. As an evidence of this I point out his fantastic statement on page 83 that "there are several theatre chains of more than one thousand theatres which can be sold at one time." Every one outside of Hollywood is perfectly familiar with the fact that even during the hey-day of chain operation there was only one circuit which operated around one thousand theatres.

I can very well appreciate that to one who has lived the last 15 years in Hollywood and New York, box office prices in a few first-run houses in those two cities appear to be high, but if Mr. Thalberg will glance at a map of the United States he will quickly learn that there are quite a few communities scattered over the country between these two points. And if, during the past 15 years, Mr. Thalberg would have taken the time to investigate, he would have ascertained that, on the average, motion picture entertainment has been and is being sold by the theatre owner at a price to place it within the reach of all classes.

Mr. Thalberg's charge that box office prices are high because of the extravagance of the distributors is quite amusing when one considers that, in so far as all of the larger companies are concerned, the production and distributing departments are practically synonymous. Our merchandise is not made by one company and jobbed by another; it is manufactured and distributed by the same entity, and if, in his opinion, it is costing too much to distribute pictures, this excess cost can be very easily adjusted by Mr. Thalberg and his co-producers.

In the old days it was the practice of the producers to lead the public to believe that we were putting out a pretty good line of merchandise, but during the past couple of years, due to some strange influence—either the depression, prohibition or the NRA—it seems that this has all been changed: It is now stylish to break into print by informing the public how "lousy" our pictures are and will continue to be. This new style is ably and beautifully set forth in Mr. Thalberg's statement on page 85 . . . "selling expenses of pictures which nobody wants to see."

Mr. Thalberg seems quite certain that there is very little wrong with the production end of the business. Never having had any experience in this division of the industry, I feel incapable of arguing this point with him. However, from time to time we have seen certain criticisms directed against the high cost of pictures, but who knows, perhaps this criticism was ventured by some one who had as little knowledge of the production end of the business as Mr. Thalberg seems to have of the exhibition end of the business.

Perhaps in the future Mr. Thalberg might be tempted to write a second chapter on "Why Motion Pictures Cost So Much." If so, I am taking the liberty to suggest that the opening paragraph begin by a true statement of fact—"Motion Pictures Do Cost a Good Deal—to Produce."—P. J. Wood, Business Manager, MPTO of Ohio.

ANOTHER JOB FOR THE NRA?

To the Editor of the Herald:

I would like to call your attention to a problem that is confronting many men and myself at the present time.

I am a commercial artist, employed in the art department of one of the major movie companies in New York. I am working there for the past four years, earning the salary of twenty dollars per week, which is ridiculously low for this type of labor. (I was earning forty-five dollars in an advertising agency before the present position.)

The art director is very pleased with my work but seems powerless to do anything for me, as far as salary is concerned. We've discussed this many times, but to no avail. He claims he just can't "pull any wires" with the "big shots." They wouldn't listen to him. Now there are other men in the department doing exactly the same type of work, but earning very much more than I do. It isn't fair. The director admits my work is satisfactory and could be compared with anybody else's. He explains it is not the fault of my work that calls for the low salary. It is because the company "can't be bothered" to look into the affair. Or possibly they realize that it is difficult for anyone to get another position in these times and are taking advantage of the opportunity to save a few dollars. It is all a huge joke when you stop to consider the enormous salaries paid to the stars and executives.

The minimum wage for artists in the movie industry, which includes layout men, letterers, illustrators, etc., should be from thirty-five to forty dollars per week. The NRA should do something about this situation. It is not only my misfortune to be in these circumstances. I am acquainted with many artists that are employed by movie companies, earning more than half more than they should be receiving, at the end of the week.

Something should be done to better these conditions. I have written you, in the hope that you might forward this letter to the proper persons of the NRA who may look into the matter and perhaps do something about it. If they do, it would be working under much happier conditions, creating fairness in the business, and an eagerness to go on living and working for the future.—Hopefully yours,

"Underpaid."

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE CODE IS INCOMPLETE

The code is signed. Everybody gets a break. Yes, everyone—but those managers who are still forced to labor from morn to midnight, seven days a week, every week. All branches of the industry are now protected against the selfishness of inconsiderate employers, but not the neglected manager.

We can conceive of no greater error in the picture business than this most grievous indifference to the welfare of so important a part in the exhibition machine. As has been stressed time and again, the theatre is the beginning and the ending of the industry, and upon the showmen in charge of theatres, from deluxe operations to shooting galleries, is placed the responsibility of keeping those doors open.

Something must be done to strengthen the manager's initiative and enthusiasm, most vital to the box office success of the motion picture. The crushing burden of 75 to 85 hour weeks marks a return to the worst conditions of sweatshop labor. It's all wrong, and we intend to keep battling until the manager receives the same consideration given to every other code-protected worker in the industry.

The motion picture code cannot be called complete until this is done.

THOSE PRICE WARS

Like a plague of locusts, with the rapidity of a fever outbreak, comes another outburst of price slashing as independents and chains tangle in a bitter, short-sided, gross-damaging and morale destroying battle for business. A pretty sight, indeed.

Of all the ways to further bleed the anemic body of already too weakened show business, no more effective and never failing method has yet been devised by the industry's greatest minds than the futile, ridiculous and infantile practice of price warring. It seems amazing that the lesson never will be learned for every experience has definitely ended in disaster, with all concerned grimly holding a piece of the bag.

Nobody wins and everyone loses.

Drastic admission surgery has yet to register one puny, infinitesimal victory. With conditions as they are today, those concerned should endeavor to strengthen the position of the theatre, instead of wasting precious time and effort on waterfront tactics and fishwife recriminations that have never yet decided any box office battle.

If exhibitors must war upon each other, skilled showmanship applied to adequate entertainment at fair prices might better be their weapons.

But perhaps we are asking too much.

SILVER LININGS

Speaking for the membership, we extend the heartiest good wishes to those Round Tablers whose fortunes in the past few days, we are proud to state, have been advanced.

Congratulations to Bunny Bryan on his being selected as the first publicity director for famed musicman Guy Lombardo. To Joe Kinsky on his elevation to the position of field representative of 27 Tri-State houses. To Harry Moore for being the first two time winner of the main prize in the Fox Midwesco Rocky Mountain business drives. And to all the managers in that division, for well deserved salary raises.

Here are further indications, contrary opinions notwithstanding, that even in these parlous times, managerial ability and perseverance find ready rewards. And here are concrete proofs of changes for the better, of those happier days that may yet be just around the legendary corner.

Managers seeing naught but dark clouds in the sky will be heartened by these actual manifestations of the elusive silver linings.

STARS WHO LISTEN

The successful picture star, in most instances, carries a pretty level business head. Or maybe it should be the other way around. However, what brings this thought to mind is the acumen displayed by Mae West who maintains personal contacts with exhibitors and managers in the field, seeking their opinions and ideas through constant correspondence.

Eddie Cantor is also wise enough to listen. For as he tells it, on the advice of theatremen who had previewed his forthcoming "Roman Scandals," a fresh batch of money was spent on the picture to incorporate in it another song by the star.

Some issues back, we had occasion to comment editorially on the advisability of consulting with the showman on the firing line for first hand reactions that might guide the studio-ites in the production of better selling pictures. The above artists evidently, and to their profit, think along the same lines.

Self satisfied producers, slipping stars and fumbling directors might profitably analyze some of the reasons for the continued popularity of Mae and Eddie.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Doubtless, the answer to this is; if it is a football picture, the "gent" will stay away.

Outdoor Screen Features Hart's "Missing" Stunts

Casting about for some idea different from those he had been using, City Manager Ed M. Hart, Oxford and Paramount Theatres, Plainfield, N. J., used the old time outdoor election screen sheet idea to introduce a fresh note into his campaign on "Bureau of Missing Persons" at the Paramount. The sheet was erected on the side wall of the theatre, slides and teaser copy being projected from a hotel window opposite, the cost being contributed by various merchants who ran advertising slides (see photo).

Another street bally was a bannered unbalanced Ford with trick wheels that made the car go up and down, the gag attracting lots of attention as it had not been used locally for a number of years. This was also "no cost" as an auto dealer advertising sign on the radiator paid all charges.

A week previous to the opening, Hart distributed masks to the children at a Saturday matinee, announcing that those returning the masks on the following Saturday, the opening date of the picture, would be given free souvenirs in addition to being appointed members of the "Missing Persons Secret Service Club." As a result, a long line of youngsters was waiting at the box office on the announced date.

Front page newspaper teaser ads were also planted in which rewards were announced for information regarding local missing persons, actual names being used, the theatre and picture being mentioned.

Local Paper Carries Fair Contest Story

Some time ago we requested that members receiving certificates of honorable mention in our recent World's Fair contest forward any local newspaper stories announcing these awards. A bit tardily perhaps, but nevertheless warmly welcome, is the clipping sent on by that charming show-woman Mrs. Edith Fordyce Princess Theatre, Selma, La., which tells of the contest in detail and mentions Mrs. Fordyce prominently.

This is very good publicity, indeed, especially since the story finishes on the following high note—"Her shining personality and her untiring interest in her work have certainly put the Princess Theatre on the map."

For which the lady in question is entitled to an extra bow and a request from Club headquarters for more detailed reports on her recent activities.

Round Tabler Wins First Drive Prize

By winning the big award in the recent "New Show Year" Drive, put on by the Fox West Coast Rocky Mountain Division, Manager Harry R. Moore, Egyptian Theatre, Delta, Colo., has the proud distinction of being the first to win two consecutive business drives conducted in the theatres of that division.

In addition to fulsome local newspaper mention of this outstanding feat, Harry also received the swellest kind of a letter from his chief, Rick Ricketson, besides, of course, a fat check for bringing home the good old bacon.

Other Round Tablers who finished in the money are: E. C. O'Keefe, Babcock, Billings, Mont.; George Paper, Longmont, Longmont, Col.; Don Sheedy, Rio Grande, Las Cruces, N. M.; William Powers, Jr., West, Trinidad, Col.; Fred Bezold, Lotus, Sheridan, Wyo., and Ed Marquard, America, Ft. Collins, Col.

Chet Miller, Cheyenne, Wyo., city manager, won a silver loving cup for the best advertising campaign, and E. K. Taylor, Wilma, Missoula, Mont., was awarded a wrist watch for the best theatre maintenance record.

Swell work, members, and now, how about sending in some of those campaigns that won the prizes?

Manager Supplies Outfit For Poor Youngster

That a certain Pennsylvanian youngster is now happily attending school well clad is due to the efforts of Manager Bill G. Serrao, Columbia Theatre, Kittanning, Pa., who contributed the wardrobe from a percentage of the receipts on his showing of "Mayor of Hell." Bill previewed the picture and the thought struck him that it would be a fine gesture to do something for a local youngster whose circumstances might be akin to those of the boy in the picture.

He took the idea to his newspapers and local welfare workers who concurred heartily and assisted Serrao in digging up a worthy youngster. The newspapers of course ran human interest stories of the proceedings in which the theatre and picture were mentioned. On the day before his opening, Bill staged a parade of his local boy scouts and newsboys headed by the high school band, with the fortunate above mentioned youngster marching at the head of the procession.

This member used a number of other practical gags in his campaign, but the above two netted him the most in returns in addition to a three-day newspaper crossword puzzle contest.

Leave It to Sedge

Wherever there are possibilities of extending the fame of the Paramount, Staten Island, N. Y., you may be sure to find the skilled hand of Sedge Coppock, head man of that deluxe house. A recent instance of this is a two-column story in the local high school paper in which Sedge spoke at length about the opportunities in the motion picture business, the theatre of course receiving generous mention in the story.

Manager Promotes Free Trolley Trips

Contributions from that sterling showman, Joe Kinsky, Capitol Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, are always welcome, and we are therefore pleased to pass on some of the box office builders he has been using recently.

To publicize a special stage attraction, Joe advertised that he would give to every person attending the show on the opening day two street car tokens providing they presented a street car transfer issued on that day at the box office. The theatre paid $100 for $300 worth of tokens, and ran screen advertising, the service company obtaining extra patronage from persons who paid fares on the street car to come to the theatre to take advantage of the offer.

Single fares on Sioux City street cars are 10 cents or three tokens for 25 cents, so the cash value of the free rides offered by the theatre was computed to be 15 cents at the least. A line of patrons extending halfway down the street gathered an hour before opening time attests to the success of this idea. Unfortunately, Joe neglected to send along the photo of the crowd he speaks of in his letter.

Two recent newspaper contests were also productive of good returns, the first requesting a slogan for the Capitol netted almost 100 inches of free publicity in one paper, and the second a classified tie-up returned more than a full page of free display advertising for the 150 passes contributed by the theatre. To obtain these free admissions, readers were required to insert a paid want ad over a period of two certain days.

Since writing the above story, we have received the good news that Joe Kinsky has been promoted to field representative for Tri-State, of Des Moines, overseeing 27 houses. Incidentally, another of the Kinsky operation forms will appear in an early issue.

Managers Still Scoring On "Bowery" Plugs

Round Tablers continue to strut their stuff in various campaigns that cover many different angles of exploitation on "The Bowery," and from the many received a number of the stand-out stunts from various spots are chronicled.

In Baltimore, Md., a hotbed of high-speed showmanship, Manager E. A. Steinbuch, Loew's Stanley Theatre, got himself some HONOR ROLL . . .

Below are the names of some of the theatre circuits, independent and chain, granting their managers a day off each week. The list obviously is far from complete, and the names of others will be published in later issues as they are received. Managers receiving a day off, whose employers have not been mentioned, are invited to send in this information for inclusion in future Honor Roll lists.

very sweet newspaper breaks both in publicity and tieup ads. He promoted a long forgotten bar which was planted in the lobby and hooked in with one of his local brewers to supply plenty of free brew and free lunch.

The result was a half-column story in one of his papers, in addition to which the brewers took a seven-column ad announcing the free-beer stunt which was illustrated with a production still of Wallace Beery imbibing an old-time schooner of suds, in addition to another cut of Pert Kelton around which tieup copy was written. Another paper used a three-column institutional flash plugging their "apartment for rent" ads, and this, too, was illustrated with a production still of Beery and Raft, properly credited.

Wally Caldwell sold the Toledo, Ohio, Director of Safety on the idea of using labelled street signs for the date at Loew's Valentine in that city. This gag was put over with four porcelain enameled street signs, labeled "The Bowery," which graced the four corner trolley poles at the intersections of the two main streets, and remained up during the entire engagement.

The brewery truck idea was employed by Manager Vernon Reaver, Poli Palace, New Haven, as the highlight of his showing on the picture. A local brewer was hooked in to furnish an old-fashioned horse-drawn truck with a load of beer barrels.

Sock Police Lobby For "Headquarters"

In line with the previous effective lobbies on pictures with police backgrounds, the New York Strand drew continuous crowds on the showing of "From Headquarters" with exhibits of police riot and shotguns, tear gas, bombs and hand grenades, machine guns, handcuffs, leg irons and other "playthings" used to break up riots and capture criminals. Incorporated in the flash were blow-ups of actual police circulars offering cash awards for information on wanted men.

Near the box office was installed a teletype machine promoted from Western Union, on which a continuous tape message was printed similar to that used by the police. From time to time these were clipped and pasted to regular sending blanks and distributed as heralds. A Hooven automatic typewriter with a continuous sheet on which was typed typical police criminal messages was also planted in the lobby, and these messages were torn off and also distributed to the passersby.

An additional crowd stopper was a complete finger printing outfit illustrating the new stainless method now employed, and patrons so desiring took away their finger prints on a special slip headed with picture advertising. First aid apparatus, including oxygen machines and other paraphernalia used by the police, were also shown and blinking red, yellow and green traffic lights with the traditional green police station lamps also conveyed the official background of the story.

An out of the ordinary giveaway consisted of thousands of copies of a popular detective story magazine with stickers on the covers tying in the magazine copy to the name of the picture. These above stunts with others suggested in the Warner press book should aid managers in other spots in executing a well rounded campaign on this feature.

National Advertisers Tied In for Ace Displays

Elmer H. Brient, from down in Richmon (Va.), at Loew's State, has worked out an arrangement with the promotion manager of his local paper to take on any tie up of nationally advertised products, as follows:

Elmer pays for the printing of window streamers, in which merchandise tie-in copy is illustrated with scenes from the picture he is advertising. Stars, picture title and theatre are given a big break on the streamer which the newspapers paste on the windows of the many local stores selling the advertised product.

The only expense to the theatre is the printing and cost of cuts. Not only are the best spots in town secured without difficulty, but best of all, these windows are obtained without the necessity of issuing a single pass. No matter how tough a merchant may be on theatre displays in his windows, he certainly should go for this clever gag to sell more goods.

This is an idea that many other members would no doubt like to put over, and to those we suggest getting in touch with Brient for sample streamers and more dope on the stunt.

ROUND TABLE XMAS PARTY

Hey, youse guys, remember the swell shindig last August at the Brass Rail? As Schnozzola would say, "thata wuz a party!" And it sure was. Everyone present had the time of his lily white young life; so much so, that the boys in these parts have decided to put on another as good—or better And right soon.

Therefore, on behalf of the committee, we are pleased forty ways to announce the first of the season's Managers' Round Table Club social doings in this district, the Big Christmas Party, to be held:

Thursday, December 21, at the Brass Rail Restaurant, 49th Street and Seventh Avenue, New York. Starts midnight. Price: One dollar ($1.00).

If you were at the last Club Get-Together, you're not going to miss this one. The same good fellowship, the same conviviality, even better brew, eats and souvenirs, plus plenty of swell entertainment. And last, but not least, the same informality we all enjoyed so much last time.

And you fellows who missed the other party, certainly won't want to pass up this one. In fact, the committee anticipates an even larger attendance and for this purpose has arranged for much larger quarters in one of the commodious banquet halls on an upper floor of the Brass Rail Building.

The same spot has again been selected, as everyone agrees that for the modest sum of One Buck, the Brass Rail folks certainly put out pah-lenty of good food and brew. And that pah-lenty goes double, for they are going to try and outdo themselves for this big get-together.

Right now, we are not able to tell you more of what the committee is planning. But it's to be a swell Christmas Party, with a tree, and nice presents for everyone. A flock of souvenirs and other gifts that you can take home with you.

Stars and celebrities who will be in town at that time will be there, and nothing is to be left undone to make it a time that we will all remember. So take that One Dollar bill right now, fill out the blank at the bottom of this page, and send it to Club headquarters, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

Make up a party or come alone. You'll have a swell party either way. Independent as well as circuit managers will be represented, and, of course, non-members will be just as welcome.

Remember the date: Thursday Night, Dec. 21. The Place: Brass Rail. Admission, One Small Dollar. Send it in now.

Star Poses with Springfield Paper

It seems that when Edward G. Robinson was about to make "I Loved a Woman" he wrote to various managers in the "Insull Empire" requesting copies of newspapers containing stories and editorials that had to do with the financial collapse of the public utilities operator.

Manager Mike Chakeres, State Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, ever on his toes for new slants to put over his attraction, not only complied with Robinson's request, but succeeded in having the well known star pose reading a copy of the Springfield paper. Naturally, the publishers of the "Daily" went for it with a two-column cut and story (see photo), and as it was planted a few days in advance of his "Woman" date, helped to build up the gross.

Star Reads Mike's Paper

Add the above to the legion of ideas from the fertile minds of fast-thinking theatre men in answer to that often-asked question, "What's showmanship?"

The above photo shows the excellent and attractive front that Louie Charninsky, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas, turned out for "Elmer the Great." Nobody made a mistake and walked into Joe's mouth, instead of the entrance, did they? That's Louie standing at the box-office with a smile as wide as Joe's.

McManus Keeps K.C. Hot With Ace Gags

Planting a mail box in his lobby for the convenience of patrons sending congratulatory letters to Marie Dressler on her recent publicized birthday, was one of the recent stunts put over by the fast moving John McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City, Mo. Though it took a lot of manoeuvering to obtain the necessary permission, nevertheless John convinced the postmaster, resulting in an out of the ordinary lobby idea and much publicity in the papers.

The very conservative Star gave Mac a further break with editorial mention of the star's birthday, and other papers carried accounts of the actual Hollywood celebration of that event in addition to a feature story.

John put over a neat idea with tieup on "Turn Back the Clock" by planting a cut of Lee Tracy in a photographer's ad, plugging bargain priced sittings, and a jeweler went for a window contest in which prizes were given to those guessing nearest the exact time an eight-day clock would stop running. Appropriate picture copy and stills were of course part of the display. For a street stunt on this one, a 1902 bannered Cadillac was used to good effect.

Helen Hayes, herself, was used in advance of "Night Flight" in a tieup with a coast-to-coast broadcast by the star on the Ipana hour, and McManus promoted some nice free display ads from the toothpaste people in addition to publicity breaks in the papers. Air stuff included cutouts at the Municipal airport and a banner flown from the tail of an airplane on the opening day.

Ties In Star To Ad Page

Mindful of the possibilities of newspaper institutional breaks John netted the theatre a three-column ad in which the newspaper plugged the classified bicycle column with a cut of Jean Harlow and her pet bike, selling the benefits of bike riding for reducing, caption under the cut including mention of the coming of "Bombshell."

Spotlight stunts on "The Bowery" included a number of street stunts. The old reliable 24-sheet bannered street car was used to cover the downtown section during the rush hours, and two beer distributors were promoted to decorate their delivery trucks with theatre advertising. Of course, McManus put on the costume party with a "Bowery Nite" at one of the leading ballrooms, this stunt being played up in all papers with the dance people breaking large display ads plugging the event and the picture.

Here's The Dollar!

Please mail me my ticket for the Round Table Xmas Party, to be held on Thursday, December 21, at the Brass Rail, Seventh Avenue and 49th Street, New York.

Former Advertising Executive Describes Methods Adopted To Put Over Unsuccessful Theatre

by J. W. LEIGH
New Orleans Correspondent

After remaining dark for years, the St. Charles, New Orleans, La., has been reopened as a first-run picture house and its success has been a marvel among picture men who freely predicted that no one could make the house pay after its long change of owners and unsuccessful policies, such as stock in its several varieties, tab and other varieties of amusement enterprises.

HARRY McLEOD

Harry McLeod, age 40, a native of New Orleans, the present manager, originally an advertising promotion man, relates the reasons for the current success and policies of the theatre.

"When we opened the old St. Charles, it had been closed for four and a half years. It is situated four and a half blocks from Canal Street and 10 squares from our theatrical center. The neighborhood had gone down with the closing house, so naturally the 'opening' of the old house was considered by most film and show people a foolish venture and destined to failure.

"Briefly, the house has been successful since that first week a year ago. Flu epidemics, bank closings and depression could not stop it, and now the Managers' Round Table editor is asking me to tell why and 'how come.'

"When it was decided to open the house, A. Miles Pratt, our president (he is commissioner of finance for the City of New Orleans), cooperated to the fullest in letting me carry out a definite policy.

Outstanding House Staff

"This policy can be set forth in a few words—'The best entertainment in first-class surroundings at the least cost to the patron.'

"We picked the personnel from 550 applicants.

"The 31 people working at the St. Charles know only one rule—'The patron is king.' They are all theatre people of training; they have their own club; their own Loan Society with their own stockholders. They all love the St. Charles and 28 of the 31 have been with us since opening. Mr. and Mrs. Patron get five welcomes at the St. Charles—the footman, the cashier, the doorman and the chief of service and from me. I mention this staff first because I believe they rank first in the list of reasons why the St. Charles succeeded.

"As for the show itself, we were forced to use sluff pictures, those rejected by the large chain theatres of New Orleans and naturally some were not so good, but if the picture was weak, we gave a strong program of short subjects, sometimes as many as five subjects beside the feature.

"The St. Charles is an 1,800-seat house. The equipment contains the finest projection and sound, and there is no distortion on screen from side seats.

"Service: Eight ushers, maid and porters on duty at all peak hours all week, parking for 10 cents in a neighboring garage with theatre stub, 'quiet' signs throughout house and employees trained to whisper, split-up groups all reseated together by ushers, and old patrons helped up and down steps.

"Advertising: Pictures of merit get the following: Newspapers, radio, two programs a week, sound truck, taxi cabs, window cards and easels for hotels, one sheets, occasionally 24 sheets and heralds for parked cars. Better Films Committee tie-ups covering schools and clubs. We spare no expense on our fronts, using an extra big lobby every three weeks.

Screens Every Picture

"We have spent over $600 to operators for screening pictures we did not buy, as I personally screen every feature and short. We allow no bad prints, and the feature always starts between 8:10 and 8:30 P. M.

"Summing up the reasons for our success this first year, I would list them as follows: A 'smash' opening, staff full of enthusiasm and each one a showman, the best sound with perfect acoustics, and a price of 10, 15 and 25 cents.

"Also, a good show with top-notch shorts, very few sex pictures, a great many family pictures, a personal endorsement of good pictures in ads and large campaigns, and constant watchfulness for small details in handling the public, including watching the fader.

"In addition, 'Quiet, Please' requests, polite telephone answers, prompt performances, feature going on at convenient hours, politeness, pleasant welcomes and 'come agains' from the entire staff, and an attractive front and spotless house."

All of which proves that New Orleans appreciates the St. Charles.

Sock Ballys Build Sugarman Box Office

Manager Harry M. Sugarman, Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood, Cal., tops all recently reported gags on the "Three Little Pigs" by not only planting the porkers in his lobby as an advance plug, but also dug up a stuffed wolf, thereby completing the entire cast of this popular short subject. In addition, Harry "neglected" (?) to secure the door of the pen with the result that the porcine campaigners made their escape and roamed about the streets until they were captured. Not before, however, the newspapers were advised of the occurrence, which of course resulted in the publicity that Sugarman expected.

Sugarman's Robot Man

As a feature of his stage presentation of "Alice in Wonderland," Harry promoted an engineer to construct without cost a miniature railroad in his expansive lobby, upon which a miniature train carried youngsters for free rides. All the necessary "props" that go with railways were included, such as crossings, danger signals, etc., and of course gathered eager crowds as can be seen from the accompanying photo.

A "robot man" idea was another of the crowd stoppers that this ingenious showman recently put on with the aid of a performer specializing in this field of work. A small building was constructed with wires and buzzers attached to sockets and to the robot, and he would do his stuff as though guided by the electric impulses.

These are some of the snappy samples of showmanship that Sugarman is stressing to keep his theatre in the public eye, and his statement that intelligent ballyhoo is vital in today's show business is evidently proven by the profitable business now being done by the Egyptian under his leadership.

The above smart lobby poster on "Moonlight and Pretzels" was executed by Jack Alger, art department head of Alger's Theatres, Peru, Ill., and forwarded by Round Tabler J. J. Greene, general supervisor of operations. Note the clever arrangement of the framed stills.

MORE ON DECEMBER IDEAS

Additional Dope on Campaigns Managers Are Now Planning to Hold Up Pre-Holiday Business

In last week's issue, we compiled a number of ideas from various members in the field on what they are doing to keep up their December business. Here are other slants from managers, including Louis Orlove, Milwaukee; Bill Hendricks, Memphis, and George Henger, Oklahoma City:

Theatre stickers will be used by many merchants on every outgoing package and Christmas mailing shopping lists. In this case, sticker copy contains message from stars on shopping early, or tie-in copy, such as "Shop early at Blank's, and attend the matinees at the Strand." Cost of stickers are being promoted for screen ad.

Imprinted sticker tape for securing packages is another smart device being utilized by theatres, one side of tape containing theatre copy and store. This will be used widely, being a definite merchandising service, the cost of which will be undertaken by the theatre or merchant, or split.

The "18 more shopping days to Christmas" idea is being used in windows and other store locations, theatres furnishing posters with name at top and attraction at bottom, shopping copy in center. Posters are constructed so that each card designating number of days can be changed daily, and attraction copy is handled in the same manner. This slant should land locations otherwise difficult for the theatre to obtain.

Transportation Tieup

Recently a member made street car tieup which could be adopted for the holiday period. He advertised two free street car tokens to anyone attending the show and presenting a street car transfer issued that day at box-office. The theatre paid $100 for $300 worth of tokens and ran a screen ad for the car line company, who figured the gag worthwhile, as many paid their way on the cars to the theatre to get tokens.

Special Fashion Shows

This angle is being plugged strongly in various spots with stores going for fur and winter style shows in theatres. This is always recommended providing it is put on in the same manner as any other big time stage presentation. Properly sold, cooperating merchants will go big for all manner of advertising without expense to the theatre. Quite a few managers have reported this as one of their outstanding December campaigns.

Festival Week

These are being arranged as follows: In one instance, as a "revival" in advance of which manager is planning to re-run year's biggest pictures selected from a group to be voted on by patrons. Another idea is the "Pre-Xmas Festival" in which manager is fighting the slump by booking in the biggest pictures available in weeks before the holiday and is spending a lot of money to sell the idea to shoppers. The voting can be put over by distributing cards containing certain pictures with patrons asked to check those they prefer seeing.

Group Nights

For nearby factories, mills or corporations employing many people, managers are arranging for special holiday nights in the week before Christmas to be paid for by company heads, and given as a Xmas bonus or gift, if business does not warrant anything better. Price reductions are being arranged and extra features put on by company personnel.

Group nights are also being put on with local fraternal organizations, lunch clubs, etc., to plug the "shop locally" campaigns, with membership attending in a body, pep talks by leading citizens, and extra entertainment from lodge and club members. Newspapers, of course, will go for this heavily to build up local shopping business.

Various local amateur glee clubs and male choruses composed of many leading prominent citizens are being used, the appearance of these organizations of course almost guaranteeing extra revenue from club members, other friends and relatives. Good will parties are also set between theatres, newspapers and women's clubs.

Miscellaneous

Many managers will go for the usual studio stills showing stars in holiday poses, which papers always demand. They will also be planted in windows, and in holiday programs. Xmas jingle newspaper contest with prizes for filling in best last lines is an idea for co-op pages. Cooking tieup with domestic science classes for lobby or mezzanine exhibit, will also be used. Holiday telegrams from stars with plug for coming pictures, for lobbies, are also being arranged.

Leading Portland (Ore.) department store furnished above six lookers, dressed in blouses, shorts and shoes, to walk from store to Music Box Theatre as part of Manager Andrew Saso's campaign on "Morning Glory." Newspapers ran the shot and story, store putting in window with blow-up of above picture and production stills.

Auto Giveaway Brings Largest Crowd

A car giveaway that, according to the local papers, brought out the largest crowds in years was one result of Manager Abe Cohen's campaign at Schine's Massena, Massena (N. Y.) The stunt was put on in conjunction with 22 local merchants who underwrote the cost of the car, and in return were given coupon chances which were distributed with all sales.

A lot of advertising was done to publicize the stunt and in addition to full page ads, Abe put out a co-op herald, in which every merchant participating took space to further plug the stunt. As the rules required that the winner be present at the drawing, the winning number was also announced to the throngs outside who could not gain admission. In appreciation of the work done by the local police in keeping the crowds in order, Abe threw a party for the entire force which is our idea of a swell good will builder.

Cohen's Front and Bally

The accompany photo gives a flash of Cohen's front on "Moonlight and Pretzels," and the bannered cut out trailer which was driven around town and the neighboring villages. This is the first report we have had from this member in some time, but Abe explains that the work necessary on putting over his campaigns has kept his nose to the grindstone, and that he expects to keep in closer touch in the future.

"Lady" Stunt Put Over With Co-op Page

Manager Ralph Crabill, Winter Garden Theatre, Jamestown, N. Y., is another of the many showmen who have wisely adapted the local "Lady For a Day" idea in their campaigns on the picture of the same name. Tying in with the evening paper, the gag was inaugurated with a series of publicity stories requesting that needy local women apply for the spot.

Auto dealers, hotels, women's stores and restaurants were hooked in in the usual manner, and Crabill went a bit further by promoting a page of coop ads, among those merchants who participated in the stunt, the paper coming across with a half column story with a streamer head calling attention to this exploitation.

Crabill has been putting across some interesting campaigns recently, among them being an apple pie baking contest in which over 100 luscious specimens were entered by the good cooks in that section. A committee of local prominence selected the winners, and Ralph secured some extra prestige by donating all the entries to the Salvation Army for distribution among the needy.

Promotes Big Air Hour For "Keyhole" Plug

A $2,000 broadcast on the leading New England station, promoted without any expense to the theatre, was the highlight of "Broadway Thru a Keyhole" campaign at the Poli Capitol, Hartford, Conn., put over by Manager Charles Brennan, with the able assistance of U. A. Exploiteer Charles E. Moyer and Assistant Lou Cohen.

It seems that one of the most important broadcasts in that section is the "Travelers" hour, on which have appeared well known symphony orchestras and operatic stars. James Clancy, station operating head, a former showman, happens to be a personal friend of Moyer, and the set-up was made for a presentation of music and drama based on "Keyhole" to take place on the above air time. The best of talent was employed and a special 35-piece orchestra also engaged. The other theatres in the circuit were advised of the hookup, and advertised it to plug their advance campaigns on this picture.

Every night club and hotel orchestra plugged the picture's hits, these also being "aired" through all their broadcasting connections, and another music gag that attracted attention was a Russ Colombo impersonator who sang that star's numbers through loudspeakers rigged up over the marquee. A number of different stores on the main streets were tied in to elaborate window displays that took the form of "Keyhole" windows, through which passersby were invited to peep at the theatre displays and special items sold in connection.

Postal telegraph cooperated with all florists in the city with special cards, tying in with orchid displays, further advertised with the Winchell "Orchids for You" window ad. Among the many other effective angles put over were college throwaways made up especially for the students of two nearby universities and announcements placed on every bulletin board in the school buildings. A host of other practical slants were effected, all turning in a gratifying response that marked up a high score for the efforts of these fast-moving showmen.

Novel Angles Stressed On "Footlight" Dates

Chalk up another smart idea to the credit of Charlie Smakowitz, Warner zone ad chief, and Manager Leo Rosen, Troy Theatre, Troy, N. Y., who put over an unusual co-op ad page on "Footlight Parade." Radio dealers in town were sold on the idea of offering a late model in a contest participated in by six stores, each of which ran ads containing cuts of the girls in the picture. The prize was awarded for the one cutting out the pictures of the girls and arranging them in a most artistic and original manner. Free tickets were also offered as other prizes, these being the only cost to the theatre. In addition, the title was mentioned in an eight column headline, besides which the theatre also received a free ad at the bottom of the page.

The Switow Brothers, operators of the Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., featured their campaign with a strikingly animated window display tying in the song hits. The accompanying photo illustrates the flash, representing a miniature stage, six feet long by five feet high. The colored cutout figures were twelve inches high and traveled on an endless belt moving across the stage.

Another animated display on this attraction is Jack Hodges' excellent lobby idea at the Tampa Theatre, Tampa, Fla., which was fifteen feet high and twenty feet wide (see photo). Two color wheels focussed on the silver metallics on the face of the display which revolved slowly, creating a striking effect. In the back, on steps of different heights, were placed fifteen-inch colored cutout enlargements of the girls, and along the inside, further lighting was secured by red and blue strip lights on flasher button.

Bill Cadoret, Capitol, Rochester, N. Y., plugged a street bally with fifteen girls, each carrying an imitation suitcase, the covers of which were transparent and lettered, with electric bulbs inside. As the girls walked along, they pressed buttons which lit up the cases so that the title and theatre could be seen by passersby.

The above novel slants indicate some hard thinking on the part of these showmen in their endeavors to dig up unusual exploitation, and we are pleased to recommend their creations for use in other spots.

Sorry, Barrett

In the story of Radio's spiffy "Little Women" press book, on Page 61 of last week's issue, we inadvertently neglected to mention the last name of S. Barrett McCormack in crediting this able gent for his efforts. It was just one of those things that happen every now and then, and we promise not to do it again. Thanks.

Rosenthal Promotes Citywide Giveaways

Cooperating with all his local grocers, on a lucky number giveaway of fifty Wesson Oil mayonnaise mixing combinations, Morris Rosenthal promoted quite a campaign on this in conjunction with his showing of "The Way to Love" at the Majestic, Bridgeport, Conn.

Over 20,000 numbered cards were distributed by 300 participating grocers upon which half of the copy plugged the picture and theatre, as did standee window cards exhibited in each store. Daily morning broadcasts in advance were paid for by the oil company, which also sponsored large newspaper ads calling attention to the picture as well as the giveaway.

As a lobby stunt, Morris planted a number of good looking gals in evening dresses to demonstrate the mayonnaise in the lobby, with free samples being distributed to all women patrons. That the oil company is thoroughly sold on the possibilities of this is indicated by their sending in a special crew of men to handle the campaign, and while they are plugging their company's products at the same time they are giving the theatre and picture an unexcelled citywide plug.

Issues Four-Page Tab.

To celebrate the fifth anniversary of the New Sunrise Theatre, Fort Pierce, Fla., Manager Rupert M. Koblegard, Jr., put out a very well edited and nicely printed four page tabloid, 4,000 copies of which were mailed out and distributed house to house. A number of outside ads were carried which no doubt helped to pay some of the cost, and in addition to lots of snappy picture copy, Koglegard wrote a front page editorial of appreciation to his patrons.

This art work turned out by W. R. Fuge of the Strand Theatre in Sunbury, Pa., we're sure you will all agree is mighty attractive. Two Bobs Click with 50 "Footlight" Ideas

The fact that the pictorial 24 sheet on the picture was locally censored only made Managing Director Bob Paskow and Ad Chief Bob Deitch, Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., work that much harder to think up an as equally effective billboard idea, and this you must agree they hit upon from the accompanying photo, which illustrates the double panel type boards on "Footlight Parade" that could be seen from quite a distance.

These lads put over a number of other ideas that clicked as strongly, some of the gags used in advance being imprinted aprons worn by all newsboys, 16 mm. film used as trailer in nearby empty store window, imprinted napkins distributed to factory lunch room and leading cafeterias, and thousands of tabloids covering the entire county. Other advance ideas were: imprinted brown paper bags to fruit and grocery markets, notion bags at cigar and stationery stores, postcards distributed as inserts in all bundles of a leading laundry, press book photos in lobby and from house to house, and of course the float street bally.

A Hollywood opening was also part of the campaign with all the necessary "props," including broadcasting from the lobby, confetti and balloons thrown from the top of the marquee and a kid bicycle parade with police motorcycle escort, led by two kids on ponies, followed by uniformed bands, and a musical program by the bands at the theatre.

All in all, the two Bobs worked out exactly fifty good ideas that covered every possible angle of advertising and exploitation. It was a well conceived and splendidly executed campaign and these showmen are entitled to a world of credit for their efforts.

Preston Slams Over Ace Name Band Date

Lew Preston, who has been doing a lot of fine work at the Academy of Music in New York since his return to that spot, put on plenty of extra effort to broadcast the stage engagement of Cab Calloway and his orchestra. Located in a thickly congested residential district, announcement of the date was made via herald distributed in every apartment building within a two-mile radius, and a special animated trailer in which Calloway appeared was also incorporated in the advance.

Newspaper tieups were made with a leading band instrument company, which placed large ads in all papers announcing the appearance of the band leader at one of their nearby stores to autograph records, these ads of course including strong mention of the theatre and date. As Preston's lobby and theatre front display play a large part in his regular advertising, special attention was given to these, with huge cutout figures of Calloway and his band featuring the front. So well was it done that Publicist Ben Ostrow reports the band leader as declaring this one of the best efforts he has seen to sell the act.

Located in the shopping and entertainment center of large foreign groups, Preston manages to keep up a weekly barrage of flash fronts and street stunts that attract sufficient numbers to the box office to make profitable the engagements of high priced stage acts which he plays, in addition to the usual screen attractions.

Many Slants by Kennedy On "Missing" Date

With a more than willing police department plus the cooperation of local newspapers, Manager A. J. Kennedy, New Spreckels Theatre, San Diego, Cal., worked out a number of sound box office ideas on his showing of "Bureau of Missing Persons." It seems that a most interesting local case is one John Doe Todd, a victim of amnesia for three years. Kennedy arranged with the paper to revive the story, the theatre offering $100 to the person who could identify the John Doe, the police helping to put it over.

Another newspaper idea with a different angle was a seven day alibi contest open to housewives only in which daily passes were given to the women sending in the best excuses offered by their husbands. A tieup with the insurance department of another paper netted a number of four full column ads stating that Pat O'Brien, star of the picture, was a policy holder.

An effective attention getter was the distribution of one sheet "Missing" posters with that word in large type across the top followed by a line reading—"This girl may be at large in your city," above two halftones, full face and profile of Bette Davis, the female lead. Interesting window displays were made up by Kennedy of various items loaned by the local police missing bureau, such as finger print apparatus, photos of missing persons and various wanted criminals.

Among other tieups must be mentioned the one with Western Union, in which the company installed a teletype machine in the lobby (see photo) and built an attractive booth around it which contained picture copy.

Kennedy's Lobby Tieup

New Round Tabler Reports Activities

The details of a neat campaign on "Circus Queen Murder" are forwarded by Manager Marion F. Rhoades, Schine's Miami, Piqua, Ohio, one of the features of which was a special front that emphasized the circus background of the picture, the roof and underside of marquee being hung with colored pennants (see photo). The display was designed and painted by Artist Dick Burns, who did a very nice job, but unfortunately due to halation from the marquee lights, some of the details are obscured.

Rhoades' Circus Front

A clown street bally also called attention to the showing and in addition circus type heralds were distributed to various schools and from house to house, and Marion reports that the response to the above campaign was satisfying.

We are awaiting the account of a local talent revue this new member has recently put over with a cast of 50 and specially designed costumes and scenery. It sounds like quite an ambitious effort.

Okay, Elmer

Manager J. Elmer Redello, Victory Theatre, Dayton, Ohio, put across a very swell prestige builder by persuading his local papers to run feature stories on the signing of contracts by his boss, Bill Keyes, for the new season's Warner Brothers and First National product. A five-column star cut and story listing the forthcoming pictures and stars were carried by the dailies with copy inclusion that the new contract would insure the Victory Theatre of a great line of consistently fine pictures.

Worth Duplicating

Sandy Abrahams, assistant to George Bilson of Warners' coast ad department, put over a radio contest in conjunction with the Los Angeles date of "I Loved a Woman" at the Hollywood Theatre by inviting listeners to submit letters describing their own true life love experiences, with the best of the lot receiving free tickets to see the picture. Listed as judges were Director Al Green, Edward G. Robinson and Sidney Sutherland, who wrote the scenario. The contest started four days in advance of the picture's opening and the Los Angeles citizenry went for this in a big way with hundreds of letters, mostly from women, received daily.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

Fast moving comedy that should be a money magnet at all houses, 'Convention City' was evidently built for entertainment and nothing else and succeeds 100 per cent. With a cast of names well chosen for their box-office attraction, plus good campaign material in the story, it can stand the strongest type of bally.

Story is written around the sales convention of a rubber company in Atlantic City. There's a thread of a yarn running through it, not too thick to interfere with a number of running gags and situations that kept the audience running the gamut of laughter from start to finish. Archie Mayo has contributed everything he knows about comedy direction to keep up the laugh average. Robert Lord has written a script that never lets down.

Adolphe Menjou, on the make for the company president's daughter, so that he may be promoted to sales manager, kicks around his chances when he takes the rap on a badger game frameup to save Guy Kibbee's reputation. Kibbee's wife tips off the Menjou spouse who is looking for a divorce and she catches him red handed with Joan Blondell, a gold digger. He tries hard to get back again with Patricia Ellis, the prexy's daughter and is about to succeed when Mary Astor, who loves Menjou, argues Miss Ellis out of him. At the convention, Grant Mitchell, the sanctimonious president, announces the new sales-manager, drunken Frank McHugh, who ran into the president while he was enjoying the company of 'Mae LaRue, Insect Exterminator, insects exterminated at all hours.'

Picture at all times is hanging on the border of the bandy but never goes over the line. Smart cracks are flipped around with lightning speed. No performance is outstanding. Everyone has his inning and everyone scores. For instance, Hugh Herbert runs all through the picture as a drunk, has less than a half dozen lines. Comes near copping the picture in the fadeout speech when he discovers he is attending the wrong convention. Menjou plays a fast talking, wise cracking salesman, a character unusual for him, gives a performance that should heighten his popularity. Same for Dick Powell in a similar part. Joan Blondell takes her share of the honors as the gold digger. Frank McHugh takes care of himself. Guy Kibbee and Ruth Donnelly as henpecked husband and bossy wife have their innings. Mary Astor, Hobart Cavanaugh, Sheila Terry, Grant Mitchell, Gordon Westcott, Johnny Arthur and Huey White are all fine in smaller parts.

Photography and sets are excellent, also the cutting job of Owen Marks.

PUBLICITY AND FINANCE

IF YOU will get yourself "holed up" for a few rainy days at a cross roads hamlet back in a hinterland that the city papers never reach, thrown for amusement upon the resources of the literary stock of a country drug store, you will find both time and excellent opportunity to examine into several aspects of the publicity job that the motion picture institution does for itself.

You will find, for instance, that in a practical sense about all that the motion picture says for itself of its own motion is embodied in the annual report from Mr. Will Hays and that otherwise when the motion picture speaks it is in some defensive fashion on some defensive provocation.

Beyond that, the story of the screen is being told to the American public externally by external observers. An interesting case in point is afforded by the December 2 issue of the far flung Saturday Evening Post, which presents the first of a series of special articles entitled "Wild Money, Or a Banker's Adventure in the Movies." The author is Mr. Hugh Weir, editor of New Movie Magazine. The serial is a hybridized product neither all fact nor all fiction, being rather, as Mr. Weir sees it, a cross section of some recent and current motion picture history. His "Monmouth Film Corporation" and his "Knickerbocker Bank and Trust Company" are both easily recognizable concerns.

One comes away from the story with a reiterated impression of the opinion, so often set down on this page, that the commercial ills of the industry have come chiefly from two important factors of influence: the financiers who wanted to get into the movies and the movie men who wanted to get into finance.

Reflecting on this exciting exchange of talent between two great fields of activity, one is inclined to the view that it has been inevitable that both should lose.

A few moments' reflection will convince most of those who read this page that the affairs of the screen were in a generally healthy state when the executive leadership of the industry was concentrating its attentions on the making and distribution of pictures as their chosen method of making money. We are not forgetting the while that that was also in a day when bankers were more largely specializing in the banking business, too.

This would be futile repetition, if we could not now record that their current season is seeing an increasing attention to the motion picture aspects of the motion picture industry among its executives. Here and there, but scarcely in important position, one may yet discover criers over spilled milk and yesterday's dollars, but most of the postmortems are over.

The remaining conspicuous hurdle is in the direction of the NRA code. There has been very properly no little apprehension about how and with what effect the industry might adjust itself to the code's laws of operations. That apprehension will very presently be found tending to a realization that the code itself, along with the codes for other American industries, will have to do a deal of adjusting itself to the industry. Battles and problems loom ahead, but the woof-woof cocksureness of the NRA is curling at the edges. Some rapid movements of letting go of that which it can not successfully do are likely to be seen.

And now returning to our first text, the publicity of the industry, it is fitting to observe that the only expositions of the screen that have been presented on the screen have been of the nature of "Once in a Lifetime" and the more recent "Bombshell." It is healthy enough that the motion picture can laugh at itself, but it might be helpful if now and then a story could be found which did not make its chief capital of the extravaganza aspects of Hollywood.

THERE'S something to think about when sponsors of radio programs take big metropolitan newspaper space to advertise "a big show" for 1½ cents—the price of current consumption in the receiving set. Also the radio's strongest appeals are presented at the hour when they most compete with the box office.

RUN O' THE MINE

WHILE the prosperity of the industry may be in direct ratio to the big hits, Motion Picture Herald's mail pertaining to the Release Chart and the review pages, is a revelation that the screen does not live by sensations alone.

And a few glimpses of Saturday afternoon crowds in the hamlets across the back country surveying the one sheets on the Westerns so dear to "the sticks" suggest that the farm relief measures may well include some motion picture art keyed to the rural customers.

Which is by way of putting emphasis on the fact that while it is nice to have great artistic triumphs and box office smashes to point to with pride, there is yet considerable sustenance in a program of production which maintains a competent average. It is still true that the best picture in the world can not redeem all the bad ones.

OUR Hollywood statistician sends us by pony express the tidings that in the last three months the "majors have signed fifty unknowns." This promises, we assume, a New Deal. This is obviously a step forward because an "unknown" is an actor that nobody has anything on—yet.

FILM INDUSTRY IS AROUSED BY CODE ERASURE OF SELF-REGULATION

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

The motion picture industry now finds itself confronted with an acutely confused status as result of the Executive Order accompanying the signed code as released last week by the National Recovery Administration.

Mature examination of the Executive Order as a part of the industry code reveals that the Administration has undertaken to place the motion picture business in virtually an unparalleled position with respect to other industries which have come under the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

After months of heroic effort on the part of principal executives of all branches of the industry to draft a code in conformity with the announced purposes of the NRA program and, at the same time, retain within the industry authority and responsibility for the conduct of the business, it now appears that the Administration, through the Executive Order, has appropriated to itself complete authority over the affairs of the industry and has erased the provisions made for the maintenance of the principle of self-regulation under government supervision.

INCLUSION OF THE EXECUTIVE ORDER MAKES CODE RADICALLY DIFFERENT

Although the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry as signed by the President is virtually identical with the code which was signed and accepted by principal factors in the industry, the document as it now stands, with the inclusion of the Executive Order, is a new and alien arrangement, radically different in its essence than the code plan agreed upon.

It is pointed out that, while the leading interests in the industry inclined originally toward the plan of a separate code for each of the principal branches of the business, it eventually yielded to the importunings of the Administration and entered upon the difficult task of formulating a single master code. In thus proceeding, it became necessary to introduce provisions applying to delicate and complex trade practices, the assumption, of course, being that in the actual administration of the code, under the Code Authority provided for, the voice of persons of experience and ability —as well as wide responsibility for investments in the industry — would prevail.

CODE AUTHORITY DECISIONS SUBJECT TO REVIEW BY THE ADMINISTRATOR

However, under the Executive Order the decisions of the established Code Authority are subject to review by the Administrator who, incidentally, is concerned also with several hundred other codes which are now in one stage or another in the process of formulation and execution. Nominations which the industry has made to the Code Authority consist in each instance of leading personalities representing all of the

CODE HIGHLIGHTS OF THE WEEK

That the status of the motion picture code, approved last week by the President, was not merely a matter of having been "signed, sealed and delivered," became evident on Monday with some rather important developments. Code highlights of the week follow:

1. According to Technical News Service, Washington, President Roosevelt turned down a last-minute appeal of producers to set back the effective date of the Code, which went into effect at 12:01 Wednesday night. The White House assented to a hearing in Washington Friday by the President and General Hugh S. Johnson. Film executives previously had protested against the Executive Order in the Code, which virtually placed the industry under NRA rule, thus endangering industry self-rule. Suspension of the stars' salary-control clause also was under fire.

2. There were indications that some of the executives appointed to the Code Authority would decline the post, unless the order is modified.

3. The industry was informed that all members would be subject to the law when it became legal on Thursday, whether they sign it or not.

4. Sidney R. Kent said that the Presidential changes about which the large companies had no information until the text was released, are holding up the code's approval. Consent of stockholders and directors must again be obtained, he said.

5. First meeting of the Code Authority was undetermined. The remaining two government members of board still were unnamed, as was the Code Authority chairman.

6. Labor was seeking representation on the Code Authority, although it was pleased with the code.

7. Theatre owners and exchangemen in the field began talking about the impending formation and modus operandi of local grievance and local clearance and zoning boards. Appointment of boards by the Code Authority was awaited.

ORDER PERPLEXING

important interests of the industry. Under the Executive Order any decisions arrived at by these representatives may be reviewed and reversed. And further, the Executive Order provides for their removal at the Administrator's pleasure.

Section I of the Executive Order states that, because the constituency of the Code Authority is named, the Administrator shall have the right to review and disapprove decisions made. This is a particularly perplexing feature of an altogether perplexing matter, the argument apparently being that if the constituency had not been named—and if the persons to comprise the Code Authority were not known and their fitness for the responsibility not subject to examination—then the Administrator would not have reserved arbitrary prerogatives to himself.

ADMINISTRATOR COULD REMOVE ANY MEMBER OF THE CODE AUTHORITY

The second section of the order seems to allocate extraordinary attributes of fairness, justice and impartiality to the Administrator because it is intended to enable him to remove any member of the Code Authority who "shall fail to be fair, impartial and just."

Although Deputy Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt informed representatives of the industry while the code conferences were in progress in Washington that he had been instructed by the President to inform the industry that provision in the code must be made to control the payment of so-called excessive salaries the arrangements in this connection which were laboriously worked out—virtually at the President's insistence—are suspended for a 90-day period.

Although it has been made quite plain that if the industry is to be able to meet the increased labor costs which it generously agreed to for the purposes of cooperating in the purposes of the National Recovery Act, it would be necessary to control more effectively production costs, the Executive Order suspends also for 90 days the arrangements intended to apply in this connection.

THOSE RESPONSIBLE WOULD LIKE TO KNOW WHERE THE INDUSTRY STANDS

A feature of the memorandum accompanying the signal code as delivered by the Administrator which would have provoked only merriment if it were not for the serious matters involved was the appointment to the Code Authority of Eddie Cantor. The fact that the President brought Mr. Cantor to Warm Springs for a conference on motion picture matters was surprising enough; but his appointment to the Code Authority assumed the proportions of a shock. Mr. Cantor's appointment was apparently a bid to silence propaganda addressed to the Administration from a group of professionals in the industry whose salaries already have reached figures which Mr. Rosenblatt quoted the President as saying are "a baneful influence upon the public."

It is quite obvious that it behooves those responsible for the conduct of this business and the security of its investments to find out where they and the industry stand in view of the conditions imposed under the Executive Order. There are indications that steps intended to lead to such a definition are to be taken.

Considerable interest is being expressed in just how and why the mo-

Report Hearing Set for Friday

[By Technical News Service]

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The film industry will join the ranks of the recovery army at one minute after twelve o'clock tonight when the film code, signed by President Roosevelt at Warm Springs, Ga., November 27, becomes effective.

A last-minute effort of the producers to secure a stay of execution today met with failure when President Roosevelt indicated his disinclination to postpone the effective date of the code.

Signed by some 25 to 30 producers, a telegraphic request for a hearing was received at the White House today. White House attaches, however, said that the message gave no indication of the points to which objection was taken.

Hays Group To Be Heard

Complying with the request, the White House today telegraphed the Hays organization that Will Hays and a small committee of three or four could come to Washington Friday and would be heard by the President and General Hugh S. Johnson. This appears to be something of a shift from the meeting which it was said yesterday would be held at General Johnson's office, and is in line with the President's desire to give sympathetic hearing to industrial leaders who have problems of sufficient importance.

In view of the hearing Friday, plans for the initial meeting of the code authority are being held in abeyance and probably will not be announced until after the President has signaled for code application to go ahead.

Could Strip Authority

Observers in Washington tonight were still without definite knowledge of the producers' grounds for last-minute opposition to the code, although taking for granted they are to be found in the executive order of November 27. That order suspended the salary and raiding clauses, and producers have consistently insisted they were not interested in the former, and the temporary suspension of the latter is not believed to be sufficiently important to warrant strong protest. However, it is pointed out, there are three paragraphs in the executive order which give to the Recovery Administrator complete domination of the industry, and under which, if followed to their ultimate conclusion, the code authority and its committees and boards could be relegated to the position of rubber stamps.

These paragraphs, among other things, give the administrator the right to review and, if necessary disapprove any act taken by the code authority, its committees or boards; to summarily remove members of the code authority for failure to be fair, impartial and just, and to name their successors, and to increase the representation on the code authority of any employer class which is found not to be sufficiently represented. Here, it is believed, is the focal point of the producers' opposition. The effect of these paragraphs could well be to strip the members of the code authority of any importance and power with which they might appear to be vested by the code.

Industry Upset By Code Order

While theatre owners in the field were digesting the contents of the approved NRA film code and studying its relation to their business of furnishing motion picture entertainment, the principal executives of the large producing-distributing corporations in New York were discussing with trepidation, and no few objections, the Executive Order of the code which delegated such discriminatory and arbitrary powers to the Administrator as virtually to place the motion picture business under NRA rule.

The net result of a study of the Executive Order's possibilities of bringing the motion picture under the immediate direction of the Administrator was the creation of much confusion in the minds of the industry's pilots over the new status.

Accordingly, the board of directors of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America met in extraordinary session on Monday at headquarters in New York, and voiced vigorous opposition to those clauses of the President's order which imperil self-control and suspend code provisions for regulating excessive star salaries.

There were heard in the Hays board room loud rumblings that some of the executives would decline their appointments to the Code Authority, unless the Executive Order were modified and the industry placed on the same level as other industries whose codes do not subject them to such NRA supervision.

Resentment also was expressed over the idea of an NRA investigation of salaries of stars and executives in the face of the suspension of the salary-control clause in the code, and especially because of the abruptness with which the clause had been dropped, without notice, after it had been an important part of the tentative code drafts.

Present at the all-day meeting at the Hays headquarters were: Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA; Fred L. Herron, secretary; Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., and of MGM; Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film; Joseph M. Schenck, president, United Artists; Robert H. Cochrane, executive vice-president, Universal Pictures; Harry M. Warner, president, Warner-First National; E. W. Hammons, president, Educational Pictures; Merlin Hall Aylesworth, president, Radio-Keith-Orpheum; George J. Schaefer, general manager, Paramount Publix.

Messrs. Nicholas Schenck, Kent, Cochrane, Warner, Aylesworth and Schaefer are appointees to the Code Authority.

Another definite indication of the extent to which the Administration has exercised direct control over the industry under the NRA was the naming by the President of the Code Authority members, whereas the NRA's procedure in ordinary code routine is the privilege accorded other industries to elect their own boards.

Legally, the motion picture industry's code became effective on the opening of tion picture business has been singled out among American industries for the exclusive treatment provided for it under the Executive Order. There are no precedents for the action elsewhere under the NRA program except, possibly, in the case of the oil code and this was provided for under special legislation.

INDUSTRY MADE EVERY EFFORT TO COMPLY WITH NRA'S OBJECTIVES

It is demonstrable that the industry extended itself in every direction in an effort to comply with the purposes of the NRA program. With respect to labor provisions of the proposed code the president of the American Federation of Labor publicly thanked the industry for its generosity and support. In order to introduce more commonly satisfactory trade practices every branch of the industry made concessions of one character or another to every other branch. Naturally, there was not complete satisfaction with the code as drawn. Various independent exhibiting groups object to and disapprove of many provisions of the code, but even the most aggressive leaders among these are not unwilling to admit and acknowledge the difficulties and complexities surrounding a large number of the trade practices prevalent in the industry. Many impartial and experienced persons in the industry admit freely the virtual impossibility of so arranging various of the trade practices so as to foreclose the possibility of inequalities.

REQUIRES APPROVAL OF COMPANIES' STOCKHOLDERS AND THE DIRECTORS

Despite all of this, the Administration has assumed an attitude which makes it very difficult to see how responsible executives may continue to function in the conduct of their businesses without ignoring the responsibilities with which they are charged. It appears that progress along the indicated line can only be had in event of approval by stockholders and directors of the program proposed by the Administration. Such action would seem to suggest the strong possibility of executive personnel asking to be relieved of their normal responsibilities.

PROPAGANDISTS OF ALL SORTS MIGHT DESCEND UPON THE ADMINISTRATION

Whether or not the Executive Order will be amended, of course, remains to be seen. But speculation on what would be the fortunes of the industry were the order to be carried into effect leads to both interesting and disturbing conclusions. The industry, with respect to such decisions as the Administrator would care to take time out from the administering of several hundred other codes to render, would be run by the Administrator. Following the formula which appears to have gotten results thus far at Washington propagandists of all sorts would descend upon the Administration. Letters, telegrams, and perhaps personal visits from Eddie Cantor, would surround the President, each with its own idea as to just how the picture business should be run. The industry would be a guinea pig for an amazing series of experiments.

After that—the deluge.

TIEUPS WITH 17,000 SCHOOLS MADE AVAILABLE TO EXHIBITORS

National Council of English Teachers Starts Plan of Instruction Through Talking Pictures; Lesson Texts Issued

Exhibitors throughout the country have an opportunity to reap the benefits of one of the most "natural" tieups the business ever has had. More than 17,000 high school English teachers are joining a movement of the National Council of English Teachers to sponsor English instruction through the talking picture.

The project provides the theatre man with means for establishment of a relationship cordial to the school and theatre alike, a relationship with the stamp of official approval on it. For years the exhibitor has been racking his brain and his background of showmanship in an attempt to find some legitimate contact between himself and the school which would lay the foundation for a regular patronage from school children. Of all his attempts the exhibitor to date has found the children's matinee the most successful, but not always has it made him money. Besides the necessary selection of pictures for such programs, there has been the factor of limited audience.

Under the plan of the National Council, the motion picture literally will supplement the written classics of literature.

Films like "Little Women," proven more than a success for young and old; "Cavalcade," "Silver Dollar" and the many other pictures having a background of historical value or based upon the English classics, can be fitted into the English teachers' program.

Thus the ice finally has broken on an idea which had its inception five years ago—practical application of the thought of using motion pictures in classroom education. Public and educational opinion has so reversed itself that now many of the nation's leading educators are considering motion pictures in the same category that they have the written classics in the past.

"Unfortunately the educators previously have feared to come out in the open with this idea, in spite of the fact that many more than would admit it have been waiting for some one to make the first move, so afraid have they been of transgressing conventional public opinion concerning education," said Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, this week.

"The forward looking people in the nation's school system have wanted to put such a plan into effect for some time, but it has taken five years to get public opinion really behind them. To my mind, there are five excellent reasons why this plan should be put into work.

"First, there has been a definite desire on the part of teachers to link up education more closely with life than it has been—and the film is certainly the logical answer to that.

"Second, there has come about a realization that the children of today are capable of taking the equivalent of literature out of films instead of books.

"Third, the experimental work which has been conducted over a period of two and one-half years on teaching with films has set the educators to thinking how best to utilize the motion picture, and because in a majority of instances they have not been able to obtain the necessary equipment, they will turn to the theatres for their instruction.

"Fourth, and possibly the most important of all, is the fact that the motion picture offers the most uniformly interesting educational material for students of all types and mentality. The children prefer it and the teachers do not have to stimulate their interest because it is there already. All the teacher has to do is utilize that interest motive power.

"Finally, teachers have become conscious of their responsibility in helping to steer children's use of their leisure time."

FIVE REASONS FOR TEACHING BY FILM

1. Linking up education with actual life.
2. Children are getting equivalent of literature out of motion picture.
3. Educators prompted by experiments to study how best to utilize the screen.
4. Pictures offer most uniformly interesting educational material.
5. Teachers becoming conscious of responsibility for children's use of leisure hours.

William Lewin, chairman of the committee on Photoplay Appreciation of the National Council, started more than two years ago the experiments which have led up to the present plan of teaching with films. He carried on his experimentation in 119 cities in widely scattered sections of the country, in 16 different states. More than 300 high schools were involved. Mr. Lewin's purpose was to determine whether films could be used satisfactorily as a basis for teaching English. His experiments were pronounced eminently successful.

Lesson Texts Issued

What the council is planning now is a series of lesson texts, to be prepared by nationally known educators, on various motion pictures. These texts are being sent to the heads of English departments in some 17,000 high schools. The lessons are divided into two sections, one to be used before seeing the film; the second to test the reaction of the students after witnessing the picture.

The guide for use before seeing a specific picture, with "Little Women" as the example, includes the following questions: "Have you read 'Little Women'?" "Would you expect a screen adaptation . . . to have a powerful plot, much suspense, great excitement?" "What incidents in the book would you like to see 'come alive' on the screen?" "Supposing you were to make a screen play of 'Little Women,' what characters would you select from all the persons mentioned in the book to center the screen play about?" "What settings would you use? Both because of the expense of production and also because of the confusion to the eye in seeing too many settings, a few settings are better than all those mentioned in the book."

Among the questions asked for the second section of the lesson are the following: "Did you like the motion picture adapted from the book, 'Little Women'?" "Who was the director? Who did the screen adaptation?" "Did any of the characters in the film seem to you like the characters in the book?" "Mention some details in the costumes that were true to the period." "What were the 'high points' in the screen play—that is, what were the places where there was conflict or uncertainty of some sort?"

Pupils to Make Assignments

Each lesson text suggests that no assignments for compositions be made by the teacher, that instead assignments be made by the pupils.

"If the motion picture has been enjoyed and the class discussions have stimulated thinking, there should be a number of things the pupils would like to know more about," the lesson points out. "A committee of pupils might be appointed to collect topics which anybody wanted to know more about, assignments made by the committee and reports presented to the class."

"There are two good ways in which exhibitors can kill this 'goose which has laid a golden egg,'" said Mr. Milliken. "The first involves the old question of double bills—playing a good picture with a bad one; and the second, misleading or salacious advertising for a good film."

50 PER CENT OF BROADWAY PLAYS CALLED HITS; EMPLOYMENT GAINS

2,000 Players Already Engaged, as Against 3,462 All Last Season; 100 Greater New York Openings, 212 Last Year

by FRED AYER

With more than 50 per cent of all legitimate attractions currently running on Broadway classified by stage authorities as successes or potential "hits," and the rate of theatrical employment far higher than it was a year ago, the New York stage appears to be well on its way to recovery from the slump in which it has been wallowing since early 1930.

1. For the entire 1932-33 season there were 212 productions in greater New York. For the three months of the current season since September 1 there have been 100 openings.

2. There were 3,462 players employed in 1932-33. An estimate of employment to date for the current season shows approximately 2,000 actors have been engaged.

3. There were only three "hits" by the end of December last year. To date there have been 17.

4. Ninety-seven productions during 1932-33 closed within five weeks. While accurate count cannot be made as yet on this situation for the current season, many managers are of the opinion that the average "failure" may run longer than last season because of the revived public interest.

5. Last season there were no so-called "half hits." The public supported only plays which were of the highest standard. There are now several "half hits" running on Broadway which would have closed within two weeks a year ago.

6. Average number of players for the average dramatic cast for the past four years has been 10, with musical shows averaging 25. This season the average is 18 for dramatic offerings and from 30 to 35 for musicals.

7. One hundred plays have opened to date in New York, of which 50 are still running with nearly 30 on Broadway. Last year only 75 had opened at this time, with only 35 running in the metropolitan area in early December and approximately 15 on Broadway.

During the past three years the legitimate theatre has gone through the most trying period of its existence, with the 1932-33 season the most crucial of all. Three factors contributed to the slump, according to Brock Pemberton, one of Broadway's leading entrepréneurs. Mr. Pemberton lists, in what he considers to be the order of their importance—lack of money on the part of the public; lack of good stage play material, and Hollywood.

"Everyone has suffered from a lack of money and the resultant failure of business," said Mr. Pemberton this week. "The theatre certainly is not unique in that respect, nor is the motion picture. It is simply something we have had to 'grin and bear.' But now we're coming out of that phase of our slump and as business generally continues its already obvious change for the better and money comes back into the box office in more normal fashion, the legitimate producer will begin to make profits. We are not saddled with obligations which might make profits negligible. We have no vast theatre circuits to worry about. As soon as one production is a hit the average producer is making money from it."

The second contributor cited is the lack of good play material. Most of Broadway's established playwrights have been snatched up by Hollywood during the past four years, he said. Those men and women who should have filled their shoes—the apprentices—have been unable because of the economic stringency to continue in their chosen careers. Many of them were forced to lay aside manuscripts started three or four years ago.

The third cause given is Hollywood.

"Lured, quite naturally, by unheard of salaries, those men and women who for years have constituted the backbone of the theatre deserted New York in droves," said Mr. Pemberton. "No one blames them. They were virtually forced into this course. Everywhere they saw plays closing after three performances. The agencies and producing offices were jammed with unemployed actors. But now they're coming back to us. Former stage players who for three years and more have made Hollywood the scene of their activities are coming back to the theatre. We will take them back. There's always room for them. I believe there will be a greater interchangeability between stage and screen in the future than there ever has been in the past. This is as it should be. It stimulates both branches of the amusement industry.

"The season season in New York thus far is healthier, more wide awake than it has been for four years. There is more interest, there are far better plays. For the first time in years there are several plays which are only half hits, plays which, a year ago, would not have lasted more than a week. This in itself should be sufficient to prove to a doubting public that there is a real return to normalcy in the theatre. The real proof of the theatre's hold on people, of its power to grip and sway to a far greater extent than can the motion picture, is, however, the fact that through all this depression there have been hits!"

George Abbott, of Abbott and Dunning, Broadway producers, attributed the theatres' present boom to a desire on the part of the public to spend money.

"Things couldn't have been worse in the theatre than they were last season," he said this week, "and now, as everyone knows, they're very substantially on 'the make.' To attempt to estimate the causes behind the present Broadway boom is to assume the mantle, almost invariably a poisoned one, of 'trend finder,' but I think they are, basically, two: a real desire of people to spend a little money, get over bad times and even lift themselves up by the bootstraps, and the determination of producers to put on shows so economically that they can re-establish the box office trade of people with modest means."

According to Lucius Beebe, writing in the New York Herald-Tribune, Mr. Abbott believes anyone can get a living in Hollywood, whereas Broadway is a precarious business often approaching a gamble.

"All this talk of a decline in the theatre, like so many other facile generalities, is meaningless," Mr. Abbott is quoted. "The theatre is in no decline, merely in a period of transition. From what to what is hard to say, but probably from a popular form of amusement to an esthetic pastime for a more limited class of discriminating and intelligent people. Easy and meaningless stories can be turned out by the films with lots of spurious glamour for those that want them. The theatre is a permanent tradition and in the future its business will probably be consolidation both in the fields of quality and quantity."

Frank Gillmore, president of Actors Equity Association, said this week that in the legitimate theatre's code he sees a definite benefit to the future of the institution, especially as regards that clause which prohibits the release of "a motion picture, based on a play, running at the time, until such an attraction has had an opportunity to enjoy its run and have an adequate road-showing."

"Thus the practice by many film companies of stepping in and closing a show before its run in New York or on the road is finished, will be averted," Mr. Gillmore said. "Last year a play called 'There's Always Juliet,' starring Herbert Marshall, was enjoying a very successful run in New York. A film company wanted Mr. Marshall's services on the Coast, so they stepped in, paid the actor' salaries four weeks in advance and closed the show. This has been a common practice by film companies for the past three years. 'Christopher Bean,' on tour until this week, and doing good business, will have to close because of the release of the film of the same name. The stage production of 'Dinner at Eight' underwent the same difficulty. Now, this sort of thing automatically is eliminated."

Mississippi Theatre Wins Verdict in Rental Action

The Hamasa Building Association, Meridian, Miss., was allowed $3,360 from E. V. Richards, receiver for Saenger Theatres, Inc., for rent of the Temple theatre in Meridian, according to a decree from Judge Edwin Holmes in Vicksburg federal court.

The suit grew out of the operation of the Saenger Temple by Mr. Richards. After several months' operation Mr. Richards turned the house back to Hamasa Building Association, which then instituted suit for rent of the theatre. Hamasa is now operating the house with A. H. Yeomans as manager.

Al Cohn Honored As Port Collector

Alfred A. Cohn, well known screen writer in California, was the guest last week of the Pacific Writers' Yacht Club, in honor of his appointment as collector of the port of Los Angeles. William Slavens McNutt is commodore of the club, and Malcolm Stuart Boylan is vice-commodore.

Mr. Cohn, born at Freeport, Ill., started his writing career as a Chicago newspaperman, becoming a magazine writer in 1918 and later started scenario writing on the Coast. One of his most notable scripts was that for Warners' "Jazz Singer."

Ennis Becomes Ad Head at Majestic

Bert Ennis assumed the duties of advertising and publicity director of Majestic Pictures this week at the company's new headquarters at Radio City.

Mr. Ennis, who was formerly director of advertising and publicity for Columbia, and more recently served in a similar capacity at the old Roxy theatre, in New York, started his motion picture career some 20 years ago. Since then he has participated in all three branches of the business.

Mr. Ennis has contributed stories to magazines and has written fiction and stories for the screen. He was publicity representative variously for Charles Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Barbara La Marr, S. L. "Roxy" Rothafel, and others, and carried into the radio field the technique of theatre exploitation and advertising.

Miss Evelyn Koch will assist Mr. Ennis at Majestic.

Suit of Abramson Against Distributors Is Postponed

Suit of Ivan Abramson, independent distributor, filed late in 1929 against distributor members of the MPPDA, charging conspiracy in violation of the anti-trust laws, was postponed this week, indefinitely, until Max D. Steuer, of defense counsel, concludes a non-film case which he is now defending.

The complaint also mentions the Hays organization, and asks for damages of $1,300,000. It was scheduled to be heard early this week before U. S. District Judge Robert Patterson.

Hays, Podell and Schulman and Benjamin S. Kirsh represent the plaintiff.

Kane Organizes Second Musical Unit for Fox

Robert Kane, Fox producer, last week began organization of a second unit to handle musical productions with the signing of Erik Charrell, European impresario who arrives in Hollywood January 14.

The first Fox music unit, now working on the "Scandals," includes Ray Henderson, Jack Yellen and Irving Caesar, handling lyrics and music, and Joseph Cunningham in charge of dialogue.

80 PER CENT TO THE DISTRIBUTOR IS ARGENTINE EXHIBITOR PROBLEM

Industry in Critical Period, with Many Theatres Closing and Staffs and Salaries Reduced; Product Inferior; Taxes High

by N. BRUSKI
Special Buenos Aires Correspondent

Argentina's motion picture industry today is passing through a very critical period, one of a seriousness never before witnessed.

The domestic difficulties have been aggravated by the external situation and, despite all the optimism of exhibitors, the business progressively is encountering greater obstacles.

Many theatres are closing down throughout the republic, and those that are continuing in operation are doing so only at a great sacrifice.

Staffs and salaries have been reduced, and even the most powerful of the exhibitors have seen themselves obliged to make the most fantastic combinations and contracts in order to carry on.

Among the many factors are these: The product itself, not always of the quality it should be; high rentals; burdensome income duties and taxes.

Mediocre Pictures

Mediocrity of program, from the standpoint of the Argentinian patron, is a foremost handicap. In this country, it is estimated, 85 per cent of the pictures shown are of American origin and 15 per cent European, the percentage of local product being negligible.

The language itself leads to a formidable handicap. Pictures in which the dialogue is not Spanish must have superimposed titles and captions, and these too often are meaningless because of literal translations. A net result is that the Argentinian, a severe critic, finds himself viewing pictures which to him have no artistic value whatsoever. Then, too, the themes themselves sometimes mystify him. For example, he cannot appreciate the gangster films, considering them only an exaggeration of phases of American life.

Then there are the American films in which action is subordinate to dialogue; these are an abomination to the Argentine theatre-goer, despite the fact that they may have been eminently successful in the States. Acceptable to a patron in the homeland who "understands what he hears," they are not liked by the one who has to limit himself to "see" alone. The sound, in such cases, becomes an irritation rather than an adjunct.

80 Per Cent to Distributor!

Distribution is by either percentage or fixed price. The exhibitor whose theatre does not permit him to take the risk of a fixed price finds that in order to get product on percentage he must set in pictures of that distributor for at least two of the four Sundays in the month, and there even have been instances of the distributor demanding three of the four. Then he is in a predicament if a nearby competitor can afford to rent film on a flat guaranty and obtains variegated product from several producers, pursuing that advantage with a double-featuring policy, or even triple-billing.

He's also between the devil and the deep sea on the percentage rates. Ordinarily the percentage is 50 per cent on week days and 40 per cent on Sundays and holidays. If the picture has been classified as an extraordinary production—and almost any picture is sold on that basis nowadays—the distributor demands 50 per cent of the intake. And there was the distributor, whose name I do not care to remember, who demanded three of the four Sundays in the month for his product, and 80 per cent on one of his pictures!

The one redeeming phase is the native Argentinian's cheeriness which is determined to win through, regardless of all obstacles.

Almanac Statistics Quoted In Saturday Evening Post

Motion Picture Almanac, annual Quigley Publication, is quoted at length in The Saturday Evening Post, issue of December 2, in an article by Hugh Weir, under the heading "Wild Money, or, A Banker's Adventures in the Movies." The Almanac, wrote Mr. Weir, "described itself, apparently with justice, as the reference book of the industry," whereupon, in connection with his analysis of the industry in 1930, he quoted statistics of the industry as published in the 1931 issue of the Almanac, under the caption, "The Industry at a Glance." Commenting on the volume, Mr. Weir said:

" . . . I picked up from the table a multi-colored tome which bore the intriguing title, Motion Picture Almanac, which described itself, apparently with justice, as the reference book of the industry.

"The first page was enough to impress me anew with the size of the problem I was tackling; and I am going to reproduce it here, not only because I want you to be impressed, too, but because it gives in tabloid form a true picture of the film industry as it existed in the summer of 1930." There followed tabulated data from the Almanac, covering all phases of the industry. Compilations for the 1934 Almanac are now in preparation.

Central Receiving Set Installed in RKO Building

Rockefeller Center, Inc., has installed a centralized radio receiving system in the RKO Building in New York. The system is available for use by tenants of the building. The new equipment is known as Antenaplex System and is a recent development of the RCA Victor Camden laboratories. A central antenna at the top of the building supplies radio frequency energy to a potential 1,200 receiving sets of any standard type.

Industry in New York Asked To Help City's Welfare Fund

Motion picture companies and exhibitors in New York are being asked to participate in the Citizens' Family Welfare Committee campaign for $4,000,000 to the extent of contributing $25,000.

Louis Nizer, counsel of the New York Film Board of Trade, has been named chairman of the motion picture division of the Commerce and Industry Committee formed to raise funds among 85 trade and professional groups. Myron C. Taylor, of the United States Steel Corporation, is head of this committee.

Mr. Nizer will ask exhibitors and producers not only to make corporation and personal gifts, but to organize their employees to make group donations to the fund. The motion picture industry in the city last year raised $50,000 for the Gibson Committee's unemployment relief fund.

The Citizens' Family Welfare Committee is the successor to the Gibson Committee, which was disbanded last summer.

Actress Killed in Crash

Gladys McClure, 18, film actress and sister of Adrienne Ames, Paramount star, was killed last week in an automobile crash on the Bayshore Highway near San Francisco. She was returning with a party of friends from the Stanford-California football game at Palo Alto when the accident occurred.

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

AN echo of the recent broadcasts of Mary Pickford and other stars who spoke pleadingly on behalf of the NRA, was heard in Kansas City, the other day, when Miss Marion Ellet, conducting the "Mugwump Musings" department in the Journal-Post, said: "It is quite possible that I might feel less antagonism toward the NRA if I had been asked to like it in a different tone of voice. But I resent being asked to approve it because Mary Pickford approves, because Charlie Ruggles assures me that approval is my patriotic duty, or because Schumann-Heink lost a son in the World War."

"It all reminds me," added Miss Ellett, "of the days when we were asked to approve of war because somebody had told somebody else that Germans bit off children's ears, and, lastly, but most convincing, because there was a brass band across the street."

Dr. Eldorado Uber, who once conducted a school for rhythmic dancing in New York, has informed the Agricultural Department that most of the farmers' troubles could be laid to the lack of beauty and harmony in their lives. He urged a government program of courses in rhythmic dancing as a solution. Possibly then they could join Roxy's ballet, leaving their little pigs to Disney.

The screen garments of RKO's Robert Woolsey are made of materials selected from the sample list of a firm which supplies the blankets for aristocratic horses. Mr. Woolsey always insisted upon the very best.

Shades of Beethoven, Schubert and Mozart! Also Rubinoff.

Mr. James Durante, SRO, has finished an unfinished opera. Schnozzle worked for weeks on a symphony which he has appropriately called "Inka, Dinka Doo." Edward Small immediately closed for the screen rights. James will sing it in "Joe Palooka," coming up.

"Just a musical iconoclast—a soul of a genius," sighed Schnozzola. "If only Beetie, Schubie and Mozie were alive to share my triumphs." (Or did he say trumps?)

Isaac Myers, alias "Bowery Ike," the first of the Bowery peddlers, has placed his stamp of approval on the authenticity of Darryl Zanuck's "The Bowery." Myers says he knew both Chuck Connors (played by Wallace Beery), and Steve Brodie (George Raft). He supplied the gloves for the boxing bouts in the rear of Brodie's saloon, and claims that he suggested to Brodie that Steve jump off the Brooklyn Bridge as a means of attracting attention. However, Myers is of the opinion that Brodie never made the leap.

Harry Joe Brown was using five men to enact the parts of "yes men" in "Sitting Pretty," the studio musical which he is directing on the Paramount lot. Despite many rehearsals the players could not do their parts well.

"If you can't even pretend to be 'yes men,'" cried Harry, "how do you expect to get ahead in Hollywood?"

Mae Murray is hoping for inflation. Last year her left leg was appraised at $250,000, dropping to $30,000 six months ago. Last week the Supreme Court said it was worth only $7,677.70.

A FEW nights before President Roosevelt traveled southward to Warm Springs, he gave a dinner at the White House for his old friend, Eddie Dowling. There were twenty guests, and, to hear George Abeli tell about it, the President placed the lovely Lillian Gish at his left, while Eddie sat below a Russian Princess on the President's right. After dinner they saw Eddie's new movie, "Buried Alive," which co-stars Miss Gish.

President Roosevelt was said to be delighted. Occasionally (sitting between Eddie and Lillian) he interrupted the performance with some apt comment. Once, for instance, he remarked:

"Eddie, that music is too heavily scored."

After the show an English lady rushed up to congratulate Dowling and Miss Gish.

"I loved it," she gushed. "All those English scenes . . . Putney . . . Soho . . . the Thames! It took me back to England. I only wonder whether the American public will appreciate its subtle appeal."

"Tut, tut!" tutered the President. "I'm one of the American mob and I enjoyed it thoroughly."

Warners have begun negotiations to bring to this country Napoleonic relics for its "Napoleon" film. They also seek those associated with his Empresses, Josephine and Marie Louise. These would include the furnishings of Josephine's place at Malmaison, to which she retired following the imperial divorce. Warranty of safe return in eight weeks would be given through Lloyds insurance. Warners also want to borrow the jewels, valued at a half million, which Napoleon presented to Marie Louise on the birth of their son, later known as King of Rome. They asked for everything but the Little Corporal's crypt.

Mr. Roosevelt refuses to stabilize the dollar on a gold basis, yet the New York Herald-Tribune's account of a state dinner reads like the description of the furnishings of a new Roxy picture palace, thus:

"Pale gold chrysanthemums . . . were used in the staterooms. In the East Room, chrysanthemums in yellow gold hues were used. Ferns were banked against the marble mantels and outlined the platform where the famous golden piano presented to the White House during the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt and a golden harp were placed for the Morgan Trio. . . . The famous gold mirror, with the four candelabra and compotes to match, purchased in France by President Monroe, were used. . . . The china gold compotes held candles. The service plates, which were purchased during the regime of President Woodrow Wilson, were used on the table with the gold flat silver of an earlier Administration. . . . Carrying out the gold color scheme were the nut and salt dishes. . . . "

Story preparations are now under way on "Exit, Don Juan," the next Douglas Fairbanks production. United Artists announced that it "is as modern as a Mae West Picture, plus all the romantic appeal of Douglas Fairbanks." But it will not have Mae West, and that's what counts. Anyway, it had better be good. Otherwise the punsters will go to work on that title.

GRETA GARBO's slanting lip, Katharine Hepburn's projecting chin, Mae West's complicated nose, and Joan Crawford's lack of "skull construction," leaves oldish and Scottish "Penryhn Stanlaws" (Penryhn Stanley Abramson), noted painter, cold to Hollywood screen beauties. There is not one perfect specimen in the studio colony, he says.

In 1922 the artist lost his job as a Famous Players director, supposedly because he spoke his mind about Hollywood's pulchritude. Now that he has no job in films, he may speak freely.

Talking about Miss Hepburn—our favorite—Mr. Stanlaws said: "Anthropoligists have a name for such a facial type; they call it prognathism. Artists call it 'horsey'."

After taking a peek at the "Little Women" box-office receipts at Music Hall, Mr. Aylesworth probably wished he had a whole stable of Hepburns.

The boys at RKO's Brooklyn Albee recently staged a "Most Deserving Couple" contest. They packed the house on the final night with a public wedding on the stage. Any couple that had gone through difficulties that prevented them from marrying were invited to tell their story for the judges to decide which couple was most deserving of assistance for a wedding and in getting a start. This is what went to the winner:

Furniture for three rooms; diamond wedding ring; trousseau; clothes for the bridegroom; photos; flowers and 12 bridesmaids; wedding supper and a bridal suite at a hotel; honeymoon trip; wedding cake; laundry and beauty parlor service for six months. And then the old man has to go to work, for the theatre even supplied him a job.

A cabinet member is only a cabinet member, but a newsreel shot is a lot of publicity.

Following the swearing in of Henry Morgenthau, Jr., as Acting Secretary of the Treasury, both Mr. Morgenthau and his predecessor, William Hartman Woodin, returned from the White House to the Treasury Department. There they found the newsreel boys in the secretary's private office, with their equipment all set up, ready for business. Woodin and Morgenthau, after being "pushed about" and told what to say, rehearsed their speech and then the signal was given.

Mr. Woodin said some very nice things about Mr. Morgenthau. Mr. Morgenthau said some very nice things about Mr. Woodin, and then came the word, "cut."

Secretary Woodin was beaming. "How was it boys?"

The answer came back in chorus: "Lousy!" They had to do it all over again.

Professional jealousy in Hollywood is on the increase. Paramount signed Sally Rand to do a picture, and now Warners come along with the announcement that their new musical is going to have sixty Sally Rands! Sixty fan dancers in one scene! And, as if to dispel any doubts that they'll be the real stuff, a home office announcement says: "The costume of each of the dancers consist of four feathers, 'strategically placed.'" business Thursday morning. All provisions of the document are supposed to become operative at once, for the entire business, regardless of whether members sign or not.

NAMING OF BOARD PERSONNEL NEXT

Another phase of the situation as it now stands in New York was explained Tuesday night by Sidney R. Kent, who said at Kansas City, while en route to Hollywood, that code modifications about which the companies had no information or intimation until the official text was released, are holding up final approval.

Seek Approval Anew

"The Hays directors' meeting," said Mr. Kent, "was called because of the companies' code position with regard to their directors and stockholders." He explained that the various companies were signatories to the code draft which had been completed a few weeks ago, and the approval of directors and stockholders had been obtained before signing. "Now with such far-reaching modifications in the completed code, it was considered necessary to again obtain the approval of stockholders and directors before signing the code as modified."

He declared that the companies want to determine the Administration's reason for the ninety-day suspension of the salary-control clause.

Puzzled by Clause Suspension

"We were told so many things in Washington about what the Administration was going to do to the picture business that we approved the early code draft. Now we want to find out what is in the Administration's mind with regard to those modifications about which we are in the dark," said Mr. Kent.

The Fox president will call meetings of the corporation's directors and stockholders to act on the code, immediately upon his return to New York from production conferences at Movietone City.

Up to press time on Wednesday, no official word had been received about the Code Authority's first meeting, nor was there any indication from Capitol Hill that the motion picture executives who had been named to the Code Authority had accepted. So far as known no alternates have been selected.

It was said over the weekend that Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA deputy, would call the Code Authority together in New York late this week, but word came from Washington later that General Hugh Johnson, Administrator, had taken the matter in hand and would hold the first meeting at the Capital, although no date was indicated.

The principal business scheduled for the first session probably will be the naming of 32 local clearance and zoning and grievance boards for exhibitors and exchanges in the field, and, also, the setting up of an organization for the gathering of details for the report which the President asked to have submitted to him in 90 days. Among other things, this would cover factual information on socalled excessive stars' and executives' salaries, and details on the practice of "star raiding." It had not been decided whether the Code Authority itself will make the investigations, or assign the task to a special committee, or whether even the Federal Trade Commission might be the investigating agency.

INDUSTRY CODE IS NOW LAW

The motion picture industry's NRA code became law at 12:01 Thursday morning, and whether members sign or not, the entire business would be legally subject to it.

Exhibitors and distributors in the field must sign the instrument not later than January 10, otherwise they will have no recourse to the local grievance and local clearance zoning boards. Even though they do not sign they still may be made defendants in complaints filed by code signers.

Government Contacts Not Named

The President had not announced the identities of the two direct Government contacts who remain to be appointed to the Code Authority, nor had the chairman been selected, although a half dozen or more were mentioned speculatively in this connection, including Charles L. O'Reilly, Sidney R. Kent, Sol A. Rosenblatt, R. H. Cochrane, Ed Kuykendall. Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, president-emeritus of Harvard University, and head of the Motion Picture Research Council, is one of the three Government voices on the Code Authority.

Meanwhile, General Johnson, as code administrator, will assume the duties on the Code Authority of the two unnamed Government appointees. General Johnson was said to be desirous of watching closely the operation of the code during its early stages.

Labor Wants Representation

Although labor will not protest the appointment to the Code Authority of Eddie Cantor and Marie Dressler as representatives of only a certain Hollywood group, it was learned this week that organized labor will look for a place on the board when labor problems arise. In any event, it is expected that a precedent will be established if and when labor succeeds in getting representation on the coal board, upon which it now is concentrating its efforts. General Johnson probably would then permit labor representatives to sit on important code authorities, including that of the motion picture.

The National Recovery Administration answered the request of labor some weeks ago when it ruled that code authority functions are considered an employers' rather than an employees' obligation. However, General Johnson later said: "I never would lay down a hard and fast rule. When labor assumes responsibility for management it is assuming responsibility for profit and loss—which is not labor's traditional position."

Organized labor indicated satisfaction with the workers' provisions of the motion picture code some weeks ago.

Theatre owners and exchangemen in the field were beginning to talk about the impending formation and method of operation of the local clearance and zoning boards and the local grievance boards, on which they will have equal representation, and which the code provides as separate pieces of machinery for establishing fair clearance and zoning schedules and for arbitrating and adjusting local disputes between exchanges and exhibitors and among exhibitors themselves.

An exhibitor who does not sign the approved code by January 10 will get no satisfaction from the grievance board, although he can be made the defendant of a complaint filed with the board by any exhibitor who has signed the document. Also, non-signers must abide by the rulings of the clearance and zoning board, as they likewise are governed by all code clauses.

The immediate business of the Code Authority probably will be the selection of personnel for the clearance and zoning and grievance boards for each of the 32 exchange territories.

Makeup of Zoning Board

The zoning boards will each consist of two representatives of distributors, one of whom shall be a national distributor with theatre affiliations, and one a distributor without circuit theatre affiliations; two representatives of first-run theatres located in such territory, one of whom shall be an affiliated exhibitor, if there be one, and one an unaffiliated exhibitor; and two representatives of subsequent run unaffiliated theatres; and one person approved by the Administrator who shall have no direct or indirect affiliation with any branch of the industry, who shall be regarded as the impartial representative of the Code Authority, and shall vote only when the board is deadlocked.

Grievance Board Personnel

The personnel of each grievance board will consist of two representatives of distributors, one of whom shall be a national distributor with theatre affiliations and one a distributor without circuit affiliations, and two representatives of exhibitors, one of whom shall be an affiliated exhibitor, if there be one, and one an unaffiliated exhibitor. Also, this board will have a direct representative of the Code Authority, who, too, will vote only when the board is deadlocked.

Of vital concern to all exhibitors will be the zoning boards' first order of business: the drafting, individually for each territory, of a zoning and clearance schedule. The texture of such schedules, often in the past, has caused much difficulty between the buyers and the sellers of motion pictures.

Because the code does not affect existing contractual relations between distributors and theatre owners, the present clearance and zoning schedules governing the playing of 1933-34 product will not be altered. However, on or about January 1, each board is supposed to have ready a new schedule to rule the playing of 1934-35 and all other future product. A new schedule will be drawn yearly.

It was indicated this week that the first zoning schedule may be waived for a few weeks by the Administrator because of the delay in signing the code, also because the boards will not be in operation until after the Code Authority meets, and it obviously would be impossible to draft 32 schedules in so short a time.

Much of the lull in Film Board of Trade activities, which has been quite pronounced in recent months, will terminate when the two local code boards start operations. The Film Boards were once the local arbitration mediums.

10% Cancellations on Old Contracts

Nationwide exhibitor speculation over cancellations was ended over the weekend when it became known that the majority of large distributors in New York will either extend the 10 per cent cancellation privilege for pictures averaging $250 rental, or less, as provided in the code, to those exhibitors who already have contracted for current season's product, or will grant the equivalent of the cancellation privilege in revised contracts.

In hundreds of cases, this will be mandatory because of a clause, written in 1933-34 contracts at the request of exhibitors upon signing, that the contract would be altered when the code was signed to include any code provisions not appearing in the contract at the time it was negotiated.

It was indicated in New York that, in other cases, sales executives will extend the benefits of the 10 per cent cancellation clause of the code. However, it was made clear that this will not apply to contracts in which the rental had been determined on the basis of purchase of the distributor's entire product en bloc. These owners may be given the choice of continuing under the existing contract, or negotiating a new contract to include the cancellation privilege. Revised rentals would be based on the exhibitor's choice of less than the entire block.

Unsold accounts already are being given contracts revised to embrace the 10 per cent cancellation. Practically every exchange in the country is expected to have these new forms on hand within a few days.

Exhibitors Meeting on Code

While the Hays members were discussing the President's Executive Order and the code content in New York, independent producers and distributors and exhibitors in the field were preparing to meet immediately en masse to talk code.

The directorate of the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry, at a meeting in New York on Tuesday, voted to call a special session of its independent producer and distributor members to consider and act upon code signing, probably late this week.

Practically every local or state association of theatre owners already has decided upon quick action on the code at special conventions.

The attitude of Allied States Association toward the approved code will be made known at a meeting on December 12 of the managing committee appointed by the Chicago "mass meeting." This special conference will be held at the Hotel Pantlind, Grand Rapids, Michigan, coincident with the annual convention of Allied Theatres of Michigan.

In a special code bulletin issued from national Allied headquarters at Washington late last week, Abram F. Myers, general counsel said:

"Allied will not take any definite position in reference to the motion picture code until a thorough analysis of the code, the Executive Order approving it, and the statements of General Johnson can be made.

"From the information at hand we interpret the action taken at Warm Springs to mean that the President is determined to make the influence of the Government felt in the industry so that the unfair and monopolistic practices that have given rise to so much turmoil and have resulted in so many appeals to the Government for intervention may be ended.

"We are especially anxious to learn just what is contemplated by the requirement of a full report on all unfair practices within 90 days. If this means a report to the President by his representatives on the Code Authority, it conforms to the suggestion made by this association under date of November 13th and will be welcomed.

"We are also concerned as to the meaning and practical effect of the provision vesting the final decision on all questions in the Administrator. The right of appeal to an unbiased federal agency has been an important part of Allied's policy ever since its formation.

"A full report of all proceedings taken, as well as recommendations concerning future activities under the code, will be made at that time (December 12th). It is possible that further expressions concerning the code will be deferred until after that meeting, although an analysis of the code will be supplied to all affiliated units before the end of the week."

Regrets Code Representation

Later in the week, Mr. Myers said privately: "I can not refrain from expressing regret that the independent theatre owners were given such inadequate representation on the Code Authority. The exhibitors of the country will resent the failure to include aggressive leaders such as James C. Ritter, Sidney E. Samuelson, W. A. Steffes, H. A. Cole, Aaron Saperstein and M. B. Horwitz.

"The author of the code would have served the President better, and builded on a firmer foundation, had he provided for equal and true representation of all economic divisions. High-handed action, too, often raises more issues than it settles and the placing of dangerous power in the hands of one group increases the misgivings and distrust of the remainder.

"However, the President has reserved the right to correct the mistakes and excesses of his subordinates, and there is no doubt that he will exercise his power before any great harm can be done."

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America continued to support the code in its final form, and through its president, Ed Kuykendall, urged all exhibitors to give the document a "fair trial," and added that retention of final authority on code matters by the President and NRA Administrator, would assure exhibitors a "square deal."

With a half-dozen MPTOA state affiliates already on record for code ratification, having held conventions before the instrument was signed, others were preparing, along with some Allied and unaffiliated local organizations, to hold an early ratification session, or at least to discuss the code's contents.

Allied States of Michigan will hold its code convention December 12 and 13 at Grand Rapids, Mich. Members of the national executive board will attend.

Al Steffes, at Minneapolis, postponed a code convention called by Allied theatre owners in the Northwest, from December 5 and 6 to December 15.

New Jersey Allied will talk code at the annual convention December 19, at the Stacey theatre, Trenton. Sidney E. Samuelson, president, and Mr. Myers will explain the code.

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York, called a mass meeting, to be held shortly at the Hotel Astor, to familiarize Metropolitan owners with code contents. The O'Reilly association, however, already has signed the document. Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA deputy, will attend the New York meeting.

The Independent Theatre Owners Association of New York City held a special code session on Tuesday.

North and South Carolina's MPTO members will convene on December 10th and 11th, at the Hotel Charlotte, Charlotte, N. C.

On Friday, Allied Amusements of the (Pacific) Northwest will meet in annual session at the New Washington hotel, Seattle.

Rosenblatt Promises "Fair Deal"

Sol Rosenblatt promised a "fair deal" under the code, in an address before delegates to the annual convention of the MPTO of Ohio, held on Tuesday at the Deshler-Wallick hotel, Columbus. At the banquet, Governor White, Dr. B. O. Skinner, director of education; Eddie Golden, of Monogram, and others, were guests of honor.

Mr. Rosenblatt and Charles O'Reilly are scheduled to appear at the convention Thursday of the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware, to be held at the Hotel Broadwood, Philadelphia.

After talking about the code, Allied of Texas assembled Tuesday at Dallas, re-elected H. A. Cole president. A. W. Lilly was named secretary-treasurer, and Rubin Frels and Mrs. Martha Spadden were selected vice-presidents.

The board of directors of the Screen Actors' Guild in Hollywood voiced their appreciation Monday to Joseph M. Schenck, president of United Artists, for his efforts to obtain the ninety-day suspension of the code clause governing actors' salaries. Mr. Schenck resigned from the Coast producers association some weeks ago when his stand to abolish the clause differed with that of other members. Eddie Cantor, who works for Mr. Schenck's company, was also in the fight.

Although the producers in Hollywood have so far failed to recognize the Screen Actors' Guild and the Writers' Guild, many members of which bolted from the Academy, executives of the Actors' organization indicated this week that the studios automatically will force their recognition through the collective bargaining provisions of the code.

ZONING SCHEDULES WILL NOT BE UPSET

Present clearance zoning schedules for 1933-34 product will not be upset by the confusion over the code, distributors said.

Exhibitors' speculation over cancellation was ended when distributors let it be known that the 10 per cent cancellation clause of the code would be incorporated in existing contracts.

Film Daily Relief Fund Drive Begins

The Film Daily Relief Fund this week began its seventh annual drive for contributions devoted to relief of destitute members of the film fraternity. The fund was established in 1927.

Second Youngclaus Suit Due in Nebraska Shortly

The second suit of William N. Youngclaus, Madison, Neb., theatre owner, is scheduled to get under way in federal court at Lincoln late this week or early next week. In the earlier, famous case, Mr. Youngclaus won an injunction against the major distributors, Publix and the Omaha Film Board of Trade to prevent enforcement of a zoning and protection agreement. It marked the first test case on protection.

The current action pertains to a request on the part of Mr. Youngclaus for $255,000 damages for alleged injury to his business as a result of the agreement. A third suit, not yet tried, asks further damages for alleged violations of the injunction obtained in the first suit.

Tax Appeal Board Decides Against Skouras Enterprises

The board of tax appeals at Washington has entered a deficiency judgment of $8,232 covering income taxes from March 25 to December 31, 1920, against Skouras Brothers Enterprises of St. Louis. The amount entered against the company had been originally assessed by the commissioner of internal revenue but the company took appeal. On another item for $4,136, covering the period of January 1, 1921, to February 27, 1921, the board reversed the commissioner. The company had claimed additional allowances for deductions from taxable income to cover depreciation and organization expenses.

The company is now in bankruptcy, having filed a voluntary petition in the United States district court on November 10. Its schedules of assets and liabilities entered in the court recently showed liabilities of $5,086,419 and assets of $1,694,195. The principal liability of the company is a balance of $4,050,000 on an issue of $4,500,000 in bonds floated by S. W. Straus & Company of Chicago for the Central Properties Corporation in 1925.

Ohio MPTO Picks Martin J. Smith; Hears Rosenblatt

Martin G. Smith, Toledo, was elected to the presidency of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ohio at the twelfth annual convention in Columbus Wednesday. A. J. Holt, Cincinnati; Ed Healy, Newark; Sam Lind, Zanesville, and Henry Bieberson, Delaware, were elected vice-presidents.

Other officers elected were Max Stern, Columbus, treasurer; John Schwalm, Cincinnati, secretary, and the following trustees: J. Real Neth, C. F. Pfister, Ike Lisbon, Nate Holt, L. F. Eick, W. A. Finney.

The highlight of the convention was an address Tuesday by Sol A. Rosenblatt, administrator of the motion picture code. Mr. Rosenblatt assured the assembled theatre men that they would get fair play under the NRA code.

Monogram Abandons Unit Production

Trem Carr, vice-president in charge of Monogram Pictures production, announced this week that the company's policy of unit production is to be abandoned and that hereafter all studio activity will be brought under his direct supervision and that of his staff, headed by Lou Ostrow, executive producer. All problems will be gone over by the executive committee before and during the shooting of pictures.

Under the new plan, Mr. Carr will employ a staff of writers to work on story treatments in advance of production.

Admission Tax Hearings Planned

Drastic revision of the income tax laws to add $270,000,000 in new federal revenue annually was proposed Tuesday to the House ways and means committee at Washington.

Amusement interests will be given an opportunity to air their views on the admissions tax planned as a part of the Government's new fund-raising program at hearings being started late this week by the committee, which already has begun its task of preparing tax legislation to present to Congress.

The House ways and means sub-committee, which proposed the income tax revisions, recommended alterations in the capital gains and losses provisions, dividend taxation and revenue possibilities from partially tax-exempt Government securities.

Old Roxy Shows $68,252 Profit

The original Seventh avenue Roxy in New York last week reported a net profit of $68,252.80 before fixed charges for the 21-week period ended November 9. The balance sheet shows a net operating profit for the period of $2,821.99 after all fixed charges, except interest on outstanding bonds and depreciation.

The report for a similar period last year is not comparable because that report covered the period from July 1 to December 15, and showed a loss in excess of $91,000 before fixed charges and a total loss, after fixed charges, in excess of $203,000.

This year's report, filed in United States district court, New York, by Howard S. Cullman, receiver, calls to the attention of the court the fact that during the 1933 period the Roxy theatre had to meet competition of an additional seating capacity of 10,000 in the neighborhood that was non existent in the same period in 1932. New and advantageous film contracts with major companies have been concluded, Mr. Cullman said, whereby the Roxy is now assured a constant supply of quality product.

Optimism Highest In Three Years, Says Harry Ross

Declaring there prevails throughout the country a greater spirit of optimism than has existed for three years, Harry A. Ross, president of Ross Federal Service, checkers of theatre percentage receipts for the motion picture industry's major distributors, returned to New York last week from a 12,000-mile motor trip, on which he covered virtually every corner of the nation.

"The small towns especially seem to have a new slant on things," Mr. Ross said, "and motion picture exhibitors everywhere gave me the same answer when I asked them what the prospects for 1934 looked like: 'This next year ought to be a great one. Our business is going to be better than it has been in three years.'

"If our business—that of checking these percentage receipts—is any criterion of what is going on in the way of increased business, conditions certainly must be better than they were even four months ago," Mr. Ross added. "Our records show a 50 per cent gain in business during the past six weeks alone.

"There are, of course, certain localities where business is not much better, but there is usually a definite reason for this. In New Orleans, for example, the banking situation has played havoc with business generally. Over $80,000,000 is still tied up in the banks of that territory."

Senators Close Film Hearings

The Senate banking committee at Washington, which for weeks has been conducting an exhaustive investigation of Wall Street financing in American industry, is understood to be studying a proposal to legislate the separation of commercial and investment banking. The idea was given to the senators by Winthrop W. Aldrich, president of Chase bank, upon the conclusion last week of hearings into the motion picture phases of financing by the Chase interests and other large Wall Street powers.

At the concluding sessions of the hearings on motion picture financing, during which were discussed the dealings leading up to the formation of General Theatres Equipment and its subsequent dealings in Fox and Loew's, Senate inquiry records were produced last Friday to show how Harley L. Clarke turned an estimated investment of $1,000,000 in motion pictures into a $65,000,000 "paper fortune" within five years.

Benjamin De Casseres, noted essayist and critic, and commentator on matters theatrical in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, was caught by the camera hurtling a highball—the first legal highball in the country after 14 years —past his teeth on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. De Casseres had a bet with Oscar Mayer of Chicago that he would beat him to the gun. He said that exactly 30 seconds after the ticker—he had a direct wire from the United Press general offices to his room in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York—had flashed Utah's vote, a goodly portion of VAT 69 was reposing where it should be. It was a drink heard around the world. A London "Daily Express" reporter distinctly heard the gurgle from the other end of a trans-Atlantic telephonic hookup. In Shanghai a group of Americans solemnly downed their highballs at the same moment. Beverly West, Mae's little sister, conceded victory to Mr. De Casseres by half a second.

Kent Finds Business Good in Great Britain

Motion picture business conditions in England are excellent, according to Sidney R. Kent, Fox Film president, who was en route to Hollywood from New York. Mr. Kent returned to this country from a European business trip last week.

"Film business conditions in England are fine," he said Tuesday in Kansas City. "However, the situation elsewhere in Europe is not good at all."

Hays Announces New Ad Council Under McCarthy

Following an announcement two weeks ago that J. J. McCarthy had taken on a special assignment at the MPPDA, in connection with motion picture publicity and advertising, the association on Monday issued this statement:

"Will H. Hays, president of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., announces that there has been created within his organization an advertising advisory council headed by J. J. McCarthy. During the past sixteen years Mr. McCarthy has handled advertising and publicity for many of the more important picture productions, including "Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Way Down East," "The Covered Wagon," "Ten Commandments," "The Big Parade," "Ben Hur," and many others.

"The purpose of this department is to render service and advice in connection with motion picture advertising and exploitation to the point of eliminating the objectionable features in all types of motion picture advertising.

"A number of meetings have already been held between the heads of the advertising departments of the major motion picture companies and the advertising advisory council, at which an effective and practical procedure has been worked out. Mr. McCarthy will have as assistant in his work, Lester Thompson, who has had a vast experience in motion picture exploitation and publicity."

The directors of the Hays Office, at a meeting last month, adopted various new regulations referring to publicity and advertising, and Mr. McCarthy's work will consist principally of the application of these regulations.

Mr. McCarthy indicated Tuesday that the Hays organization is already receiving the cooperation of all publicity and advertising directors in connection with the new morality program.

The advisory council, headed by Mr. McCarthy, consists of Howard Dietz, MGM; S. Charles Einfeld, Warner, and John C. Flinn, of Paramount and president of the AMPA. During the absence on the Coast of both Mr. Einfeld and Mr. Flinn, substitutes are Stanley Shuford for Mr. Einfeld and Robert F. Sisk, RKO, for Mr. Flinn.

The division drive is headed by an executive committee comprising Albert Warner, of Warner Bros.; David Loew, MGM; Ralph Kohn, Paramount; Jack Cohn, Columbia, and Max Gordon, the producer.

Plans for the campaign in the motion picture and theatrical division were perfected at a luncheon at the Hotel Astor.

COURT RESERVES ACTION ON PLEA TO REMOVE PARAMOUNT TRUSTEES

Code Labor Provisions May Delay Completion of Reorganization Plans for Company Until After First of the Year

The United States circuit court of appeals, New York district, reserved decision on Monday, until December 18, on the second court attempt of Samuel Zirn, representing minority creditors, to remove the trustees in bankruptcy of Paramount Publix Corporation.

Mr. Zirn's group, in seeking again to oust Trustees Charles D. Hilles, Eugene W. Leake and Charles E. Richardson, also petitioned Judges Martin T. Manton, Augustus Hand and Harry Chase to reopen the meeting of creditors at which the trustees were elected.

This week's appeal of Mr. Zirn and his minority group of Paramount creditors to remove the trustees follows denial of a previous motion by Judge Frank J. Coleman in the United States Circuit Court, New York, last July.

May Delay Reorganization

Completion of Paramount's reorganization plan may be delayed until the first of the year pending determination of the extent of increased operating costs under the labor provisions of the NRA code. The plan is being prepared by Sir William Wiseman of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. General business stabilization and the new federal bankruptcy regulations also are said to be contributing factors.

Publix Enterprises' reorganization plan is expected to be in the hands of Referee Henry K. Davis within 10 days.

Referring to that part of the petition to reopen the first meeting at which the trustees were elected on April 17 and May 19, 1933, Mr. Zirn charged that "the proceedings were merely a sham and a pretense, violated the fundemental rights of creditors at such a meeting and rendered it a nullity."

This contention was based, he said, largely upon the referee's refusal to permit counsel for creditors to examine the candidates for trustee and to develop facts which allegedly would disqualify the persons nominated.

In defense, Granville Clark, counsel for the trustees, said that the trustees, after being unanimously nominated, had resigned from the positions held prior to their election, which would disqualify them as trustees at Paramount.

Also, Nathan Burkan, attorney representing 112 other creditors with claims totaling $2,200,000, emphasized that "an election was imperative" at the time, and that an examination of the trustees would have delayed the election for several months. Mr. Burkan added that all of the trustees elected were experienced in this particular work.

Zirn Said Trustees "Disqualified"

Prior to arguing for the reopening of the creditors' election meeting, Mr. Zirn told the court that Messrs. Hilles, Leake and Richardson were disqualified because "of embarrassing relations" with the Paramount bank group. He said that Mr. Leake and Mr. Richardson's disqualification came about through a reputed association with Chase National Bank, underwriter of a Paramount bond issue, and that banking affiliations of Mr. Hilles are allegedly prejudicial to the interests of creditors.

They were disqualified, also, Mr. Zirn charged, "by other circumstances preventing unhampered, impartial and disinterested action in the sole interest of creditors generally."

"The bank group," he added, "and the Chase National Bank as trustees under both of Paramount's bond issues and a secret participant in the underwriting of these issues with the underwriting bankers, were in control of, or largely represented on, Paramount's board of directors and its finance committee."

This week's developments in the Paramount Publix bankruptcy situation follow:

1. The United States circuit court of appeals refused, at least until December 18, to take any action on an appeal of the "Zirn group" of minority creditors, to remove the three trustees.
2. Further definite indications appeared that a reorganization plan is imminent.
3. John Hertz, former finance committee chairman, gave another episode in the story of Paramount's management prior to the bankruptcy.

Improved Situation Cited

Further definite indications that a Paramount Publix reorganization plan is imminent, were seen over the week-end in the move of a Paramount stockholders' protective committee, headed by Duncan A. Holmes of New York and by Barney Balaban, of Balaban and Katz, Chicago, to secure deposits of "a substantial majority" of the 3,380,121 shares outstanding in order to obtain "proper recognition."

A few hours following Mr. Zirn's appeal on Monday for removal of the trustees, Henry K. Davis, federal referee, sounded the gavel at his quarters on Nassau Street, calling to order another in the long series of Paramount creditors' meetings. The principal business of the day was another episode in the story of Paramount operations prior to bankruptcy, as told by John Hertz, Chicago financier, and former chairman of the Paramount finance committee. Mr. Hertz was examined this time by Saul Rogers, counsel for a group of creditors.

Hertz Answers Rogers

Mr. Rogers severely criticized the reputed authorizing by Mr. Hertz of a loan of $13,200,000 to a Paramount subsidiary in March, 1932, on collateral which, Mr. Rogers said, in the case of default, would give the banks a "nice nest egg."

Mr. Hertz explained that new subsidiary companies were formed "to save taxes," and that he had further reduced costs by eliminating personnel and curtailing the expenditures of the Paramount legal department.

Mr. Hertz, under questioning by Mr. Rogers, said that 12 creditor banks identified with the March, 1932, refinancing of Paramount Publix, had an exclusive claim on $6,000,000 worth of unfinished negatives, and that the formation of the six new subsidiaries in November, 1932, was done partially as a precautionary measure against possible receivership.

The socalled preferential claims of the banking group have been the subject of discussion on numerous occasions since the receivership.

Specifically, Film Productions Corporation, then a new subsidiary, held six uncompleted negatives which were pledged for $13,200,000 in new credit. There now exists a court action to have the bank agreement set aside, and filed by the Paramount trustees.

Hertz Tells Creditors' Meeting That New Subsidiaries Were Formed "To Save Taxes"; Reviews Moves To Reduce Costs

"Not Interested in Details" of Deal

Charging that Mr. Hertz was responsible to the creditors, Mr. Rogers, during one of many clashes with the witness, said: "You have to account to these creditors and I think you did a very poor job."

Mr. Rogers' opinion was voiced when, after observing that the witness should remember more of the details of his tenure as Paramount financial executive, Mr. Hertz replied: "I was doing the best I knew how for Paramount every day I was with the company, and I don't think I have to account to any one for the job I did, whether it turned out good or bad."

Mr. Hertz still insisted that he remembered none of the details which led up to the transaction with the banks, and added that the details of the new credit arrangement were in the hands of Ralph Kohn, then Paramount treasurer.

Says He Knew of Security

He testified that he was not sure about the banks getting any commission charges," after he had said, "All I remember is that the banks were to get commission charges and interest."

"You didn't know that $6,000,000 worth of negatives were pledged by Film Production Corp. for that loan?" asked Mr. Rogers.

"I knew there was security of some kind," Mr. Hertz replied.

"And that Film Productions Corp. was specifically prohibited by the agreement from contracting any other obligation, so that the banks, therefore, had an exclusive claim on the negatives in case of a default?" Mr. Rogers asked.

"I knew there was security of some kind," Mr. Hertz repeated.

The primary purpose of the organization in November, 1932, of Paramount Productions, Paramount International, Paramount Pictures Corp. and Paramount Distributing Corp., in addition to Paramount Publix and Film Production Corp., was for the purpose of decentralization, Mr. Hertz testified, but later admitted that "fear" of a possible receivership also entered into the plans so that, if that eventuality came to pass, the business of the parent corporation could be carried on by active subsidiaries.

Mr. Hertz denied any definite plan for receivership had been discussed in Paramount up to the time of his resignation in January, 1933,

"Comedy Runs Riot

Looking 'Em Over

"Myrt and Marge"

(Universal)

Comedy runs riot in this musical with Myrt and Marge of radio fame as headliners. Actually, Ted Healy and his gang furnish all the laughs with Eddie Foy, Jr., assisting with his neat routine of dance and song. Some of the gags are a bit spicy. With the names of the air personalities, the vaudeville topliners, Trixie Friganza, Grace Hayes, Thomas Jackson and J. Farrell MacDonald, plus some swell dance routines, songs and patter, this musicomedy is first class entertainment. There are plenty of exploitation possibilities.

The story pivots about a show about to be produced by MacDonald when he and his backers walk out on it. Myrt Spear takes it over, interests Jackson in financing it and stays on as manager. The new promoter falls in love with Marge Minter, whose time is being taken up by Foy, Jr. When he sees his efforts failing, Jackson attempts a walkout, and goes through with it after Foy beats him up for trying to crash Marge's room. Miss Friganza, the heroine's mother, comes to the rescue, and buys the show and it later proves a howling success when it finally reaches New York.

Healy and his gang are "prop" men with the show, bobbing in and out to make the affair interesting and lively. It smacks of showmanship throughout. Al Boasberg, who knows the theatre and his background, directed.

MARGE

TELLS OF SALARY CUTS

despite Mr. Rogers' intimations that the receivership papers, filed later in the same month, must have been in preparation prior to Mr. Hertz's departure from the company and involved preliminary conferences with the applicant for a friendly receivership.

"The real purpose of creating the subsidiaries," Mr. Hertz said, "was to effect economies by decentralizing such as had been achieved through centralization of the theatre department."

"How was the creation of six corporations with six accounting staffs, where there had been but one, expected to effect an economy?" Mr. Rogers wanted to know.

"In decentralizing the theatres," Mr. Hertz replied, "we found that elimination of many home office departments worked an economy. We expected the same thing to result from decentralization of the entire organization. Moreover, we anticipated income tax economies to follow."

Reduced Payrolls, Salaries

Mr. Hertz revealed that, in attempting to effect economies throughout the entire Paramount organization, he had "gone over the relative situation," with the result that a number of persons on the payroll, known to be related to executives of the company, were either asked to resign or subjected to drastic salary reductions where Mr. Hertz's investigation found them to be warranted.

Elek J. Ludvigh, former head of the Paramount legal department, was asked to resign, Mr. Hertz said, and the entire department was scrutinized with the result that its overhead was reduced from $800,000 to $400,000 per year.

"Ludvigh, who I believe was a relative of Adolph Zukor's, had been getting $75,000 before I asked him to resign," Mr. Hertz said "An assistant of his, receiving $45,000, I reduced almost 50 per cent, and others in the department receiving from $25,000 to $40,000 a year, I cut to about $15,000.

"Felix Kahn, who I believe is a brother of Otto Kahn, the Paramount banker with Kuhn, Loeb and Company, had his salary cut in half immediately and was asked to resign on Jan. 1, 1933."

"What was Mr. Kahn's job?" Mr. Rogers asked.

"I couldn't find out," was the answer. "He had been there about 14 years. I found there were several Felix Kahns in the organization."

Subsequently Mr. Hertz testified that he had "protested" the salary paid Al Kaufman, production assistant, and had investigated the salary paid the late Emil Shauer, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution, and that of Melville Shauer, a son, employed at the studio.

Questioned on Resignations

"I felt Shauer's salary was fair and believed him to be essential to the company. I found that Melville Shauer received a nominal salary and the studio manager told me he was valuable. Reductions were made in their salaries, however."

Questioned on the resignations of various Paramount executives during 1932, Mr. Hertz said that while he had been the one commissioned to ask Sidney R. Kent to resign, he felt Mr. Kent to be a "very able man" who was in a peculiar, personal position in which he "couldn't or wouldn't function properly."

"I discovered," Mr. Hertz said, "that Mr. Kent, who was in charge of sales, hadn't been in the office of Sam Katz, theatre head, in two years, and that only memorandums had passed between the two in that time. I felt that it was a very unhealthy condition for both the corporation and Mr. Kent. The entire board agreed to his resignation."

In reply to a question put by Mr. Rogers, Mr. Hertz said he "had no opinion on George Schaefer's qualifications as a successor to Mr. Kent. I just acquiesced to his appointment," he said.

Mr. Hertz maintained that his own resignation was solely due to differences with Mr. Zukor, and not prospects of a receivership for the company.

"I came back from a vacation on January 2 with no thought of resigning," he said, "and learned during my first half hour in the office of Mr. Zukor's opposition to some things I had done and this precipitated my resignation.

"I felt that Mr. Zukor didn't appreciate my efforts and I was ready to go home," he said later.

Mr. Zukor testified on the stand several weeks ago that the "things" Mr. Hertz had done, which he opposed, were the latter's efforts to take over production and advertising charge.

Defends Albert Lasker

Mr. Hertz testified Emanuel Cohn had drawn $160,000 to $200,000 a year, salary and bonuses, as head of the Paramount newsreel, and had assumed charge of production in Hollywood at a salary of $100,000 per year, and had replaced two men whose combined salaries were $750,000 annually, "and is doing a good job, I understand," he added.

Mr. Hertz rose to the defense of his business friend, Albert D. Lasker, when Saul Rogers charged that Mr. Lasker "had done nothing for Paramount, but had taken a nice, fat advertising contract from the company for his agency, Lord, Thomas and Logan."

Mr. Hertz, who said he brought Mr. Lasker and the late William Wrigley, Jr., into Paramount as directors "for the prestige their names meant to the company," retorted Mr. Lasker hadn't "grabbed" the Paramount advertising account.

Account Given Lasker

"It was given to him," Mr. Hertz said, "and he did the job better than it had ever been done before and at the same price that had always been paid. Mr. Lasker wouldn't have taken the account if I hadn't urged him to. Money isn't the only consideration with him. He turns down four-fifths of the accounts offered him."

Mr. Rogers also probed the interest of Kuhn, Loeb and Co. in Mr. Hertz's appointment to chairmanship of the Paramount finance committee at a time when the bank admittedly had no Paramount financing under way or contemplated. While admitting he had discussed all phases of Paramount's financial affairs with Sir William Wiseman, in his dual capacity as a member of the Paramount finance committee and a representative of Kuhn, Loeb, and also with Otto Kahn of the banking firm, Mr. Hertz maintained these discussions were merely in the interests of aiding Paramount to complete its bank credit agreement of March, 1932. Kuhn, Loeb did not participate in this agreement.

Objections to claims filed against Paramount Publix by Chase National as trustee for two Paramount Publix indentures aggregating $25,177,000, were submitted on Wednesday to Referee Davis by Paramount trustees' attorneys. Chase representatives consented to a reduction. The motion was taken under advisement.

BUSINESS GAINS APPEAR IN SOUTH

Optimism is apparently lifting its smiling head in the theatre territory of the South and Southwest. The cotton country is showing an upturn in business, with better prices and considerable employment in fields and gins. Increased attendance at film theatres there is reported bringing smiles to the faces of theatre men. It is generally agreed, however, that the time is not yet ripe to raise theatre admissions.

Both Sides Win In Duovac Action

Plaintiffs and defendants this week divided benefits in the legal battle at Wilmington, Del., over talking motion picture producing and reproducing and the manufacturing and leasing of apparatus and equipment of that business, as a result of an opinion handed down in the United States district court at Wilmington by Judge John P. Nields on one phase of the preliminary legal skirmishing connected with the anti-trust suit of Stanley Company of America, Duovac Radio and General Talking Picture companies, plaintiffs, against A. T. & T., Western Electric and Erpi.

Judge Nields' opinion today was upon the plaintiffs' objections to defendants' interrogatories. The defendant companies recently had filed interrogatories, or formal legal questions asking that the plaintiffs submit particulars and discovery concerning the allegations of monopoly and unfair practice by defendants, and to test the plaintiffs' charges by learning whether the characteristic results of monopoly and unfair practice followed.

Interpreting equity rules No. 25 and 58 of the Supreme Court promulgated to "prevent surprise at trial, and to confine contest to the real issues," Judge Nields' opinion on this phase of the case, follows:

"Under the above interpretations of rules, it may well be that the motion for certain particulars should have been granted. The general denial of the motion is not, therefore, to be taken as a precedent. In view of the statement of counsel for the defendants that it is immaterial whether the information sought is obtained by way of particulars or interrogatories, the order denying the motion for particulars will stand.

"It is unnecessary to deal with the interrogatories seriatum. All interrogatories filed in each of the three cases, as modified by defendants at the hearing, with the exception of interrogatories respecting damages, should be answered. Objections to the latter interrogatory should be sustained."

Convention City

(First National)

Comedy

This is Grade A and novel lowdown comedy from start to finish. Not a special; rather a straight-away commercial so brimful of fast-moving laugh-drenched topical amusement that it's actually big entertainment, for big city and small town. If your audiences go for this slam-bang, somewhat intimate yet never-stop-a-minute brand of fun creation, they surely should enjoy this one. Treating a familiar subject, a business convention, the idea of the show suggests a host of natural, spectacular, curiosity-stimulating ballyhoo activities.

The show concentrates on portraying the funny, social, have-a-good-time side of such gatherings, bringing into relief the incidents that people like to remember and talk about after the brawl is over.

The principal story is a hilarious amalgamation of about a dozen incidental stories. All have been dolled up to the limit with inside color, glamor, excitement. All take surprising twists. Besides being the stuff that entertains, "Convention City" is liberally studded with scores of nifty special selling angles. The cast is of more than ordinary box office power. Every kind of showman will have his choice of specialties to exploit.

The show is predominantly geared for laughter, yet it offers novel romance and a little light drama. Every one of the players is a character study and every separate bit of entertainment is a source of new interest. There's the high-pressure salesman who wants the salesmanager's job, but likes to dally a bit in the fleshpots here and there. There's the staid, henpecked guy, who wants to have a good time but whose wife came along to see that he doesn't. The gold digging blonde blackmails the smart saps out of fur coats and oodles of dough. The neophyte goes on the make only to find the object of his ardor is the boss' daughter. There's the perpetual welcoming-farewelling mayor. The dumb drunk doesn't know he's at the wrong convention. The whoop-it-up salesman accidentally catches the dignified president on a shady lady rendezvous and feels that if he only had nailed the boss inside the door he'd have landed on the board of directors instead of in the salesmanager's berth. They all have a good time.

Selling "Convention City" should be a cinch. First get your patrons to understanding that it's not a big picture, but make 'em know, however, in the strongest ways you can that it's worth more than the price of admission. Names in the cast should more than take care of all marquee, lobby and ad requirements. For ballyhoo purposes concentrate on one big idea. Make your theatre the grand headquarters for all fun lovers. Announce the show as a mammoth convention of all those who appreciate non-sensical mirth. Invite the women to get the lowdown on what their hubbies do when they shove off on one of these important business gatherings where wives are not wanted. Renew for the men all the good times they had while conventioning. Brush up the old key to the city gag again. Hang up all the banners and pennants you can in your neighborhood. Circus the show to the limit. Pound home the idea that "Convention City" is not common usual entertainment. Convince the crowd that it's a new, different, unusual 70 minutes of laughter.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Roman Scandals

(United Artists-Goldwyn)

Musical Comedy

Music and comedy, girls, gags and Eddie Cantor constitute the entertainment and showmanship backbone of "Roman Scandals." Romantic interest, spectacle, the quick transformation from the hick town West Rome to the ancient Rome of the Caesars, novel in itself, and subordinate to those elements. Action thrill, a feature not ordinarily associated with musicals, presented in the form of a chariot chase, vies strongly as a source of audience interest and showmanship availability.

Centering on Eddie, the story is given the dream treatment. Opening in West Rome, modern America, the hero is a simple people's choice sort of character, idolizer of ancient history heros. His antics in the sculpture museum provoke early comedy, which is given interest treatment as Cooper, civic philanthropist and sly grafter, would tear down cottages to erect a jail. Stunned in an accident, Eddie dreams himself in ancient Rome, and time drops back a couple of thousand years. First sold as a slave, he is taken into the household of Valerius as food taster. Much topical gag comedy ensues, in which a laugh-torture sequence is high comedy. Then it develops that because of Valerius' infatuation for the hostess, Princess Sylvia, the Empress would poison him. But Sylvia is beloved by Josephus, a patrician Pal of Eddie's, and when the Emperor finds this out, he's set to throw the girl to the crocodiles. Eddie invades the Roman baths, for the expected girl glamour color which musical comedies must have. Following the Ziegfeld-like display, more rhythmic than geometric, comes the great cross country chariot chase which is an epic of excitement. With Sylvia and Josephus saved from Valerius' cohorts, Eddie crashes in an accident, again to wake up in West Rome of today, with the realization that Cooper's modern graft has been paralleled by that of Valerius.

While "Roman Scandals" lacks much of the spontaneity of "Kid from Spain," "Whoopee" and "Palmy Days," it has much in its own right to recommend it as amusing entertainment. As a musical it has the elements that made this type of picture popular. This value is strengthened by the fact that it departs from the "stage background" atmosphere and promises its major entertainment in ancient Rome. This fact should be stressed in publicity, inasmuch as competitive pictures bearing "Scandal" titles will be built around the theatre and its people.

The outstanding showmanship values are evident. Cantor is the big number. A one picture a year star, there should be little difficulty in interesting patrons in his latest personal effort. The title carries an intriguing sound and should be backed up by displays of the scantily clad girls as well as descriptive hints as to their charm and beauty. With one exception the principals are standard screen names. Ruth Etting, of stage and radio repute, is a newcomer and smart publicizing of her may bring additional patrons.

Ballyhoo should carry a definite Roman tinge. Where possible the construction of a four-horse drawn chariot, which could be set to galloping about the town, should prove a hefty interest stimulator. Accentuate the comedy values to the utmost. The screwier a concoction of moderinism and ancient times you can effect in ballyhooing the show, the more your patrons are apt to feel that this show is one they'll want to see.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Girl Without a Room

(Paramount—C. R. Rogers)

Comedy Romance

Plenty of fun in this one. Gag situations are the chief points of interest. A light romantic comedy, located in the Paris Bohemian art quarter, the show is fast moving. Dialogue and action are zippy. Charles Farrell is vividly different and the erstwhile austere Marguerite Churchill is a surprise. A new screen personality, Walter Woolf, makes his debut and he seems to have the colorful stuff of which stars are made. Ruggles and Ratoff are the hectic funsters every one expects them to be. And its people, rather than story content, make the show superior entertainment.

Built for laughter that runs from the light smile to the bellylaugh variety, the story concerns itself with a hillbilly artist who won a Parisian scholarship. A semblance of how nutty the whole thing is may be gleaned from the fact that his futuristic nightmare won first prize, even though it was hung upside down, and netted him a lot of dough as jigsaw puzzle manufacturers frantically bid for it.

specialty gags accompanying the basic theme. Arriving in Paris with a wad of dough, romance gets under way as Kay moves in to share Tom's room. Getting supper for the pair, first Vergil and then the troupe of Russians move in to share it. Falling out with Kay, Tom falls for the exotic Nada, who proceeds to take him for his roll. Tipsy Vergil becomes embroiled in a squabble with the Russians and this leads to a howling comedy duel. Nada dropping Tom, Kay comes back and the modernistic art exhibit is another riot of laughter that has every one in a turmoil which definitely seals the Kay-Tom romance.

"Girl Without a Room" is of far better than average program classification, yet still is an entire family attraction. There is a novelty about it that lifts the show out of the ordinary comedy romance groove. The romantic vein should prove of strong interest to women, particularly with Farrell and Miss Churchill in the leads. Men should find much to stimulate their interest in the fast moving comedy and Ruggles and Ratoff should be an attraction for both. There's just enough music to inject a tonal color, yet Ruggles' "Paint the Whistle" number suggests some intriguing exploitation.

Novel ballyhoo possibilities of the old-fashioned interest-creating variety are easily adaptable. One on which many others may be hung is a modernistic painting or drawing contest, with exhibits of contestants' efforts constituting an art gallery lobby. The title suggests another that can be adapted to a walking ballyhoo or teaser ads in the classified section.

For regular purposes, the advance campaign should capitalize fully on the cast strength, and get across the comedy color.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Gallant Lady

(UA-20th Century)

Romance and Drama

Here's quality entertainment with class and mass appeal. Besides the asset of prestige building, there is fine and sincere entertainment value. The story is clean and beautiful. Full of those human elements that stir the deepest emotions, often toward tears yet many times to smiles and glowing happiness, yet always tender, sympathetic understanding.

The first and probably the most important feature to realize is that "Gallant Lady" is the kind of Ann Harding picture that everyone has been awaiting since "Holiday." Working easily, naturally, convincingly, all the good qualities and fine artistry that people expect of this star are powerfully revealed. Similarly, and undoubtedly inspired by Miss Harding, others in the cast, particularly Clive Brook, Kruger, Carminati, little Dickie Moore, Janet Beecher and Betty Lawford, contribute artistically skillful performances that cannot help but add to their prestige and to the picture's merit.

Supplementing the personal element, the picture is intelligently produced and directed. Throughout there is ample evidence of careful and thorough preparation. Likewise, it is plain that the producers had made a thoughtful effort to present patrons and exhibitors alike with something really different and pleasing in emotional entertainment.

The story of "Gallant Lady" is an exquisitely woven exemplification of dramatic, romantic realism. It's a story of mother love, of realism and humanness. Her lover dies attempting a trans-oceanic flight. She is befriended by a broken man to whom she confesses the terror that grips her when she thinks of her unborn child. She surrenders her baby, becomes a prosperous interior decorator, with time softening her, but never eradicating memories. She almost lets a man sing his way into her heart, but meets a little boy, whom she recognizes. Audiences will readily understand that he is her child.

She deliberately sets out, without love in her heart for the man, to woo her child's foster-father away from the woman he would marry, the kind who would make his life a bitter Hell. The child loves her, but she permits herself to be cruelly lashed without disclosing her secret. Finally, she will not be denied the real love which comes to her as the boy's foster-father understands.

"Gallant Lady" is such an intelligent presentation of realistic life, its tragedies as well as its joys, all glowing with a warmth of humanity, that it demands and justifies the most intelligent advance campaign of which one is capable. It is the kind of picture that, you can assure your patrons, is deeply emotional but will never fail to hold their interest. It commands a dignified presentation. Sell it as the kind of attraction you are proud to present.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Smoky

(Fox-Stone)

Romantic Drama

Smoky is a horse. The picture is the dramatic, romantic, realistic story of his life from birth to old age, and the part humans played in it. Although it carries a western background, it is definitely not a western picture in the common meaning of that term. It is packed with human interest that stirs sympathetic emotions, making it a natural attraction for horse lovers, yet at the same time it contains the elements in story, action and moral which can be sold to regular theatre-goers as novel entertainment. Important, too, from the exhibitor viewpoint, it is an unusually attractive feature for children.

Early sequences are interpolated by Will James. He picks up Smoky on the range shortly after he is born. During colthood days as part of the wild herd, the mare teaches little Smoky the ways of horselife. Rounded up with the herd, Smoky attracts Clint's attention. The broncho-buster sees his ideal horse. More free years, then the handsome Smoky is roped for breaking. A new type of broncho-busting is demonstrated. Love, kindness, patience, rather than force and cruelty, tame Smoky's wild spirit.

As the romantic interest between Clint and Betty is developed, with comedy relief by Jeff, Smoky is trained to be a cow-pony. Educational as well as interesting, a gigantic cattle round-up is featured, which leads to drama as Smoky is abused by Lefty. To revenge himself for the beating Clint hands him, Lefty steals the horse. For months Clint seeks him all over the western ranges. Smoky, a one-man horse, turns on Lefty when he further abuses him and kills his tormentor. Then he is the wild, unridable Cougar of the famous western rodeos. Outliving his ring usefulness, a broken animal, the horse hits the skids until he winds up on a junk wagon. The tragedy of his life is accentuated as the junkman would sell him to the glue-factory, only to have Jeff recognize him and make it possible for Clint and Betty to rescue him and send him back to a life of heaven on the open range.

Besides its fine, clean novelty, "Smoky" has much to recommend it to theatre-goers and much with which to sell it. The fact that it is a Will James story, that already has sold up in the hundreds of thousand copies, is an asset that should be capitalized. Although humans are of secondary import, cast names, particularly Victor Jory and Irene Bentley, are adequate.

In selling "Smoky," tieups should be sought with schools, humane societies, riding academies, as well as with that great mass of men and women who consider the horse one of man's most faithful and useful servants.

Because the picture is a decidedly different brand of entertainment, yet one in which every standard element is brought to the front and the exciting quality of adventure finely developed, there is ample reason for exhibitors basing the plea for patron interest on a campaign that focusses attention on the difference and merit of the picture.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Son of a Sailor

(First National)

Comedy

Joe E. Brown, the wide-mouthed comic, comes again to the screen, this time as a sailor, a gob of Baron Munchausen proclivities, whose line of chatter, particularly in the feminine direction, lands him in more trouble than he can comfortably handle. He comes out of it in the long run, and manages to supply for audience consumption a goodly number of laughs. He has able support and the opportunities for laugh-generating ballyhoo are easy and open for the exhibitor.

Brown, of course, is the showman's best bet, citing his previous efforts, promising that this one will give them more of the same kind of laughs, in a different setting. With Brown, for name effect, there are Frank McHugh, always amusing; Jean Muir and Thelma Todd, for the feminine touch, and Johnny Mack Brown to complete the incidental romance with Miss Muir.

Brown, known as "Handsome," is perpetually boasting—about anything and everything—and the only one who has complete and abiding faith in him is his satellite, McHugh. He is talked into meeting the fleet champion when the contender is hurt, and when the bugles blow, and the champion stands at attention, Joe knocks him out. Then, ashore, he doesn't do so well with the feminine element, despite his previous descriptions of his prowess, until he is run over by, and therefore meets, the retired admiral's daughter, Miss Muir, fiancee of Chief Petty Officer Mack Brown. When Joe, not knowing who she is, tells her of his personal friendship with the admiral and others of the naval high command, she sees an opportunity for some fun, and drives Joe to her home, a palatial mansion where are visiting all of the officers Joe boasts of knowing so well. She frames it with her father and the others to treat Joe as an old pal, a situation which is conducive to real laughs, particularly at dinner. A spy in the house steals the plans for a robot attachment which will take an unpiloted plane back to its starting point. Brown escapes from the house at the same time, and warned by signals, catches the tail of the plane carrying the spy, and equipped with the device. He knocks out the pilot and the ship goes back to the airplane carrier to which Brown is attached. He drops off in a parachute, lands on an abandoned ship which is a bombing target, and spends a warm few minutes. He gets out finally and is promoted, promising never to tell another lie—until next time.

There are several good sequences aboard the U.S.S. Saratoga, in the air and of fleet material in general. It gives additional opportunity for exploitation. Joe Brown, as a prevaricating gob, who gets in and out of trouble in rapid-fire order and does it all in amusing, Joe E. Brown fashion, should be something worthwhile for the exhibitor. The lobby should not be neglected. None of it is serious, and everyone should be promised a good time.—AARONSON, New York.

The Chief

(MGM)

Comedy

In this production the showman has for sale a good-humored piece that abounds in tieups. Rather than unroarious pealings of loud laughter, the reaction of the matinee audience at the New York Mayfair was a succession of chuckles, with an occasional crescendo. This may serve as a clue to the exhibitor's procedure in his campaign.

The story is negligible, as is to be expected; it might better be described as a peg upon which Ed Wynn hangs the jokes and gags which have made him the radio figure he is. And therein lies the meat of the exploitation effort. It's a ready-made audience to appeal to, but to leave it only to the star's name in marquee lights would be remiss showmanship. There is the radio field immediately available for tieup, as well as the Texaco filling stations, but in addition much could be done with dressing up the lobby into the atmosphere of a broadcasting studio, and in the paper some of his laugh-concoctions could be used to advantage. Just as "the perfect fool" builds up his jokes, carefully and deliberately, so, too, a "teaser ad" drive could be waged on a build-up basis.

Wynn is a clerk in a department store. His employer, "in" with one political group, decides to run Wynn for mayor, as a sort of plastic mayor to be modeled as they wish. Before they can broach the news to him, the rival political leader gets wind of the plan and offers Wynn a job with a whole twelve-piece orchestra under his direction. But he gives that up before starting on it, when he hears of the banquet his original employer has in store for him, to announce the candidacy. When the rival's gang breaks up the party, Wynn chooses not to run. And so it goes.

Three situations stand out. When a fountain statue in honor of his fire-fighting father is unveiled, Wynn's enthusiastic tug tears off a gadget and drenches the crowd. In a fire scene he becomes a hero by mistake after stumbling over a smoke-unconscious woman. A beer keg hurtling down the stairs from the floor above catapults the pair into a fire net. Another laugh situation, familiar though it may be, follows the kidnaping of his mother. Her biscuits transform the pug-uglies into cherubims.

While much of the picture depends upon dialogue, there are several lines of action that make it an all-family production. Besides those mentioned there is fun for the youngsters in Wynn's tussle with a wrestling bear. From the juvenile attendance standpoint it can be set in for the weekend. The names "Chic" Sale and Dorothy Mackail are marquee material in addition to Ed Wynn.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Hoopla

(Fox-Al Rockett)

Drama

"The Barker," a play by John Kenyon Nicholson, which was made first as a silent, with sound effects, starring Milton Sills, Dorothy Mackaill and Betty Compton, comes again in a talking version, with the long absent Clara Bow in the second appearance since her recent return to the screen, supported by Preston Foster and Richard Cromwell.

In the rather torrid role of the hooch dancer with the traveling carnival, Miss Bow gives a more than occasional exhibition of the maneuvering of the human form which may possibly be the source of a problem for the exhibitor in certain communities. Her costume in these sequences is considerably a minus quantity. Her performance on the whole is a definite production value.

Preston Foster plays the barker and manager of the show, Cromwell is Foster's son and Minna Gombell is the other dancer and mistress of Foster. James Gleason and Herbert Mundin lend a note of comedy in minor roles. As for Miss Bow, her name is to be blazoned across the canopy as the star in the new adaptation of "The Barker," which should be remembered by many.

There is good drama in the story, and much is made of it. The carnival atmosphere which dominates the film should offer plenty of opportunity for ballyhoo in the lobby and on the street, while the story should present angles for newspaper copy.

When young Cromwell arrives unexpectedly at the carnival, Foster permits him to stay against his better judgment. When the jealous Miss Gombell gets the boy drunk, he throws her over. To take revenge, she conspires with Miss Bow to capture the affections of the youngster. Miss Bow sets her trap, the boy falls, but Miss Bow falls as well. The two run away and are married, and a stormy scene follows when they break the news to Foster. They leave the show, go to Chicago, and the story jumps two years. Miss Bow is dancing on the World's Fair Midway, Gleason her manager, while she supports herself and Cromwell as he studies law. Foster comes on the scene, is engaged by Gleason, not knowing for whom he is "spieling." Miss Bow had arranged that he get the job. He walks out after Miss Bow has told him she is doing for his son what he never did, and Cromwell walks in to defend her. Hearing Gleason in ineffectual attempts to "sell" Miss Bow's act to the crowd, Foster steps in, does the job in his old style, with the anticipated reconciliation.

It is a film which should lend itself to ballyhoo and active selling, with the addition of the promise of Clara Bow as the straight-shooting dancer of the carnival, who falls into her own trap and cannot—and finally does not want to—get out of it. Too much emphasis should not be placed on Miss Bow as the hooch dancer, in situations where that might be a source of objection from certain groups.—AARONSON, New York.

Gow

(Film Exchange)

Head-Hunters

Polynesians and Melanesians scowl and dance their way through this South Sea production, photographed and produced by Captain E. A. Salisbury. First are shown the natives of the Marquesas Islands, the Society Islands and Samoa. The drama motivation comes with the arrival of the expedition in the land of the head-hunters and cannibals of the Fiji Islands and New Guinea. A raid on another island tribe is re-enacted, the objective the recapture of the daughter of Gow, whence the name given to the picture. There is much flying of spears, then the triumphant return, with first a dance, at long distance, around the heap of heads.

The exhibitor will do well to see the picture in advance. One savage dance sequence, with the familiar build-up of "stopped here by censors" or the like—and there is no reason for questioning the authenticity of that statement—presents by inference a repulsive situation which calls for a display of exhibitor judgment.

More attention has been given to action than to scenic depiction. As a consequence, native life and activities carry through the picture. It is essentially adult fare.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Produced by Captain E. A. Salisbury. Distributed by Film Exchange throughout U. S. except on West Coast. Narration by William Peck. Release date, November 29, 1933. Running time, 65 minutes. All native cast.

Advice to the Lovelorn

(UA-20th Century)

Comedy-Melodrama

There's plenty of novel and fast moving entertainment in this picture, and lots of inherent showmanship material with which to sell it. It is timely, too, in the subject of which it treats, as well as being a topical follow-up of Lee Tracy's recent headline publicity. Fundamentally, it's broad topical comedy is given a satirical twist. While kidding California's glorious climate, newspaper love-and-sentiment columns, it carries an exciting, romantic story, takes a dip into two kinds of racketeering and finally turns melodramatic.

Typical of Tracy pictures, it's speedy, dialogue is punchy and to the point; action is hectic, combining to put the star on any number of hot spots. Build-up is such that there is always an atmosphere of anything-might-happen, and lots that won't be anticipated does.

An earthquake busting up a Chamber of Commerce broadcast of California's climate, as compared to cyclones, heat waves, blizzards and hurricanes, brings the blanket-clad reporter, Toby, into the picture as eastern papers shout catastrophe and Los Angeles gives the temblor only a meager "stick." Rewarded for his bad-boy antics, Toby is given a column of his own, which to his chagrin turns out to be the Advice to Lovelorn stint. Aided by his stooge, Benny, there is high comedy as Toby figures that dynamiting the heartsick mendicants will cause him to lose his job. His satirical comments backfire, increase circulation sensationally and make the column a syndicate feature. His girl, Louise, wants him to quit the screwy business and take a job in her father's garage. Toby makes all sorts of excuses to hold onto the big-paying job, which he rackets by making a deal to boost the Kranz cut-rate drug stores. Here the picture veers to melodrama as Toby's mother is suddenly stricken and the boy has a prescription filled at Kranz's that kills rather than cures. Bitter when he understands that Kranz is a label-faker, he uses his column to blast the villain's business. Trapped by gunmen, he senses the ruse as he poses to write a retraction, which really is a message to his stooge to fetch the cops. Feds bust in first and arrest Kranz for income tax dodging, and the cops, arriving late, mistake Toby for someone else and merrily beat him up to permit a laugh-jammed fadeout.

Because of the topic on which the show is based and its exciting newspaper background, it's wide open for smash interest-creating ballyhoo. Progressive showmen, who like to do their own selling, will find endless trick gag possibilities in the advice to lovelorn idea that runs all the way from intriguing teasers, direct mail campaigns, street stunts and novel ad copy to direct tieup with newspapers. References to Tracy's recent Mexican experiences should be handled with care because of conflicting opinions.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Drama

The Jack Holt audience, which is probably considerable, here has an opportunity to see him as a tough steel mill foreman and as a big business man. Holt gives another of his strong performances of the virile, he-man type, giving the exhibitor an opportunity, especially where Holt has a definite popularity, to offer the star in an entertaining picture.

The small supporting cast includes Fay Wray, Theodore Von Eltz, Berton Churchill and Walter Connolly, with Connolly worthy of special attention by reason of the excellence and appeal of his characterization.

A strong selling point is the theme, revolving about the poker game which is Wall Street, with steel and steel mills as the chips, with cleverness pitted against cleverness, and the manner in which Holt won and lost simultaneously and later lost and won in reverse fashion. Winning in the market at big operations, he lost romance and his wife's faith; losing in the crash of 1929, he eventually won back that faith and romance. Catchlines of that nature should be valuable.

Holt, foreman of the furnace gang, saves Miss Wray during a visit to the mill with her father, Churchill, president of the company, Von Eltz, general manager, and Connolly, elderly friend of Churchill and large stockholder in the company. Holt leads a gang of men to the mansion of Churchill, where a party is in progress, and demands better working conditions. They are finally granted, and Holt is made personnel manager. Miss Wray takes an interest in him, despite her father's objections. Holt uncovers a crooked operation of Von Eltz, and when he discovers Von Eltz has persuaded Churchill to play Wall Street to force Connolly out, Holt goes to New York, and Connolly crosses Von Eltz by buying control of the mill, naming Holt president. Miss Wray at first refuses to see him, but through Connolly's intervention the two are married. In New York, a big business man and playing the Street, Holt pyramids with mergers and consolidations, despite Connolly's warning, even closing the home mill. Connolly steps out, the crash comes, and Holt's wife arranges that he should lose everything. Returning to the home town, he is about to be mobbed by disgruntled workmen, when Connolly again saves the day, announces the reopening of the mill with Holt in charge, and brings about a reconciliation between Holt and Miss Wray.

The marital difficulties as a result of Holt's Wall Street recklessness, the wife's deliberate attempt to ruin him financially to bring him to his senses, and the large scale Wall Street poker game of big money and bigger operation, present numerous selling elements for the exhibitor. It is an adult attraction.—Aaronson, New York.

The House on 56th Street

(Warner)

Drama

A combination of rather melodramatic drama which characterizes the later portions of the film, and late nineteenth century charm of setting, dress and manner in the earlier sequences, should be conducive in this film, to attractive selling, to audiences of almost any type in any community. The fact that the second half of the story revolves about the activities of two big-time gamblers should not bring objections, since the gamblers come out at the short end, and there is something of a lesson involved for those who care to look for it.

The cast is good, and strong for the marquee. Kay Francis has the top spot, aided by Gene Raymond, Ricardo Cortez, John Halliday, Margaret Lindsay. Miss Francis wears clothes to excite the interest of the feminine patronage, a fact which should not be overlooked by the showman. In addition, the styles and manner of the past century offer an opportunity to bring out considerable attention-attracting exploitation, in lobby and in tieups with women's clothing shops. The film covers a period of some 25 years.

Miss Francis is a chorus girl of 1903, pursued avidly by elderly, wealthy bachelor Halliday, and young, handsome and equally wealthy Raymond. She chooses Raymond, they are married, and go to live in a private home on 56th Street, New York. When they enter she says she never will leave the house. When a child is born, Raymond's straight-laced mother accepts her. They are completely happy, until Halliday, with a short time to live, asks her to visit him. She goes, and when she refuses to go away with him, a gun-struggle ends in his death, and her sentence to 20 years in prison. During her incarceration, her husband is killed in the War. Her release comes in 1925, and she is warned never to reveal her relationship with her child.

On board ship she meets smooth gambler Cortez, and she, with the inheritance of a gambling father and grandfather, pairs up with him. They reach a pinnacle as gamblers at a newly opened speakeasy and gambling house, which turns out to be her former home on 56th street. The daughter, with the same instinct, comes in, and her mother teaches her a lesson. Fearing her husband will divorce her if he finds out, she kills Cortez at the house next day when he asks for the money. Miss Francis tells the house owner she did it, the girl makes good her escape, and Miss Francis is bound to remain in the house, a valuable asset, while Cortez is disposed of with no one the wiser.

The old, but always appealing mother-love theme, then, is the dominant factor in the story, and should be treated as such in the selling. That, combined with the lesson the mother gives her daughter of the danger of gambling, then taking the blame for a crime the girl committed, should strengthen that theme for the exhibitor. The combination of the 90's and the modern day, the central theme and the cast give the showman an ample opportunity for lively selling. It is adult material.—Aaronson, New York.

Good

One of the Romantic Journeys series in color produced by Howard Brown for Educational release, this subject combines the general appeal and interest inherent in the pictured activities of a little known people with unusual scenic beauty, enhanced by the use of color. Claude Fleming introduces the trip to Hawaii and is the subject's narrator. The inevitable hula girls have their moment before the camera, and the natives are seen capturing in huge nets beautifully colored tropical fish, designed for the Hawaiian palate, but running from anything up in the tropical fish store of the United States. An interesting subject.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Not the Marrying Kind

Weak

Sterling Holloway, whining-voiced comedian of the long hair, angular appearance and hand-wringing type, who has been occasionally amusing in bit parts, is, as the lead in two reels of comedy, apt to become definitely tiresome. Here, as the roommate of Eddie Nugent, hardly an actor, Holloway is prevailed upon to take Marion Shilling to a hotel, call a justice of the peace, and await the arrival of Nugent, who is to marry her. When the two learn that her parents are registered on the same floor, things begin to happen, with the wilting Holloway in difficulties. When he gets clear of the parents, he runs into trouble with the chambermaid. It has its moments as a comedy, but not many.—Running time, 20 minutes.

A Day in Tokyo

Interesting

In the camera's revelation of the strangely entertaining combination of Occidental and Oriental which is Japan's greatest city, this number of the Magic Carpet of Movietone series should be generally appealing. The camera work is of unusual quality, the inclusion of a small amount of crucial dialogue enhances interest, and the subject matter gives every evidence of careful selection, looking to greatest representation. Night scenes are effective as well. Entertaining is the closing sequence within a Tokyo theatre, the play an ancient historical piece. An interesting subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

INFRA-RED PROCESS INTRIGUES BRITISH

See Special Value in Night Photography; Deal Gives Gaumont-British Product Wide Outlet in South Africa

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

New possibilities in the art of the motion picture camera are foreshadowed in the latest development of the infra-red photographic process, as indicated in a demonstration recently given in London. The demonstration comprised the shooting in almost complete darkness of a short picture, which was projected again about two hours later to show that the film had the same clarity of definition and detail that one expects to find in productions shot under normal studio conditions.

The demonstration was given at a meeting of the British Kinematograph Society (which corresponds here to your Society of Motion Picture Engineers) and, although the veriest child where technical matters are concerned, I was intensely interested in the possibilities envisaged by the lecturer, Dr. Olaf Bloch, head chemist at one of our principal photographic works, a leading figure of the Royal Photographic Society, and foremost exponent in Britain of the infra-red principle. So far as the actual motion picture was concerned, the demonstration left no doubt that the photographic results of shots taken with the invisible infra-red ray as the only means of illumination are comparable with those obtained in the studio with the assistance of batteries of powerful inkies, pickels, scoops and whatnot.

For Night Photography

Value of the process for night photography is one of its most apparent features. As an instance, Dr. Bloch mentioned the filming of habits of night animals in their natural surroundings, without the beasts being wise to the manner in which their privacy is being invaded. Looks like none of us will be safe even in the dark from now on!

Another advantage indicated by the lecturer through another strip of film was the possibility of filming supposed night shots in broad daylight. Combination of infra-red sensitive stock with certain lenses will provide, from a shot taken in normal light, the simulation of a night scene more nearly approaching the real thing than existing studio methods, he pointed out.

A further aspect of the process cited is that it should lead to effective economies in the studio, where lighting now is one of the major costs. It is not intended to suggest that the infra-red process will eliminate existing studio methods—the process has its own peculiarities which render it unsuitable in many circumstances—but it is definitely to be a valuable aid to the producer in opening up to him a hitherto undreamed-of range of effects.

It is in the widening of the scope of the camera that the greatest value of the infra-red principle is expected. By piercing fog and weather haze, for instance, it overcomes a handicap of exterior photography (one which our producers here are more concerned with than their Hollywood contemporaries, no doubt) and by penetrating the human skin or other supposedly opaque materials it adds to the cameraman's battery of trick effects.

Outside motion pictures, infra-red photography has unlimited commercial possibilities. Many of you may have seen examples of still camera shots taken through the process, some of them bringing clearly into view objects several hundred miles distant from the lens! As far as motion pictures are concerned, we have still far to go before the full extent of the working value of the process is achieved. But it certainly opens an exceptionally interesting outlook.

British International Pictures shareholders have accepted a plan to retitle the company Associated British Picture Corporation. John Maxwell told them the original name—British International—will be retained in a new subsidiary formed specifically to operate the studios at Elstree.

New Color Processes

The trade is hearing quite a bit these days about color. Two processes have been tried out lately, one under title of "Omnicolor," the other called "Cinecolor."

"Cinecolor," which I saw demonstrated, is an additive process, the color being built up from black and white stock by a system of lenses. Cost of equipping cameras with the necessary optical apparatus is between £200 and £300, and the projector lenses are valued at around £20. Developing and raw stock are exactly the same as for monochrome work, and it is claimed that the system could be worked profitably on a royalty of about half a cent a foot.

One pronounced advantage cited is that "fringing" (the rainbow effect round the edges of moving images) is definitely eliminated.

The colors obtainable, the demonstration indicated, are still of the glaring variety so commonly encountered, and, with minor exceptions, cannot be called "natural." A brown cow in a blue field is all right—but only as far as the cow is concerned!

Definition is not particularly good, I found, and the loss of light is very appreciable. In spite of horn-rims, I felt eye-strain after about 20 minutes.

The production side of the business is proceeding slowly as to adoption of any of the recent systems. Gaumont-British certainly have "Chu Chin Chow," a famous spectacular wartime show, down as a possible color subject, but they won't make it as such unless they are positively satisfied they have found a first-class system.

It is to be recalled that Simon Rowson, president of the British Kinematograph Society, prophesied recently that color would be an accomplished fact in about three years.

THE STORY OF AN EXHIBITOR WHO WROTE HIS OWN ADVERTISEMENT!

"I had 'Prizefighter and the Lady' booked to follow its engagement in a neighboring city . . .

"I drove over there and previewed the picture . . .

"And found it one of the swellest entertainments of the season . . .

"So I gave it plenty of thought . . .

"And I hit on this way of advertising it . . .

"I got excellent results and I suggest that other exhibitors try it!"

"After personally previewing this picture I hasten to advise the patrons of the Odeon Theatre that one of the season's grandest entertainments has come. I heartily recommend it as a glorious romance, packed with laughs and thrills . . . PLUS THE NEW SURPRISE STAR!"

CONVENTION FORUMS ON ADVERTISING URGED

Jack Cohn, Declaring Increased Earnings of Industry Depend on Small Town, Proposes Schools for Showmanship

Education of exhibitors to a better understanding and appreciation of the practical benefits of proper advertising, publicity and exploitation of motion pictures was suggested this week by Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures, one means to be a national and thoroughly organized school of showmanship to be conducted as a part of all state and national exhibitor conventions.

Future development of the industry through increased earnings lies entirely with the small town, the Columbia executive said, in analyzing latest returns of the company's survey of the effects of Sunday closing laws. Results of the first half of the returns, reviewed in Motion Picture Herald issue of November 25, indicated that at least 14 per cent additional business awaits the lifting of that handicap, and increased employment as well.

Many exhibitors in thinly populated territories operate theatres incidental to some other business activity, and it is Mr. Cohn's belief that proper attention would in most instances develop the theatre into the principal source of revenue. Proper advertising and publicity could be responsible in a large measure for a change in the complexion of things in any number of these situations where almost nothing is done to attract business, he said.

"The remedy is at hand through making use of the various conventions held within the industry," said Mr. Cohn. "I attended a national advertising convention last year and was amazed by the educational advantage it embraced through the free interchange of ideas. A Newark man recited an experience culminating in the solution of a problem equally applicable to St. Louis, Omaha, Minneapolis or St. Paul.

On the other hand, Mr. Cohn pointed out, exhibitor conventions are too largely monopolized by recitals of "hard luck" stories, real or imaginary.

"Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt was quoted in the trade press of November 23 as telling of an exhibitor who argued that something should be done about producers who had the nerve to charge as much as $3.50 rental for a feature. If instead of wasting time on that sort of 'piffle,' the principles observed by other industries were followed at conventions in this industry, they could be made forums or schools of incalculable value.

"Merchants, confronted by greater overhead and keener competition, are meeting the situation by substituting real salesmen for mere order-takers, and are manifesting a greater aggressiveness in advertising and pushing their wares.

"The same methods are necessary in the motion picture industry," Mr. Cohn said. "Instead of expecting the exhibitor to become familiar with them, or leaving him dependent upon press books, a school of showmanship should be developed to help exhibitors solve their problems and direct their efforts toward interchange of experience and ideas."

One of Mr. Cohn's recommendations is the sending of home office men to conventions for this express purpose. Heads of advertising, publicity and exploitation departments should address the conventions on advertising methods, talk with the exhibitors and counsel and advise them on the most effective use of material prepared for their assistance, he added.

"A natural development would be the education of the small town exhibitor to prepare his own advertising and publicity copy in order that he may take care of purely local exhibition problems as they arise," declared the Columbia executive. "Being on the ground, so to speak, the exhibitor may capitalize any number of local conditions and developments if given the preparation possible in the course of a trade convention."

Emanuel Presents Plan of National Exhibitor Group

The formation of a new national exhibitor organization, to supersede all present bodies, and to be known as the American Exhibitors' Congress, has been advocated by Jay Emanuel, Philadelphia exhibitor and publisher of three regional trade publications.

Advocated in Mr. Emanuel's plan is a local organization to be located in each exchange center, with a paid secretary devoting full time to his duties. The president and secretary of the national organization also would be paid and devote all their time to the organization. Mr. Emanuel recently resigned as treasurer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, a position he had held for many years. He operates several theatres in the Philadelphia zone.

All present groups, Allied, MPTOA and unaffiliated, would be included in the American Exhibitors' Congress, according to Mr. Emanuel's plan. Theatres would pay dues to the organization on the basis of seats or film rentals. Legislative problems would be met by the local organizations, with adequate representation for each state, where a division comprises more than one state. The national body would be composed of representatives from each local unit. National meetings would be held semi-annually or more often if it were necessary, according to the Emanuel plan. Mr. Emanuel suggests that the NRA would in all probability encourage such a body as he proposes.

Detroit Showmen Form Organization

Charles Komer, of the Redford and Whittier theatres, was elected president of the Independent Theatre Owners of Detroit, a new local exhibitor body, formed at a meeting in Detroit last week. For the present at least the organization will not affiliate with the MPTOA.

In addition to Mr. Komer, the board of directors includes: William Schulte, John O'Dell, Joseph Portell and Al Ruttenberg, exhibitors, and Adrian D. Rosen, attorney representing Mr. Ruttenberg, Mr. O'Dell and Lew Kane of the Mayfair theatre in suits against Mid-States Theatres, local booking combine, charged with conspiracy in restraint of trade.

The purposes of the new organization are to improve playing policy, to raise prices wherever possible, to cooperate with the government in administration of the code, to protect members against discriminatory taxes and legislation and to cooperate with various women's organizations for cleaner films. Meetings will be held bi-monthly, with additional officers to be elected at the next session. The organization plans to open an office in the Film Exchange building.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 201.—(A) Upon what various factors depends the amount of bending that light rays receive when passing from air to glass, or vice versa? (B) Explain just why ray C in accompanying diagram is not bent at all and what loss, if any, it incurs in passing through the lens; why ray A is bent more than ray B; why there will be greater loss in ray C than in rays B and A, and what may serve to alter the loss incident to the passage of all three rays. (C) For all practical purposes what may the projectionist assume the amount of bending, or refraction, on which light rays passing through a lens will depend.

Tyler; J. B. Buckley; M. R. Davidson and R. Schuler; D. Little and J. H. Rathburn; H. Grant; D. L. Sinklow; P. Felt; K. Ormie; F. B. Tomlinson.

Section A was well answered by so many that rather than single anyone out as best, I will print an answer constructed from several, as follows:

"Insulation as applies to electricity serves to confine electric energy to its proper station or path of action. It is used in condensers to build up reserve force which may be utilized in any one of several ways. It is used in electric circuits to prevent current from escaping to opposite polarity of the same generator (mechanical or chemical) except through its appointed path."

(B) Some I have passed as correct nevertheless did not do so well on this one. I think they perhaps did not really try very hard. Possibly they should not really have been passed, but since they did well on the others I let them crawl under the gate. J. Wentworth did as well as any one; perhaps a bit better. He says:

"(1) Rubber. (2) Mica. (3) Slate. (4) Marble and stone of various sorts. (5) Asbestos. (6) Paper. (7) Oil. (8) Impregnated fabric. (9) Air. (10) Enamel. (11) Glass. (12) Silk. (13) Shellac. (14) Porcelain. (15) Dry asbestos mill board. (16) China. (17) Paraffin. (18) Dry wood. (19) Gutta Percha. (20) Ebonite. (21) Bakelite. (22) And many secret compositions the exact nature of which is a trade secret. As a matter of fact there are almost numberless things that may be used for insulation, but after all first we must have a definition of exactly what is meant by 'insulation.' That which would thoroughly insulate a one-volt e.m.f., would have little or no value in the insulation of a 110-volt circuit. I have only named those—and not all of them—that may be used on ordinary commercial line voltages, not exceeding 110."

Excellent, Brother Wentworth, except that under that classification I believe silk might well have been omitted. It could of course be used if heavy enough, but actually is only employed alone to cover some such substance as rubber. It can be and is used alone for low battery currents. I must compliment Danielson, G. E. Doe, Goldberg and Hutch, K. Wells, T. Van Vaulkenburg and Tomlinson and Lathrope on the completeness of their tabulation.

(C) G. E. Doe says: "There is, I believe, no such substance. Given sufficiently high voltage current will be forced through anything, witness lightning passing through perhaps a mile of insulating air. In commercial electrics, substances having high insulation properties have been piled one upon another until sufficient voltage has been confined to produce artificial lightning—a million or more volts, I understand. Who then shall presume to say what might be done?

"Coming down to real commercial electrics, however, there certainly are many substances which are to all intents and purposes non-conductors in the sense that current of commercial e.m.f. will not pass through them."

Excellent, Friend Doe. It is about as I would have answered the question. Whether we could truly declare any known substance is a complete non-conductor, no man can say. Presumably not if the voltage be built up sufficiently high. However, for anything used commercially, say, up to 40,000 volts, there are substances that will not conduct.

(E) W. Ostrum says: "R. C. wires are rated at less carrying capacity than those having fireproof insulation because rubber is much more easily and quickly injured by heat than is the fireproof insulation, and since heat is generated by the current overcoming the resistance of the wire, a wider safety margin is necessary."

Roach Celebrates 20 Years As a Producer of Comedies

Hal Roach celebrated his 20th anniversary as a producer of comedies Thursday at the Roach studios in Hollywood at a dinner dance. All of the old-time comedians who served under the Roach banner were guests. Among those present were Will Rogers, Bebe Daniels, Harold Lloyd, Lionel Barrymore, Lupe Velez, Fay Wray, Theda Bara and Janet Gaynor. Mr. Lloyd was chairman of the arrangements committee.

Hal Roach's picture career started with Universal as a stock cowboy at $25 a week. There he met Harold Lloyd and they raised enough money to make a picture which sold for $850. Mr. Roach's studio activities began at Glendale, after which he went to Santa Monica Boulevard, where the "Lonesome Luke" comedies were made. His present quarters are at Culver City, where a big plant was built in 1919. Hal Roach productions now are released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Berry Resigns; Plans Circuit

Ace Berry, one of the Middlewest's best known theatre men, resigned Tuesday as general manager of the Circle and Indiana theatres in Indianapolis. These two houses are Monarch circuit's two local first runs.

Mr. Berry will form a local group which plans to acquire its own theatres. He will be succeeded at the two Monarch theatres by I. M. Halperin, formerly with Publix in Detroit.

THE WEEK ON WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Now that the industry is under the motion picture code signed by the President last week, local interest is centered on announcement of the personnel of the local grievance and zoning and clearance boards. These boards are scheduled to be functioning by January 1. In the meantime the local film board, of which Henry Herbel is president, is proceeding with weekly meetings.

Walter Branson's optimism over "Little Women" seems to have been justified. The film portrayal of Louisa Alcott's story broke all attendance records at the Palace opening day, playing to 11,000 admissions.

Several members have dragged James Petrillo and the Chicago Musicians' union into court, asking for an accounting of funds and seeking to throw the union into the hands of receivers.

Neil Agnew of Paramount was in town last week to hold a meeting with the staff of the local exchange. Agnew is making an extended sales trip through the Middlewest.

Leonard Grossman is now manager of the Royale and Paulina theatres for Abe Gumbiner.

Walter Greene, president of National Theatre Supply Company, visited the local branch last week and reported that the company has enjoyed good business during the past several months. He looks for a decided improvement after the first of the year.

Judge Denies Injunction In Chicago Union Suit

The temporary injunction sought by Frank Ririzzo and Nicholas Belcaster against James Petrillo, head of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, was denied Tuesday in Chicago by Master in Chancery Julius Miner as voting for the presidency of the musicians' organization got under way.

In applying for the injunction Ririzzo and Belcaster asked for an accounting of funds and receivership on the charge that Mr. Petrillo used $100,000 of union funds as ransom for his release from kidnapers in June. Mr. Petrillo declared the action was a move to embarrass him and prevent his re-election.

Toronto Owner Assaulted

Following an assault on Abe Lester, owner of the King theatre in Toronto, police there have arrested Louis Joseph and Harry Sloan, Detroit, and John Voxivinsky, alleged attackers, and Irving Field, proprietor of the Duchess theatre, charged with hiring the three men. Mr. Lester, who has operated theatres in the Canadian territory for 21 years, was knocked unconscious and required medical attention.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

From away up in Duluth, Minn., comes a letter from our good friend, G. S. Richards, manager of the National Equipment Company, in which he says, among other things, "We can tell you where you got that eye trouble. You were doing a great act in trying to drive some of the dirt out of pictures and got hit with it. Keep up the good work by remote control."

Yeah, but suppose we'd get hit in the other eye, G. S., then what? We thank you for your letter, oldtimer; it was mighty nice of you to remember us in that way.

Duluth, as you folks no doubt know, is situated at the west end of Lake Superior away up north where they have six months winter and three months late in the fall, but the balance of the year is delightful.

Mr. Richards enclosed with his letter a little booklet descriptive of the country and setting forth the beauties of the Arrowhead Country as a summer resort, but the booklet don't tell the half of it. It would take several volumes.

Nature in the Raw

If you want to spend an enjoyable summer vacation and see "Nature in the Raw," go to Duluth and drive up the north shore of Lake Superior to Pt. William and Pt. Arthur, Canada. Then when you come back cut across from Grand Marais through the national forest and game preserve to Ely. Then go from Ely west to Virginia and Hibbing and drive along the Mesaba range and you will see the biggest hole in the ground you ever saw. This hole is some 20 or 30 miles long and from a half to a mile wide and so deep that an ore train at the bottom of it looks like a tiny beetle crawling along. This is where the iron ore comes from that goes to the mills at Gary, Buffalo and other eastern points, and you have ridden over many a rail and over many a steel bridge that originally came from this hole in the ground. When you get to Hibbing stop and see the finest high school building in the world, said to have cost close to $4,000,000.

If you want to fish, just stop at any one of the hundreds of lakes anywhere in northern Minnesota and drop in your hook and pull out a black bass, a northern pike, a walleye, or a "musky," for they will be lying there waiting for you, and they are always hungry. Mr. Richards' booklet doesn't start to tell of the beauties of northern Minnesota and the pleasure you can have there on a summer vacation, and besides that, you can pick huckleberries anywhere, if it is in huckleberry season.

An Open Letter to the Radio Announcer for the P.X.Q. Breakfast Food

Dear Sir: Contrary to our wishes, we have been forced to listen to your announcements extolling the excellent qualities of your food as a builder of bone and muscle, and if you want a testimonial we would advise you to write Grandma Sykes at 621 West Melrose drive, this city.

Grandma has been sick and has been failing for six weeks and the doctors had given her up. She hasn't been able to keep anything on her stomach but a hot water bottle and a grudge at the hired girl, but Grandpa, hearing your announcement, went down and bought a package of your food and fed her a dish of it, and inside of 15 minutes she jumped out of bed, grabbed a rolling pin and smashed out every window light in the house before they could get her stopped, and yesterday she declared her intention of running for Congress on the Women's Emancipation ticket.

You might also write Mrs. Ferguson at 342 Riverside Park boulevard for her testimonial. As soon as she heard of the bone and muscle building qualities of your food she gave her one-week-old baby a spoonful of it and as soon as those vitamines got to working the kid reared up in bed and doubled up his little fist and smacked his mother in the mouth and knocked out two of her front teeth.

We haven't dared to try your food ourself because our blood pressure is too high now. The crooner on your program has caused quite a commotion in this town, for every time he starts crooning his love songs several girls have swooned and have had to be carried out into the fresh air, but don't let a little thing like that keep you off the air. We must have your program. Very truly yours.

From Mrs. Velva Otts at Royce City, Texas, comes a letter to our daughter, Marjorie, advising her to feed us castor oil to relieve our condition. Now, isn't that a nice way to treat a perfectly good friend? Shame on you, Velva! We wouldn't have believed it of you, but then you never can tell what those Longhorns will do, but—

Everything's fine down in Texas
From Brownsville clear up to Colexus.
The Longhorns are putting on fat in the pens.
The roosters are in soft with the Plymouth Rock hens.
And the girls have shed theirs and are now wearing men's,
So everything's Jake down in Texas.

Latchstring Out, Says Martin

From Nevada, Iowa, comes a letter from Lester F. Martin, secretary-treasurer of the exhibitors' organization, in which he says: "Quit counting those daisies on the wall and hurry up and get well. I have never had the pleasure of meeting you, Old Timer, but I send my best wishes for a speedy recovery and want you to know that the doors will swing wide open to you at any meeting." Thanks, Mr. Martin, for your very welcome letter; it is highly appreciated.

There is one thing we have to be thankful for, anyhow: we are rid of our hay fever. And now, if some one will send us a cure for a spavin on our left leg and a ringbone on our right we might come out all right.

That Grasshopper Sprague

We ought to be in Hollywood right now to chaperone E. E. Sprague. Sprague used to own the Sherman theatre at Goodland, Kan., but he sold it about three years ago and has been galavanting around the country ever since. He is now in Hollywood for the winter and he writes us that he attended a night club recently where there were a number of celebrities "in various stages of intoxication" and after they began draping themselves around the bar and started singing "Sweet Adeline" and "Let Me Call You Sweetheart" the party began to get good.

He also says he sat close to Mae West at a boxing match and—well, we can't tell you the rest of it, but from what he says it is further proof that these old bachelors always fall at some time in their lives; they can't always dodge 'em. We chaperoned him when we were there two years ago and we shudder to think of what may happen to him now.

We hope that in his interview with the President at Warm Springs, Eddie Cantor got the motion picture code fixed up all right, but as we see it from out here in the sage brush, it would have been better had the President called in those who put their money into the business rather than one who pulls it out.

We note by a press dispatch that out close to Hollywood a nudist colony staged a wedding and all that the company and the bride and groom wore was a California sun tan. That might go in California, but it wouldn't go in Mexico. If you think so, ask Lee Tracy.

ALL HAVE PROBLEMS, DECLARES WILLIAMS

There's a philosophy of cooperation as well as a suggestion or two as to contents of reports on "What the Picture Did for Me" in the following communication from M. R. Williams of the Texon theatre, at Texon, Texas:

"I believe the sentiments expressed by Mr. Russell C. Day, in the issue of October 28th, are endorsed by every small exhibitor who is fortunate enough to be a subscriber to your valued publication. Certainly I should be lost without this column.

"I feel very much obligated to those exhibitors who so regularly contribute their opinions and criticisms, and must confess that I have been delinquent in doing my part towards making this column what it ought to be—a feature instead of a 'short'.

"My only suggestion is that any unnecessary 'wisecracks' be eliminated as far as possible, and that criticism or praise for any particular distributor, their policy, etc., be restricted, keeping in mind that we all have our problems, exhibitor and distributor, and we cannot make any progress in solving them in this column, but through our organization."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Chesterfield

BY APPOINTMENT ONLY: Lew Cody, Aileen Pringle—Fine program picture.—J. M. Anderson, Princess Theatre, Boone, Iowa. General patronage.

NOTORIOUS BUT NICE: Marian Marsh, Betty Compson—Fine program picture.—J. M. Anderson, Princess Theatre, Boone, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William, May Robson—A natural. Good enough for any type audience from standpoint of cast, acting, recording, photography and everything. Competition from tent show hurt business. Wish everyone could see this one. Played Nov. 20-21.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

MY WOMAN: Wallace Ford, Helen Twelvetrees—A nice program picture. Special honors to Ford who handled a hard part exceptionally well. Business fair. Played Nov. 8-9.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Anita Page, Regis Toomey—This is a very good picture of the action type. It has lively action and is more suitable for the small towns. The backbone of the story is the mixture of flying, fighting, bootlegging and romance. This is good entertainment for the whole family, especially for the kiddies. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Nov. 18.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

First National

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthlemess—This antique failed to stand up.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Id. General patronage.

GOODBYE AGAIN: Warren Williams, Joan Blondell—A funny farce. A lot of good actors at their best. Thin story but the actors worked it up to a good entertainment, and gave general satisfaction as a program picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Fox

BERKELEY SQUARE: Leslie Howard—Those exhibitors that thought "Cavalcade" was a pain in the neck, should see "Berkeley Square." Did not even gross film rental and plenty of walk-outs. Would have paid and not played had we screened this before showing to our patrons. No action but a lot of English dialect. When, oh when, will Jesse Lasky give us pictures that will appeal to the masses instead of to just a few critics. Another one that Liberty gave four stars. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Nov. 22-23.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

DR. BULL: Will Rogers—Will Rogers gives his usual very satisfactory performance. Business 50% better than average. The injection of Andy Devine with his husky voice and his "Boob" type of comedy detracts from the picture. Not as good as "State Fair" but how many are. Played Nov. 19-20.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Tex. Ranch and oil field patronage.

MY LIPS BETRAY: Lilian Harvey, John Boles—There is light entertainment. Miss Harvey can sing and does. Mr. Boles also sings one song. Mr. Boles is quite a favorite here and they are always disappointed when he fails to sing. Give Miss Harvey the part and she will be one of the biggest stars in the business. I don't see why they use this Herman Bing. You can never hear what he says. In this picture the background music was too loud. Could not hear what was said many times. Played Nov. 19-20.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

OLSEN'S BIG MOMENT: El Brendel—A very good comedy feature that is full of laughs and will entertain. Did outstanding business on this. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Nov. 16-17-18.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Henrietta Crosman, Norman Foster—After reading the comments of two exhibitors, I watched with fear during the first reels of the picture. However, after the third reel I knew this feature was pleasing my audience. Crosman is a great actress. Had the part where Marian had to tell Norman about the baby been handled with more finesse the picture would have registered 100 per cent. Business good. Played Nov. 27-28.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—One of the most pleasing pictures of the year, and will get business. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 22-23.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

SHANGHAI MADNESS: Spencer Tracy, Fay Wray—Good action picture. Played with "Fiddlin' Convention" to good business. Picture well received. Played Nov. 14.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTING: George O'Brien—Up to the standard of westerns! Saturday night is western night in small towns and do they come! (Print rather old.) Played one day only. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Nov. 25.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MGM

BOMBSHELL: Jean Harlow, Lee Tracy—Harlow turns in her usual fine performance, and the picture did a nice Armistice day business. Only objection I heard was against Tracy. He never stops blabbing until the picture is over, and a lot of people have grown tired of him. Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 10-11.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

CHIEF, THE: Ed Wynn—Rather silly. How he got in the movies and radio is a mystery to me. If you must play it, one day is enough! Better still, let the other fellow play it! Running time, seven reels. Played Nov. 26-27.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl, Jimmy Durante—This is a good entertaining picture. Well produced and directed. Funny situations. Real comedians and lots of hokum. Gave general satisfaction and that is all the super-specials do in this size town. There have been so many big things produced in pictures in the past. You can't surprise the natives. They liked this one. Played Nov. 19.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: Helen Hayes, Clark Gable—Did business. Sheriff Hickey promised me an exploitation man last year. I didn't call for him. He shot one in long distance on this. His name is Hal Elias. If you live on the coast squawk for him. Maybe you'll get him. I give Hickey credit for a good conscience. Fellows in the west should squawk for Elias as a publicity man who really knows his business and really works.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Ga. General patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: Lionel Barrymore, John Barrymore, Helen Hayes and Clark Gable—Another airplane picture. Planes flying around all through this one. We should have less of this kind of entertainment. Acting good, that's all. Not a special! (Sundays—yes!) Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 23-24.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warren William, Myrna Loy—Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy make this a very satisfactory picture. Business only average. Played Nov. 12-13.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Tex. Ranch and oil field patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady—Here is one you should play. Drew fairly well. Musical numbers good! Well acted and is sure to please all. Clean entertainment. Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 21-22.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

STORM AT DAYBREAK: Nils Asther, Kay Francis—A mighty fine picture. Big story, well acted. War pictures will not draw any business in this burg but this one satisfied all that were here to see it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Monogram

RAINBOW RANCH: Rex Bell—Played this with "Don't Bet On Love" and gave good satisfaction. A good horse opera and there are lots of people that like them, too.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Paramount

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Richard Arlen—Here is a real picture from Paramount. I was a little late in playing this one but in spite of that it did a good business. Pleased 100%. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Nov. 20-21.—M. A. Edwards, Park Theatre, Allentown, Pa. Small town patronage.

DISGRACED: Helen Twelvetrees—This is an old theme re-dressed, altered and disguised under another name, but you'd know it anywhere. Our little Nell betrayed by the rich man about town but it ends up a little different, which is something and makes it really entertaining. The star's work helps out too. Just fair business. Running time, 62 minutes. Played Nov. 15-16.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—I am not sure that this picture will please all your patrons, but you will find that it has a terrific draft at the box office. After all, that is what counts. For me it drew the best Sunday and Monday crowd of the season. Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 19-20.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

ISLAND OF LOST SOULS: Charles Laughton—Showed this one last half of week to the largest box office for latter part of week in months, and I confess I tried to lay this on the shelf but Paramount said pay or play and I did. It is the most unusual film made and will create for itself more word-of-mouth than anything you can book.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—Many did not like it and on the whole not a small town picture though some people will praise it. I liked it myself. The producers always with an inferiority complex and with a hope of imitating Leslie Howard are going strong on Englishmen. We are getting too much English on our cues or whatever.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Id. General patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—A great picture. More suited to a sophisticated audience of adults than a small neighborhood theatre, as it did not appeal here, but that does not take away anything from its merit. Less than average business. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Nov. 13-14.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SUNSET PASS: Randolph Scott, Tom Keene—All star cast of western actors. Good. In fact, too good to please my western fans who want all shootin' and fightin'. Played Nov. 17-18.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, Lillian Roth—Very good musical number. Deserved better than we got. Average business. Played Nov. 15-16.—M. R. Williams. Texon Theatre, Texon, Tex. Ranch and oil field patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight—Another picture with a musical background that should be classed as only ordinary. Will not match up with the fine musicals and stage plays that are being released at the present time. Some comedy by Cliff Edwards. Business not up to standard on this one. Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 16-17.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

TERROR ABROAD: Charles Ruggles—Went over all right.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Id. General patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert—Failed to connect with the dough.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Ga. General patronage.

WAY TO LOVE, THE: Maurice Chevalier—This picture drew a fine business, and was well liked. Would consider it a much better picture than the last one from this star. Edward Everett Horton almost stole the show. Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 12-13.—R. W. Hickman, Lyric Theatre, Greenville, Ill. General patronage.

RKO

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—Personally thought this was a very good picture, but it did not do any business. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 20-21.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. Small town patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: Frances Dee and William Gargan—My patrons liked this one. Not much story but a little different from the average run of action. Played as a double bill to a good gross. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Nov. 23-24.—M. A. Edwards, Park Theatre, Coplay, Pa. Small town patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: Francis Dee, William Gargan—A good story with a newsreel cameraman as the hero and a girl reporter as the heroine. Has some good exciting shots in it and works up to a great climax with a kidnaping and a fight with the gangsters and racketeers. Good entertainment. Did fair business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played Nov. 10-11.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charles Ruggles—A good light musical comedy. Type of picture wherein even the photographer stars with his novel fadeouts, and the actors rhyme their words. The skating ballet is a feature in itself and well worth the money. Charles Ruggles and Phil Harris show up to advantage. Splendid entertainment. Fair business resulted. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 10-11.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft—A very good picture that will appeal more to men than women. Business average. Running time, 90 minutes. Played Nov. 19-21.—W. A. Collins, Regal Theatre, Elvins, Mo. Small town patronage.

YES, MR. BROWN: Jack Buchanan—Light musical comedy. Good photography and sound, with at least one catchy song that will send them away happy. Real good entertainment. Business just fair. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Nov. 17-18.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

YES, MR. BROWN: Jack Buchanan—This is just another picture of the English type and one that will not go over in the small towns. It is a comedy with a touch of music. There is little in it, a few songs, but no story and no humor. Buchanan is the only one in the entire cast that is known. A little old, but if you haven't bought it, then thank Allah. Played one day to small business. Running time, 69 minutes. Played Nov. 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Universal

DON'T BET ON LOVE: Lew Ayres, Ginger Rogers—Played this with "Rainbow Ranch" and gave good satisfaction. A very good program picture. Better than average.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

KISS BEFORE THE MIRROR, THE: Frank Morgan, Nancy Carroll—A good program picture. Interesting story and fine acting by the whole cast. Did not draw but satisfied all that seen it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

LADIES MUST LOVE: June Knight—This one did not wake 'em up in my town. Created no comment and when I tell you that here is a picture a little extraordinary you will wonder what is wrong. June Knight is positively a star in every sense of the word and pleases throughout with as fine a supporting cast as can be found. Good picture, good cast, average business.—W. H. Brenner, Costy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

SECRET OF THE BLUE ROOM, THE: Lionel Atwill, Paul Lukas—Interest sustained to very end. The best murder mystery we have shown and we have played them all. Average business, but this will justify extra billing. Gloria Stuart's vocal solo, beautifully and artistically rendered. Did much to balance the production. Played Nov. 10-11.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Ranch and oil field patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—This thing is a big feature and should be played as such as its name is presold to millions. Get on it and collect plenty. It's a natural anywhere westerns still go.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Id. General patronage.

TRAIL DRIVE, THE: Ken Maynard—One of the very best western pictures I have had in a long time. Running time, seven reels. Played Nov. 25.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. General patronage.

Warner

COLLEGE COACH: Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien—An excellent football picture. Did good business both nights. Seemed to please all. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 27-28.—C. M. Haynie, Kershaw Theatre, Kershaw, S. C. Small town and rural patronage.

COLLEGE COACH: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak—A very good picture of the football type and just the type of a picture for this season of the year. This is lively entertainment and should please any audience. The story shows the methods by which a coach makes a winning football team. There is plenty of action, good dialogue, some comedy and the last minute sensational victory. Played two days to a good business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 22.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

FORTY-SECOND STREET: Warner Baxter, Bebe Daniels—Did all right considering the late date played.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Id. General patronage.

FORTY-SECOND STREET: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Very much disappointed in this. The last two reels are excellent, but up to them there is too much stage stuff. This may be very interesting to directors and actors but not much entertainment for the public. Several patrons said Baxter, and especially Miss Daniels, were miscast. Ginger Rogers should have had Miss Daniels' part. This is not half as good as "Moonlight and Pretzels." Played Nov. 9-10.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell, Mary Astor—William Powell always popular with our patrons but this one not up to average and suffers in comparison with "Secret of the Blue Room." Average business. Played Nov. 17-18.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Tex. Ranch and oil field patronage.

20,000 YEARS IN SING SING: Spencer Tracy—Did a fair business with this.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Ga. General patronage.

VOLTAIRE: George Arliss, Doris Kenyon—One of the best pictures we ever played. Big in production, great acting. Did not draw at box-office but gave 100% satisfaction to all that it did draw. Too good and too big for small towns.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

VOLTAIRE: George Arliss—Had a few people to see this picture. Some said it was a good show. Not a small town picture. Running time, eight reels. Played Nov. 24.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville S. C. Small town patronage.

WORKINGMAN, THE: George Arliss—Excellent entertainment for the masses. Played Nov. 7-8. D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark.—Small town patronage.

ANOTHER USE FOR REPORTS

One practical way in which the "What the Picture Did for Me" contributors are servicing one another is exemplified in a paragraph from Mary Hayes Davis of the LaBelle theatre at LaBelle, Florida. The report should be particularly interesting to G. Carey of the Strand at Paris, Arkansas. The Davis comment follows:

"The Strand theatre says, 'Sorry we did not screen, and eliminate the one objectionable scene in this. Otherwise splendid picture.' Well, that's just what we did. Had a good house, and folks went out saying, 'For clean fun and lots of common sense, we'll take a Will Rogers picture every time.' We said, 'Oh, yes, always,' and looked like the cat that had just swallowed the canary, without batting an eyelash. Some other films that have risque innuendos could be improved thusly."

STATIC: Tom Howard—Good comedy for adults, not so good for Saturday when you have children.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TWO BLACK CROWS IN AFRICA: Moran and Mack—A very funny two reel comedy.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MGM

BUSY BODIES: Laurel and Hardy—They team well together and always satisfy those patrons who like good comedy. Here you see them in the sawmill, working—? Playing! Book it! Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

DUTCH GUIANA, LAND OF DJUKA: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—Very interesting.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HELLO POP!: Colortone Musical Revues—Good any where and time.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

KID FROM BORNEO: Our Gang—For a real ex-

ME AND MY PAL: Laurel and Hardy—Another good comedy by these nutty comedians. Always good for a few laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MUSH AND MILK: Our Gang—Pleased the Gang followers and they still have some.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

NATURE IN THE WRONG: Charley Chase—Charley always makes a good comedy. Running time, 21 minutes.—Albert S. Raim, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Tex. General patronage.

ONE TRACK MINDS: Fitts, Todd—It'll do. You have to run something for fillers, might as well be this. Somebody might laugh.—Mayme P. Musselman, Princess Theatre, Lincoln, Kan. Small town patronage.

PARADE OF WOODEN SOLDIERS: Talkartoons—Another good short. Lots of music and good laughs. Running time, one reel.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

SILENT RACKET: Charley Chase—A good Charlie Chase comedy. Not his best but good. Running time, 19 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount

SAILOR BEWARE: Eugene Pallette, Walter Catlett—Silly rather than funny plot, but the comedians rocked 'em in their chairs in a family trade house. They laughed themselves sick.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Ga. General patronage.

SING A SING: Screen Songs—A fair cartoon with some real good singing.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. General patronage.

RKO

FITS IN A FIDDLE: Clark and McCullough—These two comedians are always good. Give us more of them. Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

PATHE NEWS NO. 33: May I say these news reels always have good music on their sub-titles and to my way of thinking Pathe News is doing its part for national recovery. It's your news reel! Running time, ten minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THROWN OUT OF JOINT: Harry Gribbon, Edgar Kennedy—If you have it, pay for it and put it on the shelf. One of the worst we have ever seen. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

United Artists

BUGS IN LOVE: Silly Symphonies—Some of these cartoons are really remarkable. Here is one. The kiddies like them.—Running time, eight minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

KLONDIKE KID, THE: Mickey Mouse—This is one of the best Mickey Mouse cartoons we have ever played. Full of laughs and will please every one. Much better than the others. Disney must be back on the job again. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MICKEY'S GALA PREMIERE: Mickey Mouse—The best to date. Shows all the stars in review and just watch the patrons pick them out. Disney's cartoonist certainly stepped out in this one. Book it without hesitation. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

UNIVERSAL NEWS NO. 195: Sub-titles on these newsreels are too short in length and the music is not so hot. The announcer always talks. Talks when the band is playing during any parade. Running time, eight minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Port Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BOSKO, THE SHEEP-HERDER: Looney Tunes—This is a good cartoon comedy with plenty of laughs and some good music. It is sure to please both the kids and the grownups alike. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

HOW'VE YOU BEAN: Fatty Arbuckle—A very funny two-reel subject.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

"NO" MAN, THE: Broadway Brevities—Another good two-reel act. The fan dance is beautiful.—J. A. Verchot, Opera House, Abbeville, S. C. General patronage.

PLEASURE ISLAND: Broadway Brevities—This color short has beautiful color and a story that was good and novel, but lacked comedians that comedee. Too much dancing, too little comedy that is comedy, makes flat going.—H. J. Brown, Majestic and Adelaide Theatres, Nampa, Ga. General patronage.

SPORT THRILLS NO. FIVE: This may be good entertainment, but our patrons do not like it and that is enough for me. Several walkouts on that and all of the others of this series. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WAY OF ALL FRESHMEN, THE: Broadway Brevities—A dandy short with comedy, snappy dancing and about everything that goes to make a good short. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: John Wayne, Ruth Hall—Opened weak. Does not seem to interest my patrons. Playing Friday and Saturday. Running time, two reels each.—M. A. Edwards, Park Theatre, Coplay, Pa. Small town patronage.

Universal

CLANCY OF THE MOUNTED: Tom Tyler, Jacqueline Wells—This is only fair entertainment, but just about the same as the other serials from Universal. Action in the land of Northwest Mounted Police is the subject. The story of the murder of a wealthy rancher and the arrest of an innocent man. There is much action in the entire 12 chapters, but too much repetition. Running time, 12 chapters, 20 minutes each.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Henigson Assistant General Manager at Universal Plant

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

WE BEG TO DIFFER

We quote from a letter forwarded by a Round Tabler in which among other things, he has the following to say:

"It appears to me that only the larger theatres are sending in material, and they are not interested in the small town ideas. As a rule, many of the ideas in the Club pages can be handled by the larger houses and would not fit in the lesser houses due to the expense and also that they do not have sign artists to help put them over."

It has always been our endeavor to chronicle in the Club columns, the activities of all members in the smallest cities, as well as the deluxe operations. We figured we were doing so, but this member's letter sent us to the "books" for checking purposes, and the following will no doubt be of interest.

The four issues, from Nov. 11 to Dec. 2 inclusive, contained 53 campaigns from big cities as against 45 from the small towns. That doesn't seem as though we are leaning backwards one way or another, does it?

Yes, we incline to the big cities in one respect. As a further service, we are running as soon as is possible, the campaigns on the big openings of the new releases, so that showmen playing immediately behind, may adapt the exploitation to their own uses. And comments we receive, especially from the smaller towns, indicate the value of this idea.

While we are quoting from letters, the following just received from Boyd F. Scott, managing the 200-seat Palace, in Crane, Texas, 1500 population, may also prove illuminating: "I want to thank you and the members of the Club for what I get out of reading the department, and hope that once in a while I can send in something that will help the other members."

Allow us to reiterate that the Club columns are wide open for every theatreman everywhere, in the smallest hamlets to the largest cities. We welcome, and, in fact, solicit contributions from every managerial source for we believe the pages attest to our oft repeated truism that showmanship is rarely a matter of location.

ANIMATED DISPLAYS

Is it that showmen are not going strong for animation in lobbies and windows, or is it that we do not hear more from managers who go for this valuable advertising device? We just wonder why there isn't more of it, for in Dec. 2 issue are descriptions and illustrations of two ace ideas on "Footlight Parade," created by Jack Hodges, Tampa Theatre, Tampa, and the Switow Brothers, Mary Anderson Theatre, Louisville.

The planning and construction of both these animations indicate a lot of time, effort, and a few bucks spent, the results of which in box office response are reported by these able theatremen to be much more than satisfactory. Which is to be expected, for there is no questioning the almost automatic riveting of attention gained by the exhibit in motion. As further substantiation we offer the simple test of agitating a piece of string before a kitten.

Psychological tests have proven that animated displays attract at least twelve times the attention of those which do not move. These figures should not be ignored by managers on the hunt for angles that will bring 'em in.

"ONLY WHEN IT IS NEEDED"

A member just detached from his manager's job with one of the more important circuits dropped into Club headquarters to see what was what. In the course of conversation we brought up the subject of days off, asking what his former employers were doing in that respect. The reply was revealing. He said—get this—"the boys were supposed to ask for a day off when they needed it."

That's one for the book, isn't it?

However, it seems that this member's supervisor was a good guy, spending quite a few evenings on his own account relieving the managers under him so that they could grab a few hours to themselves.

A sad state of affairs, indeed. Imagine this big important theatre chain, commanding every loyalty and cooperation from employees, and in return indifferent to their welfare to the extent of making it necessary for them to plead for what rightfully should be given without asking.

Can you just figure what would have happened if the code had provided for all workers in the industry on a "day off when needed" basis?

Quoting from the Motion Picture Herald reviews of the new releases in his newspaper publicity and display ads is a regular practice with Round Tabler John Trewhela, fast stepping manager of the Judith Theatre, Lewiston, Mont., who writes in to recommend this extra advertising angle to the membership.

Very good, John, and we don't see why not.

2,000 Attend "B. B.'s" Canned Goods Matinee

One of the first Thanksgiving canned goods matinees to be reported is that by Manager B. B. Hamilton, Palace Theatre, Norwich, Conn., who put on a special entertainment for over 2,000 children participating in this relief drive for the city poor. Members of the committee which, beside Hamilton, included numerous civic leaders greeted the children as they brought in their contributions, and also addressed the children after the performance, which consisted of a silent Western, comedy shorts and, of course, cartoons.

Children from the various orphanages and county homes were transported to and from the theatre by members of the local Elk's Lodge, and representatives of other local organizations participated in the gathering and distribution of the food stuffs. (see photo in first column.)

Hamilton's Canned Goods Lobby

Hamilton took advantage of the opportunity to say a few words regarding his coming showing of "Little Women," advising the youngsters to get the book from the library, stressing its educational as well as amusement value. As a further aid in selling the picture, "B. B." had a girl costumed in the period of the picture selling the book in his lobby.

Does Well With "Meal Ticket" Idea

From John H. Forrester of The Pines Theatre, Waldron, Ark., comes another ticket idea that he reports is doing well for him. He dubs it "Amusement Meal Ticket," the form being similar to those handled by restaurants, giving $5.20 worth of admissions for $4 in cash, the various amounts printed on the ticket and punched accordingly when brought to the theatre.

Forrester states that he notices that these ticket buyers come more often than those who pay at the box office, for evidently having already paid for the tickets, theatre-going becomes more of a habit. This agile minded showman further adds that he has sold as high as five of these tickets to one family in one month, the average number being three.

Recently we published a story from this member regarding children's prices and his latest contribution indicates deep study of box office problems. For those seeking new slants on how to bring 'em in, perhaps Forrester's "meal ticket" idea may be helpful.

Keen Exploitation On "Dinner" Dates

Promoting a number of private flag poles to fly yellow sateen flags with title and theatre was one of the very unusual angles put over on the Hollywood opeinng of "Dinner at Eight" at Sid Grauman's Chinese Theatre. It seems that Hal Elias, MGM Coast exploiteer who worked with Sid on the opening, noted the many flag poles and managed to sell their owners on loaning them to advertise the opening. Incidentally, this was the first time the stunt had been used on the coast.

Another out of the ordinary idea was a collection of old bells from the famed nearby Mission Inn, which were hung in the fore court of the theatre, the tieup being "These bells have called peoples from all parts of the world to their Dinner at Eight." Art cards listed each bell numerically and described its origin.

The Eight O'Clock Coffee featured by the A & P Stores was tied in with the chain supplying one sheets to all stores between San Diego and Los Angeles, copy on which plugged the opening as well as the coffee. In addition, the stores distributed 100,000 heralds on the tieup, and served free coffee at the theatre during intermission.

Lucky Strike posters featuring Lee Tracy were also displayed at all places selling that brand using the slogan "They're both good from start to finish" mentioning the cigarette and the picture. Many restaurants used menu stickers reading, "We serve dinner at seven, so you may attend Dinner at Eight," and of course the customary premiere ceremonies were put on which were described over a national radio hookup.

An elaborate campaign on this attraction was also put over in San Francisco for the date at the Erlanger, the highlight being a style show named after the title of the picture, held at the leading department store, attended by over 500 women, and publicized strongly by the store in advance in newspapers and on the radio.

Incidentally, many of the advance road show campaigns on this picture are carried in the very well done press book. The first eight pages are given over to photos and descriptions of the highlights of actual stunts and tieups, and no doubt, managers playing the picture will find in this promotion, ideas for any kind of practical exploitation.

Unusual Giveaways at "Widows" Opening

Those Warnerites anticipated December fifth at the New York Strand opening of "Havana Widows" by the distribution by their Vitaphone gals of individual boxes of candy in the lobby containing chocolates filled with something very pleasant to the taste. The confections were easy to promote as the maker of these liquored chocolates jumped at the chance to advertise his wares in this fashion.

Each box carried a tag and folder with copy reading "Right off the boat from Havana Widows," and further advertising on the picture. That probably explains in part the traffic stopping crowds gathered at the theatre on the opening night.

Some Other Tested Holiday Campaigns

Although members no doubt have about set their various tieups and campaigns on Christmas business, the following, from the very practical manual gotten out by Oscar Doob, Loew Theatres ad head, for use in all Loew theatres may also prove of value to managers still seeking ideas which have not as yet been used locally. Xmas ideas from Round Tabler Harry Botwick, Paramount, Rutland, Vt., are also set forth below, which can be put on effectively in the two weeks preceding Christmas.

Bargain Counter Contest

This is tied in with newspaper, which each day of contest runs display ads including 10 questions regarding sales, the correct answers to which are of course to be found in the various store ads. For instance, "Who sells all kinds of cut flowers and pot plants from 50 cents and up?" "Where is the Strand Candy Store?" etc.

Free tickets are given for the best lists of answers, the theatre and attraction given prominent mention in every advertisement. This is just one variation of the idea which has been put over with many newspapers in the key cities as well as smaller communities. In Detroit and Louisville, last year, theatres cooperated with the newspapers in which passes were given to those sending in the best answers in 100 words or less to the question, "Why I Shop Early." The returns on these above described ideas were more than satisfactory and they are recommended for further use.

"10,000 Candles" Stunt

This is being put over by H. M. Addison, Loew Cleveland district chief, in cooperation with 150 merchants. In addition to special sales and other events to take place between now and Christmas, Addy has already put across a "Candle Week" during which the stores plugged special sales and candle window displays, all copy including theatre and attraction mention.

The old candle burning stunt is being used as follows: Huge candles will be burnt in the lobby with merchants and theatres giving prizes to those guessing nearest the exact time they expire.

Lobby Information Booth

Botwick suggests girl and phone in lobby with train and bus schedules, department store ads, to answer inquiries. Announce that appointments can be made at desk, and messages left. Phone might be promoted in return for publicity, thus only cost would be services of girl, if usherette or relief cashier are not available.

Serve Tea or Coffee

In conjunction with package checking, tea or coffee could be served, supervised by special matron or hostess. Managers using this idea throughout year, are going strong for it these weeks, stressing the comfort and relaxation of the theatre, after shopping. Some members are also arranging special play rooms for children under matron's care, while mothers are shopping.

Most Popular Sales Girl

A voting contest for most popular local sales girl is also suggested, with merchants contributing to a cash prize, and merchandise for other prizes. Ballots given by stores with every purchase, votes placed in special lobby box. Winner announced from stage on Christmas Day. The idea is to keep girls upon their toes, and make them more courteous and alert.

Institutional Stuff

Greeting cards from house staff to mailing list is another Botwick idea, and night letters delivered on Christmas Day extending season's greetings to city officials, ministers, and other leading citizens.

Pence Steals Hallowe'en Spotlight With P. A.

Attica, Inc., holds an annual Hallowe'en carnival which attracts thousands of visitors from that part of the state, cash prizes for the most beautiful and unique costume are a feature of the event, and as over 800 contestants were entered this year, Manager R. C. Pence of the Messner Theatre in that city, conceived a tieup which enabled him to steal the spotlight in his campaign on "Too Much Harmony."

Pence arranged to install a public address system at no expense to the city and also agreed to act as the announcer in return for the exclusive advertising privileges. Thousands surrounded the platform over which the contestants passed before the judges, and "R. C.'s" foresight in providing the loudspeaker was credited with making this event the most successful his city had yet staged.

At ten-minute intervals, announcements of the picture were made and a Bing Crosby record played. The entire idea suggests some fast thinking on the part of this Round Tabler which not only helped his box office, but enhanced the prestige of his theatre. Tying in with the stunt was a very effective front, the art work of which was cut out of the regular 24 and reproduced above.

Xmas Party Set To Be One Large Night

It looks like one eventful evening. We mean that big Managers' Round Table Club Christmas Get-Together, on Thursday night, Dec. 21, at the Brass Rail. For from what we can gather from the very busy committee, much is planned, and what a good time will be had by all.

Although the first announcement was made only last week, reservations are coming in rapidly. Seems as though the boys aim to make this regional Club party the biggest yet, and there's no reason why it should not be. We are told to expect a heap of surprises, and with the rest of the gang in these parts, our ears and eyes are wide open.

As usual, U. A. ad chief, Hal Horne, is coming across with a lot of clever souvenirs, and others of the home office ad heads also expect to send something nice. The Xmas tree is already selected, and our Gert has been out buying a lot of presents for everyone who attends. Some fun, eh kid?

Committeeman Lew Preston, skipper of the Academy of Music, has been measuring the floor space in the Brass Rail banquet hall, to make sure of enough room for the flock of headline acts he promises to bring along. Lew Preston and Joe Salmon, Skouras Brothers representatives on the General Committee, have assured us of a top turnout from this outfit, and other circuits will be there in numbers.

Bill Brown, Marlboro Theatre, Brooklyn, one of the committeemen from the Randforce Circuit, has called a meeting of his brother managers to discuss ways and means of attendance and entertainment, and the boys from Warners, RKO, Consolidated, Loew, as well as other circuits and independents in this section, we understand, are also making plans. It looks like a party.

As before, the doin's start at midnight, and continue from then on. That means the out-of-town members, from nearby points in Long Island, Jersey and Connecticut will be able to get down in time to have plenty of party.

And very important, the entire cost for everything, eats, drinks, souvenirs, and fun is just One Dollar. So fill out the reservation blank below, pin $1.00 to it, and slip it in the mail right now.

It's the manager's big night. Good fellowship, good eats, good times. No speeches, nothing formal, pleasant company.

Here's The Dollar!

Please mail me my ticket for the Round Table Xmas Party to be held on Thursday, December 21st, at the Brass Rail, Seventh Avenue and 49th Street, New York.

MANAGERS AGREE WITH BASSIN

Various Opinions from Round Tablers Affirm Member's Stand On Ballyhoo in Nov. 25 Issue

Well, folks, it sure looks as though our old time "corpsbruder" Charley Bassin, head man of the Oriental, Mattapan, Mass., did light the bonfire when he indited his well written article on what he refers to as "antiquated exploitation." Members have read it in the issue of Nov. 25, and have put their pens to paper to agree. Here is what some of them have to say.

On this page, we have the pleasure of setting down some of the forthright statements on the above, from such representative showmen as Fred Hinds, Jack Hodges, and Earle Holden. On hand we also have some meaty words from E. E. Bair, State and Ohio Theatres, Uhrichsville, Ohio, who sends along some of his advertising that treats of the same subject, and which will be chronicled in our next issue.

There is still much to say on the subject, and we would like also to hear from some defenders of ballyhoo, as well as those managers who agree with the above members. We believe it a matter of great importance to the industry at large, and the Club columns are open to further discussion.

—MIKE

FRED HINDS
STRAND, WHITEWATER, WIS.

Dear Mike:

I agree with Bassin 100 per cent. I hate the word "ballyhoo." To me it means circus exploitation or carnival advertising. I ceased using those methods nine years ago. I should have stopped 15 years ago. Whenever I see a street parade, a false theatre front, a truck loaded with flashy paper, a person carrying a sandwich sign, some monster of bristol board, a loudspeaker baying away, it fills me with shame for my profession. The same applies to lines like the following, of which we see so many. "The greatest picture of this or any other year"; "What does your daughter do nights?"; "No one under 16 years of age admitted"; and some sundry adjectives that appear to be the constant working tools of some publicists.

Do not get the mistaken idea that I am a moralist. Far from it—we have reference only to advertising. Bring on your "Forty-Second Street," your "Gold Diggers," your "Too Much Harmony," your "I'm No Angel," etc. I'll break attendance records with them and do it with at least some pretense to dignity. From every exchange I select the matrices that show the most girls with the fewest clothes. But they are artistic, not flashy. There is hardly a week goes by that my good old friend, Jenkins, does not ride sex pictures in his column. Jaysee seems to forget all about the fact that they are the ones that get the money.

I never did go in very strong for descriptions—but time was, back in Minneapolis, when I used to write my share of adjectives. I now say, after 22 years, the majority of which were spent as press agent, publicity and advertising man, that they came in spite of those ads. Illustrative descriptions are ideal—many verbal ones are asinine. If nearly a quarter century of study, many years of which advertising reacted favorably or unfavorably with my own money, means anything, the situation, so far as publicity is concerned, is generally summed up in "Who's in what!" Give me a lobby artist who is an artist and not a sign painter—and I have one of those—and mats like Paramount puts out with their pictures, and I'll sell any worthy picture without a single blare, noise or adjective.

Mr. Bassin's statement that patrons know more about pictures than we do is utterly correct. Witness the number of times we've been surprised!

Vivid word pictures might sell a subject at rare intervals, but those who turn out this type of copy make a habit of it. I've never thought what I advisedly call "circus exploitation" ever sold anything. I do however, agree with Mr. Bassin that undignified ballyhoo unsells many pictures.

We're not engaged in a racket—we're in a profession. A circus or carnival comes once a year. It is possible that cheap, flashy publicity pays them for this reason. A theatre is in the same place year after year. Long established enterprises in other lines do not resort to this type of advertising. Why should theatres? Twenty years ago, movies consisted of cops chasing somebody around a corner. In many ways, those who retain the same old publicity methods have not progressed beyond that stage.

The motion picture of today is a play (more so than ever, since talking). A famous writer authors them. The greatest artistic talent in the universe is employed in them. It is the most splendid entertainment to ever be placed in volume before the masses. Why not advertise it that way?

JACK HODGES
PARK, TAMPA, FLA.

Dear Mike:

Thanks for the kind words! And your invitation to set forth my reaction to the article on present day exploitation by a fellow member of the Club, Charlie Bassin.

To be perfectly frank with you, I think Bassin has hit the nail squarely on the head. There is no doubt in my mind but that the opinions expressed in his article are entirely true, and it was with this thought in mind that I wrote the attached article, even before I had read his article. [EDITOR: This article will appear in an early issue.]

Only a few days ago I was sitting in Jesse Clark's office (he's my District Manager), and we were discussing this same subject. He compared the present day managers with the old farmer, who tied the reins to the shipstock and allowed the horse to follow "The Rut" back home. It impressed me as a good thought and I have tried to make it into an interesting article.

If I thought I could add to Bassin's thoughts, I would surely do so, but I don't see that he has left anything unsaid. It's a meaty subject that all of us should give a lot of serious thought to and when we all come to realize the truth in his statements we will by that time have gone a long way in overcoming the present condition of things.

Here's hoping we have more articles as interesting as the one written by Charlie Bassin.

EARLE HOLDEN
GEORGIA, ATLANTA, GA.

Dear Mike:

I received a letter from you a few days ago in which you called my attention to an article that was to appear in THE HERALD written by Charles Bassin in regards to exploitation. You asked me to express an opinion on this for publication.

If I didn't really know that I was reading and seeing facts, I would say that that fellow Bassin had interviewed me in regard to exploitation a la 1934 and then had written an article around my thoughts. So if you expect to get an uprising from me for the pages of your mag other than what Charlie Bassin has written, you are going to be disappointed.

That fellow has struck the nail square on the head and I agree with him in every word that he has put forth in his article. My wife even thought being married to a theatre manager is no different from other women. But I tell you she reads every movie magazine that comes out, and I know that other women do the same. I can take a list of my coming attractions home with me and she will check the list and tell me what pictures are going to hit and those that are going to flop. And she has never missed, because she has read all advance dope in the mags.

In the recent article I wrote for THE HERALD relative to reviews of pictures I touched on the subject of movie magazines, and told you that the mags were even advising people which show to see and which to pass up. This is all wrong of course, but as long as they do it, patrons read the reviews and are in most instances guided accordingly.

But Charlie Bassin deserves a great big hand for his fine article and once again let me say that I agree with him on everything that he has to say.

Strong Exploitation On "Dancing Lady"

A nationwide contest sponsored by MGM and Modern Screen in which the main prize is to be a visit to Hollywood as the guest of Joan Crawford, is one of the angles widely publicized in advance of the New York engagement of "Dancing Lady," opened December 1 at the Capitol Theatre. The contest, to run long enough to be used on subsequent dates, takes the form of a cut-up contest in which production stills and shots of the star are to be put together and placed in proper sequence. In addition, contestants must also send in ten-word descriptions of the star.

Elaborate advertising is being undertaken by the magazine and MGM to put this over. News stand posters are being used in many cities and thousands of window display blowups are being exhibited in the chain stores selling the magazine. Car cards are also arranged for in different spots and full page colored ads are being planted in Modern Screen and other publications of this group. Besides the first prize, 28 others are also offered, including refrigerators, radios, makeup kits, the manufacturers of which are distributing promotion material of various kinds with endorsements and pictures of the star.

To publicize this further, the producers have put out a special trade paper exploitation section, incidentally, one of the first times that this has been done. In addition to the contest, a number of other pithy ideas are included, one of which is a reproduction of an eight column publicity spread in a prominent New York paper of Clark Gable and Franchot Tone, besides Crawford. The stunt is detailed for the information of and use of managers playing the picture.

Another unique angle which no doubt contributed much to build up nationwide attention on the picture was a 53 station broadcast of the entire musical score the night before the opening on the Paul Whiteman hour, said to be an innovation in radio circles.

The exploitation possibilities on this attraction are certainly tempting enough, and no doubt they will be taken advantage of fully by livewire showmen, many of whom are already utilizing the above slants in advance of their showing.

Helson and Green Put On Big City Shopping Day

Another instance whereby a Round Tabler led a movement to put over a city-wide shopping day, was that arranged by Manager R. S. Helson, Alger's Capitol Theatre, Morrison, Ill., in cooperation with General Supervisor Joseph J. Greene, in which 50 local merchants participated to put over a highly successful "Morrison Day."

In advance, two full co-op pages were run, including the ads of each store, these ads being numbered. At a time designated, an airplane flying over the city dropped parachutes, each having a wooden paddle attached to it. Those finding the parachutes were requested to take them to the stores whose numbers corresponded with that of the paddle, in return for a suitable gift, and Helson also contributed a number of passes to excite more interest in the stunt.

A bannered sound truck covered the city and all surrounding towns announcing the big day, and thousands of copies of the full-page ads were also distributed, which brought many people to town and also to the theatre. Not only is this idea reported to have materially increased the gross, but aided in building up further good will and prestige.

This member also speaks of an amateur show he recently staged, using 100 local people in a style show and presentation called "A Hollywood Premiere," various characters impersonating the stars. A regular opening was put on with lights, microphones, and all the other fixings, with a street parade led by the high school band and including a number of new model cars furnished by a local dealer. Helson further states that he is putting on a big high school rally when the local band will give its first public concert, details of which we will be glad to publish upon receipt.

A bow for your smart, very good showmanship, "R. S.," and thanks for the kind words regarding the help you obtain from the Club section. Let's hear from you again soon. You folks are doing things.

Bill Levey Says It Really Happened

Manager Bill Levey, Capitol Theatre, Riverhead, L. I., vouches for the following he states occurred at a matinee performance of "The Power and the Glory." Despite the fact that Bill had stressed in his newspaper advertising the hours of the starting of the feature and the importance of being seated before that time, a patron who had arrived in the midst of the second reel watched the picture for a while and then came hunting the manager. She asked whether or not the operator knew his business, since she was certain that the wrong reel was on and that the picture was being shown backwards.

By tying up with a local laundry, he now cuts down the cost of his mailing list by inserting a program in every bundle of laundry delivered to the homes. In exchange, the line "Compliments of Riverhead Laundry" is carried on the front page, and this seems to be working out satisfactorily at both ends.

Not only unusual but very effective is the above co-op page, put over by Manager Jack Keuch on "My Weakness," at the Hildreth, Charles City, Iowa. Jack says the stunt cost him about $9, which included cost of special page mat on this attraction obtained from a Los Angeles theatre ad service company.

HOW ABOUT YOUR NEW YEAR'S EVE?

There's going to be a lot of celebrating this New Year's, and if you intend putting on a special show, better start lining up your extra attractions, if you haven't already done so. Theatres are going to use a lot of acts, and it doesn't pay to wait too long. Tie-ins with local dancing schools and music studios for an amateur revue should also be considered. Simple presentations can be staged. Here's one that always goes over.

Have a large compo clock face made up with moving hour hand. House lights dimmed one minute before midnight, and spot on clock as hand moves to 12, while orchestra or organist plays "Auld Lang Syne." Promptly at 12 house lights up, and while music plays, costumed old man "1933" limps across stage followed by baby "1934," New Year's trailer on traveller.

If you are reserving your seats, figure on clearing house in time. Where general admissions are to be sold, houses either will be cleared before special show, or regular ticket sale continued right through. Whether or not higher prices are to be charged, depends, of course, on what kind of a show is to be put on. But, however you handle it, be specific in all advertising, so patrons will know just what to expect, and you'll keep out of trouble.

Paper hats and all the other necessary props should be taken care of. The distribution of noise makers depends on your audience. They'll be needed in some spots, and unnecessary in others. Let the folks have a good time, but don't let them get out of hand. However, we repeat, whatever you are planning, start now—and a big night to you.—MIKE.

Three Newspaper Contests Plug "Prizefighter"

What certainly appears to be a campaign that clicked very strongly on "The Prizefighter and the Lady" comes from Columbus, Ohio, where Manager Russell A. Bovim, Ohio Theatre, with W. G. Bishop, MGM exploiteer, accomplished a number of things that went over smartly.

Foremost among them was a number of newspaper contests. Two of these were tied into the want pages and a third, based on the "Yardley-Grams" idea published in Liberty, drew many replies. This was run in chart form with three different charts on alternate days, each containing 128 lettered squares, which, when correctly arranged, bore theatre messages. In the center of each chart was placed an illustration of some action in the picture. Daily prizes were offered, so that six days' publicity was obtained in all.

Permission was secured to place two eight-foot blowups of Max Baer at the intersections of the most prominent streets, fake telegrams were dropped on the streets, restaurants, etc., advising of the impossibility of holding the picture for a second week, and thousands of miniature fight cards were distributed at cigar counters and sport arenas two days in advance.

A further tiein was made with a leading jeweler wherein a large display ad was promoted showing Max Baer wearing a wrist watch of a style sold by the store, all of which aroused sufficient comment and box office interest to return a satisfying gross.

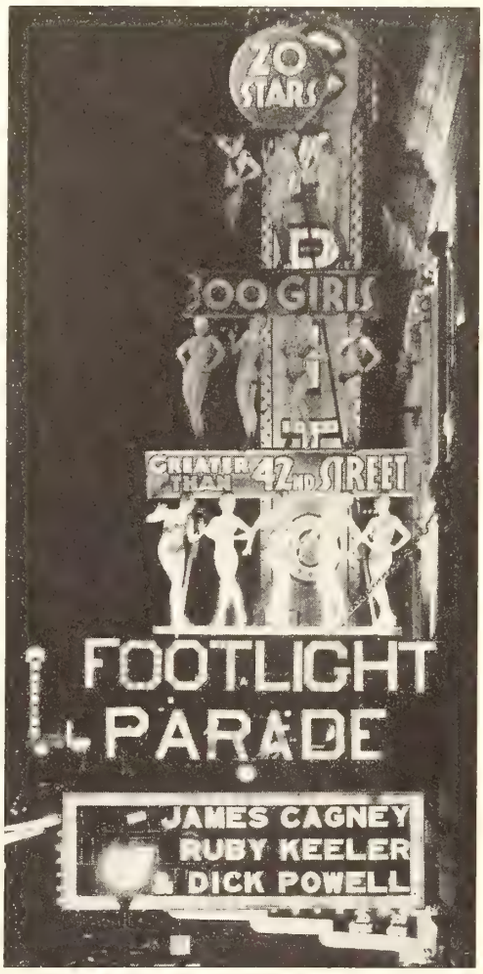
Kane's Clown Bally Cops Spot on NRA Day

Realizing while community celebrations may bring people to town, increased theatre attendance does not necessarily follow, Manager Tom Kane, Fox-Sequoia, Redwood City, Cal. arranged a stunt that just about grabbed the spotlight on a recent NRA Day, put on by his local officials.

Tom was invited to enter a float in the parade which was part of the day's activities, and was fortunate enough to dig up a friend, an old time circus clown who expressed a willingness to cooperate. The "joey" dressed himself in a comedy dame makeup and brought along a dummy with which he clowned throughout the parade, in which Kane advertised his showing of "Gold Diggers."

The gag naturally attracted much of the attention of the onlookers and Tom carried the idea further for while the speaking was going on after the parade, Tom planted the clown in front of the theatre where he continued going through his act, this bringing a lot of extra folks to the box office.

Thus while other theatres in that section did not fare so well, during their local NRA celebrations, by the expenditure of the few dollars for the clown stunt, Kane was able to roll up a very satisfying night's business, and it is by using the old noodle in spots such as these that quick thinking showmen are able to compete with outside attractions.



One of the last stunts put over by Joe Kinsky, before leaving the Capitol, Sioux City, for his new post. Note the cutout gals on the upright, and the special spotlighting that made the display visible at a distance. For a farewell gag, Joe did himself proud. It rates an extra bow.

Binstock Spends Little On Elaborate Lobbies

Using the three sheet figure of Buster Crabbe, Manager Paul Binstock, Republic Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., made up an interesting display on his showing of "Tarzan" in the form of a jungle hut with thatched roof, animal skins and jungle weeds. All the equipment was secured as a result of a tieup with nearby stores, and Paul also decorated his flash with a number of cocoanuts that he discovered in the theatre property room. Rows of strip lights heightened the effect, being arranged to bring out the title, the letters of which were cut out of celetox.

Binstock also inaugurated a kiddie club to help the following showings of this serial, and as an incentive allowed free admissions to the youngsters who attended the various chapters of the picture. This was done by punched club cards and to make it more interesting Paul promoted a lot of candy and other gifts which he reports the youngsters went for in a satisfying manner.

This member's success in putting over tieups with his local merchants is worth commenting on, as in addition to highly effective lobby displays, such as above described, these outside hookins in the form of window displays and merchandising contests have been responsible for satisfying box office increases.

Press Book Stuff Pulls On "Invisible Man"

For a week in advance of his showing of "Invisible Man" at the Spreckels, San Diego, Calif., Lew Metzger aroused city-wide interest in the picture with his talking "invisible man" stunt in the lobby which followed the Joe Weil press book suggestion of a two-way microphone, a throne chair with a giant cutout question mark on the seat and a poster stating that the "Invisible Man" would answer any questions put to him. Green baby spots were used to heighten the weird effect and the gag drew plenty of customers.

Metzger also used the transparent mirror stunt put on by Morris Kinzler at the Roxy, New York, in which a dummy figure became invisible when the flasher lights were turned off, a professional magician also being tied in to this as a further ballyhoo.

For a street stunt, Metzger mounted a 14-foot beaverboard book, with the title and author prominently displayed, this placed on a truck that was used in all parts of the city. In addition to these crowd stoppers, Metzger also gagged up his newspaper campaign with an unique opening announcement that ran 16 inches deep by two columns at the top and four at the bottom.

Waugh Plugs "Two Women"

Shortly before taking over his new duties as Warner Kentucky zone chief, Howard Waugh put over an interesting campaign at the Warner, in Memphis, Tenn., on "I Loved a Woman." Feeling that the attraction would draw better if Robinson's two love affairs were emphasized, Howard changed the title to read, "I Loved Two Women," and the change aroused enough discussion to earn comment in a leading local column asking why. Waugh wittily replied to the effect that in keeping with the NRA code it was decided to use two women in the picture instead of one.

8,000 Patrons Attend Swick's Prize Awards

Gathering a crowd equal to the population of his city was the accomplishment of Manager Clifford H. Swick, Smalley Theatre, Norwich, N. Y., as the climax of his campaign in which a number of automobiles were given away. Eight thousand people in one group would attract attention in any sized city and that this many came together in front of his theatre to witness the selection of the prize winners is something that Clifford may well shout about.

350,000 coupons were given out by the theatre and by participating merchants in the contest that ran for a number of weeks, and it is unfortunate that the flash of the huge crowd is not clear enough for reproduction. However, the accompanying photo shows one of the cars, the decorations of which were designed and built by Swick himself, the car being used in an effective advertising parade.

This member finds the parade idea a worth while angle and put one across to promote a kiddies club pet show, the entries varying from canary birds to ponies, making up a procession over a block long through the main streets to the theatre.

Plug Pigs and Pretzels In Click Campaigns

Among the uniformly good campaigns on "Moonlight and Pretzels" we include that of Manager J. M. (Pop) Graver, Grove Theatre, Willow Grove, Pa., whose lobby displays and street bally seem to have aroused plenty of curiosity. Using the regular paper for cut-out purposes, "Pop" made a flash front from his 24, six and three sheets, constructed in the theatre art shop, the decorations of course including a number of large sized compo pretzels.

Graver's street bally took the form of a miniature parade, as beside the usual decorated float with costumed girls distributing imprinted bags of pretzels, he promoted a sound truck from a neighboring brewery which played the hits from the picture and otherwise publicized it in the city and throughout surrounding towns (see photo).

Graver's Sound Truck Bally

Playing "Three Little Pigs" on the same program, this live showman also used the "porker" angle in his campaign, by placing three beribboned piglets in the lobby and via the above truck showing them off to the folks in the surrounding territory.

Manager Sam Roth, Paramount Theatre, Helena, Ark., went for the lobby free beer idea in his "Moonlight" campaign, by promoting the bar and brew with three girls in white coats and caps as barmaids. Needless to say, there was no hesitation among patrons who availed themselves of Sam's invitation to help themselves. And what, of course, is most pleasing is that the beer distributor built the bar and furnished everything without any cost to the theatre.

Vance Minton Still Clicking in Erie

Aided by B. L. Darrow, MGM exploiteer, Manager Vance Mitton, Shea's Theatre, Erie, Pa., worked a number of interesting angles on his showing of "Penthouse," an out-of-the-ordinary tieup being arranged with the local traction company, whereby a "lucky" contest was put on, the prize given for numbers of certain weekly street car passes. Cards with these numbers were posted on the front of each car, these being promoted free of charge, the copy, of course, including theatre and attraction.

Cooperating with a newspaper football guessing score contest, free tickets were given as prizes in addition to those supplied by the newspaper. The picture was also hooked into a "news tip" contest in another daily, passes also being offered here for the best news tip of the day turned in by readers.

Other things that helped were a special theatre rubber stamp used on bags in various five and tens and other stores, a radio hookup in which passes were given to the first five identifying a certain piece of music played on a program, and a lobby shadow box showing a penthouse also attracted attention.

We are happy to hear of what Vance Mitton is doing in Erie, as we had the privilege of working with him in the good old days. His work continues to be top hole and no doubt we will hear more from him in the near future.

Dick and Ken Cover Many Slants on "Vickers"

From the RKO Hillstreet Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., engineered by Manager Dick Moss and Ad Chief Ken McGaffey comes a well rounded campaign on "Ann Vickers." An interesting display made up of three enlarged pages taken from the book was planted in the lobby and a local station went for a contest on the quality of the picture, in which copies of the book were presented for the best letters and passes were awarded.

Being made from a best seller, a number of attractive book windows were promoted on the picture and the book marks were also placed in the circulating library of the town's largest stores. To tie in with a story running in one of the screen magazines, special heralds were made up and planted in all publications distributed by the leading news company.

Passes were given in a newspaper football score guessing contest, and a tieup with a prominent dance spot for an "Ann Vickers" night was used to good returns.

"Vas You Dere, Sharlie," Leon's Contest Idea

As Baron Munchausen suggests tall tales, Manager Leon Pickle, Kentucky Theatre, Henderson, Ky., tied the idea into his campaign on "Meet the Baron" by promoting local merchants to offer prizes for the biggest liars in his town and surrounding counties.

Circulars were distributed by the stores and in the surrounding territory with details of the contest and theatre credits, entries being requested to write their lies on the reverse side and bring them to the box office. Leon says the gag netted a heap of fabulous anecdotes, the prize winners of which were published in his local paper and also planted in the lobby as part of the advance campaign netting many laughs.

The above flash front is the creation of Sid Dannenberg, for the Lake Theatre, Cleveland. The end strips from ground to marquee were lined with news heads, with reverse punch copy broken into the center of each strip. What we call a very socko display, and an ace crowd-stopper.

HENRY PHILLIPS

manages the Strand Theatre, in Reading, Penna., a Warner house, where he has four changes a week, enough to keep any man busy. Listen, Henry, remember us to Bob Suits, Paul Glase and the rest of our friends down there in your fair city, and don't you forget to be at that get-together when it takes place. From all accounts it ought to be a good party.

holds down the managerial reins at the Paramount Theatre in Plainfield, N. J., and he joined up in great fashion by signing on the dotted line and taking out his subscription at the same time. Listen, Mike, you're close enough to the big city to come over for that party we're having on the 21st, so write the date down on your calendar.

assists Hank Lowry in the publicity department of the Liberty Theatre in Elizabeth, N. J. Rudy is twenty-one and has been in this game for over six years, has been doorman and assistant manager, but likes publicity best. His reason for entering showbusiness was, as he puts it, "to learn how to take it as well as how to dish it out" and we're sure he'll learn.

manages the Novelty Theatre in Los Angeles, Cal. Jack seems to have been in about every phase of this business of ours. He started as a candy butcher, later was promoted to head usher. Left and entered as an extra and then assistant cameraman for a while and from that directly to the Novelty as exploitation manager. He's bound to go places and do things and we're rooting for him.

is the director of the Centraltheater Ulm in Ulm-an-der-Donau, Germany. If you've been reading our pages as carefully as we think you have, you know we have many members from your country, and since all our readers are particularly interested in foreign exploitation and general methods of putting over pictures, we'd appreciate hearing from you.

joins from Hopewell, Va., where he manages the Beacon Theatre, a 1,000-seater with prices of 10 and 25 cents top. Well, Stan, here we are freezing up here at this writing and you doubtless are basking in that fine brand of Virginia sunshine. Why not bottle a bit of it and send it on up to us? We could use it.

works for Skouras Brothers and is at the helm of the Rialto Theatre in Jersey City, N. J. We've got nearly every one of the Skouras boys in the Club, Charlie, and be sure to remember us to Bill Hill, Jules Reisman, Al Unger and the rest of our good friends out your way and get them all together and come on over for the big party at the Brass Rail. Big doings, boy.

is the manager of the Apollo Theatre, in Princeton, Ill. He started taking tickets at 25 cents a night and after the box office closed spent his time in the operator's booth. Later was the highest paid operator in that county. At the time of his joining Russ tells us that the theatres on Alger's circuit are having a contest with prizes for the managers and supervisors and we hope his next letter will be to tell us that he got in on one of the grand awards.

LARRY E. NEW

manages the Dominion Theatre, in Vancouver, B. C. He started as usher at the Grandview, in Vancouver, later was promoted to doorman and then assistant of the Fraser, there. Larry has come right along; he is unmarried and young in years, only twenty-three, to be exact, but we're expecting things of him.

was proposed in the Club by his friend, Billy Huffman. Jack manages the Brook Theatre, at Bound Brook, N. J. Well, Jack, the last man who had that house was Charlie Brennan, a mighty good friend of ours, so you certainly ought to be one of us 100 per cent. How about letting us hear from you?

manages the Marcy Theatre, in Brooklyn, N. Y. Certainly that's close enough for you to stop in and say hello every so often. Meyer tells us with great emphasis that if he had to chose his profession all over again he would "positively" choose showbusiness. He's married and has three children. You've just about sewed the Randforce gang up solidly by joining, but you'll have to do your part.

manages the Liberty Theatre in Kennewick, Wash., for the Yakima Valley Theatres which just about ties this circuit up 100%. However, guess we don't have to tell you that, Don, since you say in your letter that the fellows on your circuit regard the CLUB as their "right hand man." But please remember that they help make the section possible by their contributions, so get out the old pen and send something in to us. Regards to you and the gang, manages the H. W. Lichtspiele, in Neukirch, Germany. August is only twenty-five, but we're willing to bet that he will give our boys a run for their money, too, when it comes to putting on some outstanding campaigns. How about sending a few of them in to us, so the rest of the boys may see what you're doing?

AUGUST ALFRED WOLF

who manages the Smalley's Theatre, in St. Johnville, N. Y., joins and enters his subscription at the same time. Well, "S. C.," we have pretty nearly all the Smalley boys in the Club and they're active contributors, too, but you'd better get going and start a little lively competition.

hails from Nelsonville, Ohio, where he manages the Pastime Theatre. He says he finds the Herald indispensable, as do plenty of other boys, French, but you know it isn't fair to take advantage of the stunts detailed in our pages without coming across with a couple yourself.

down in New Albany, Ind., manages the Elks Theatre and was just about born in the theatre. He tells us that at the tender age of five he sold popcorn in a cinema and worked his way through school by ushering. His entire family is in show business. This is his first managerial assignment.

is the manager of the Ohio Theatre, in Tippecanoe City, Ohio, and is another new member who belongs to the youngster line-up. Jimmy is only twenty, but full of enterprise and ambition, and promises to become an active contributor to the pages. All right, old boy, we'll welcome anything you send in to us, but make it soon.

is the lessee and manager of the Star Theatre, in Rochester, N. Y. Don is fairly young, too, but his experience has been varied; he started at the tender age of sixteen with portables, and worked one-night stands until he had made enough to lease his present theatre. He says business is good right now and we're hoping it will continue.

joins us in grand fashion; he sends in samples of his work which we shall be using shortly; just as soon as we publish a few we have on hand, Jones. That's the real Club spirit and you started off on the right track. "J. J." does the art work for the Grand, Rialto and Royal Theatres down in Columbus, Ga., which certainly ought to keep him out of mischief.

is the manager of the Ufa Palast Theatre in Chemnitz, Germany, and apparently is one of our younger members to join from his country, for Braun is only twenty-four years old. You've got the right idea signing up with us and taking advantage of your brother members' ideas, but remember your duty doesn't end there, you've got to send in some things yourself to earn your keep.

owns the Bellevue Lichtspiele in Rathenow, Germany, and it sort of looks to us as though we could run a couple of Germany issues, if all our good new members would get together and send in details of their activities out there. Remember, Max, just as you are interested in reading what our boys on this side of the water are doing, so do our members and readers express an interest in our foreign membership, so let's hear from you.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

EASTMAN Background Negative is winning wide acclaim among the many producers and cameramen who have already discovered its possibilities. Its remarkably fine grain meets the prime requirement of background shots that are to be projected and rephotographed. Other qualities . . . particularly a surprising degree of speed . . . give it a potential versatility that may well lead to finer photography in other directions. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 113, No. 12 December 16, 1933

THEY'RE READING IT

ON a motor journey into two thousand miles of the interior an observer reports seeing a copy of Motion Picture Herald of December 2 on nearly every desk in exchange or theatre or wherever screen business is done. That is the issue which presents the final text of the code. And, from the little store shows at the mountain crossroads to the big city exchanges, The Herald's presentations for the last several months of its views and those of the industry's leaders are found familiar and discussed in every office. The Release Chart with its formidable black columns of data is a working document and instrument of theatre and exchange all across the country.

The Herald is, with a quarter of a century of development, growth and experience, woven deep into the fabric of motion picture operation even to the remotest outposts of exhibition. Interestingly some of its most ardent readers are among the new showmen who are being brought into the exhibition field as one of the evolutionary effects of the depression.

Elsewhere in the news columns a reference is made to the extraordinary performance of "Little Women" at two tiny towns in Missouri. In each instance the enterprising exhibitors who hastened to acquire this profitable piece of material at so early a date for their village houses have been in the exhibition business only two years, and both are studying their business not only in the school of experience but also in the pages of The Herald with their weekly presentations of the crystallized, condensed and epitomized experience and enterprise of the nation's leading showmen.

"The depression has given us and is continuing to give us a crop of new showmen all the way up the valley of the Mississippi," a New Orleans branch manager observed the other day. "In many a situation where some ineffective or discouraged old timer quits, some new candidate sees opportunity and goes at it. I notice that a lot of them are making good, too. They are willing to try new slants and their minds are not closed."

This manifestation reported from the field is reflected in the circulation office of The Herald where for some months the subscription lists' flow of changes is bringing to the great roster of readers many names that are new to the industry and the experienced eyes of Mr. Denny Shea who has, man and boy, been at those lists for twenty-six years.

"And," observed a Chattanooga film salesman, "the depression is making better showmen, especially in the smaller spots. Of course you know the idea once was to hang out a one-sheet and then sit down at the box office window and wait for them to come in. Even out in the sticks they are finding that it pays to go out after the customers. The retailing job is getting better."

To these retailers The Herald is manual, handbook, gazette of the news—a quarter century old and—new every week.

NEW INVASIONS

EVERY person who deals with the printed word in merchandising must be interested in and concerned by certain manifestations from the Administration and its Brain Trust in relation to advertising. There have been some side stepping and blustering disavowals from General Woof-woof Johnson since Colonel Robert R. McCormick of the Chicago Tribune rose in protest at what he deemed NRA threats at the freedom of the press. However that was all concerned with editorial and news expression. Elsewhere an equally serious invasion of the press and the interests of its customers is appearing in the new measures, enacted or contemplated, for various commercial activities. We are all familiar with the wet blanket that has been laid down on investment banking and the flotation of new issues by the Securities Act, under which financial advertising has been reduced to street numbers. And now along come the restrictions of liquor advertising which so complicate the situation that in a local option territory it would be legal to mail a magazine to one side of a street and not to the house on the other side if it chances to stand in a dry ward. Further in the new Pure Food and Drug bill, in obviosuly well-intended if not discreet phrases, a censorship of advertising is proposed under which a bureaucratic boss could make it necessary to get a prescription to take an aspirin tablet.

The nature of the Food and Drug bill is calculated to give pause to the motion picture—which now it seems is to be put under the Brain Trust's microscope by Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, scholarly bearer of the banner for the Reverend Mr. William Harrison Short of Motion Picture Research Council fame. The pictures would be in a neat pickle if, after President Roosevelt's ninety day period of moral inquiry, it were faced with a measure paralleling the Food and Drug bill, by which the Secretary of Agriculture or any assistant, would be empowered to set up standards, pass on shapes and sizes of containers, the word content of labels—and if he does not like it, shut down the works! Under this bill the Secretary is the sole judge—and he is not even an elected official. The Brain Trust has proposed taking over everything but the birth rate, so far. What is the screen's destiny?

IN a news story from Memphis The Herald's itinerant editor discovers the Tennessee Valley as the land where all the abracadabra at the Administration meets in the activities of NRA, AAA, PWA, TVA, FFCA, RFC, and HOLC. This awful alphabetical assembly of U. S. bureaus conveys to one a terrifying suggestion that this Soviet-founded label habit may yet give us also an American OGPU with threats of exile of editors who commit ETAOIN to the village of SHRDLU in remote CMFWYP!

BUSINESS PICKUP

"The best it has been in years," was M. A. Lightman's description of theatre business in his territory, Tennessee and Arkansas, on the occasion of a visit to New York last week. The opinion of the former president of the MPTOA, long a southern exhibitor of note, should be of importance—and significant. . . .

TAX VICTORY

An indirect victory for theatre interests was scored this week in Missouri, when the state's one per cent sales tax, passed by the House and pending in the Senate, was declared unconstitutional. The measure had been urged by Governor Park. . .

FILM NEWS FIRST

The motion picture recently in Philadelphia scored a newspaper "beat" when the "Record," published by David Stern, inaugurated a policy of leading the entertainment section of the Sunday edition with film rather than "legitimate" news. Harry Goldberg, in charge of Warner publicity in the zone, is credited with effecting the innovation. . .

GAYNOR-FARRELL AGAIN

With the signing last week by Winfield Sheehan, in charge of production, of Charles Farrell, Fox again will present the once-famed team of Janet Gaynor and Farrell in two features, to go into work in 1934. The two were famous for their "7th Heaven," "Sunnyside Up," "Merely Mary Ann" and others. . .

"CHARLIE CHAN"

Some time ago Earl Derr Biggers, famous novelist, most noted for his yarns of Charlie Chan, Chinese detective of Honolulu, died. Last week, in Honolulu, passed the original of the popular Chan, as Chang Apana, 64, died. Thirty-five years ago Chang joined the police force, attracting attention—and Mr. Biggers with his feats of detective skill. As well known to film fans as mystery story readers was "Charlie Chan." . .

MUSICIANS ELECT

An easy victory was recorded last week by James Petrillo, as he was re-elected president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians. Angelo Cavallo and Nuncio de Pasquale were unsuccessful candidates for the post Mr. Petrillo retained. . .

INCREASED LOSS

Unpromising is the fiscal year statement released last week by United Artists Theatre Circuit, showing loss of $358,902 to August 31, after allowance for depreciation, interest, other charges. The previous year's loss was $194,715. . .

FRIEND IN NEED

The respect and good feeling with which theatre and exchangemen regarded Thomas D. Van Osten, secretary of the California Theatre Association and editor of the Pacific Coast Independent Exhibitor, was demonstrated last week in San Francisco when 20 men rushed to a local hospital, to offer their blood for a transfusion necessary to save the life of Mr. Van Osten, ill for several months. The effort in vain, Mr. Van Osten died, at the age of 60. . .

UNION BREACH WIDENED

The split between the cameramen's union on the Coast and the parent IATSE, widening, has assumed major significance as the American Society of Cinematographers applies for membership in the American Federation of Labor. Fearing the loss of its major hold on production, IATSE unions plan vigorous, nationwide opposition. . .

CAPTAIN "FLAGG" CASE

Through Belleau Wood and the now historical Chateau Thierry engagements fought then Captain Phillip Townsend Case of the Marines. His lieutenant, Laurence Stallings, wove the story of Captain Case into his memorable "What Price Glory," making him virtually the original of Captain Flagg. Early one morning this week, Major Case stepped from a curbing in New York, was struck by a fast-driven automobile, died in a hospital. . .

EXILED PRODUCER

Self-exiled from Hitlerite Germany, bound for Hollywood and a permanent post as Columbia Pictures director, is Joe May, notable Viennese producer, long identified with the German film. Accredited discoverer of Emil Jannings, Lya de Putti, Conrad Veidt and others, and for "The Way of All Flesh" Mr. May is chiefly known in this country. . .

DOUBLE BILL AGAIN

Federal action is in the offing against major distributors, declare members of the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry, stirred by insertion of a clause in Chicago contracts which is virtually a double-bill restriction. Monogram Sales Manager Edward Golden, in Milwaukee, is investigating spread of the practice. Independents claim the Chicago action in restraint of trade. The code has ignored duals. . .

SUIT SETTLED

Over long-distance telephone from New New York to Lincoln, Neb., this week was arranged settlement by 11 major distributors, defendants in the action of William N. Youngclaus, Madison, Neb., exhibitor, suing for $255,000 damages. The action was a sequel to the injunction last year obtained with respect to a zoning and protection agreement, said to be in restraint of trade. . .

PRODUCER PASSES

A long career, of dramatic criticism, reporting, theatrical production, acting, film casting direction ended last week for Adolph Klauber, when he succumbed after long illness in a Louisville hospital at the age of 54. Best known in New York as dramatic critic, Mr. Klauber was the husband of Jane Cowl, noted actress. . .

PARAMOUNT DRIVE

Responsibility for success of the Paramount Victory Drive, from January 1 to March 31, rests with Milt Kusell, Mike Lewis, Oscar Morgan and Charles Regan, named captains for east, west, south and central, respectively, by George J. Schaefer, sales head. . .

SELF-REGULATION ASSURED IN CODE; AUTHORITY MEETS ON DEC. 20

The Code— Up To Now

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

REFERRING to an article published in a recent issue, Mr. Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator, in an address before a group of Philadelphia territory exhibitors, declared:

"No one is entitled to criticize the code until it has been tested in actual operation."

To Mr. Rosenblatt's declaration we take decided exception for a number of reasons, among which is the fact that we are not aware that the National Industrial Recovery Act makes any provision for a suspension of the freedom of the press.

We wish to remind Mr. Rosenblatt that during the several months of hectic negotiations leading up to the formulation of a Code of Fair Practice for the Motion Picture Industry this publication and its colleague, Motion Picture Daily, scrupulously refrained from assuming a critical viewpoint, despite the incentive to do so afforded on the many occasions when the negotiations wandered along absurd and ridiculous by-paths.

THESE publications, although finding very little to be enthusiastic about did, in fact, seek in all practical ways to lend enthusiastic cooperation. They refrained, for instance, from comment on various blatant public assertions of General Hugh S. Johnson, although many of these seemed to cloud up the industry's horizon. Also they avoided discussion of Mr. Rosenblatt's leap-frog proclivities in hopping from one side of a question to the opposite, all within the space of time between two conferences. Further, they did not quarrel with Mr. Rosenblatt when he carefully ladled out misinformation to the press

WEEK'S CODE DEVELOPMENTS

The confused status of the motion picture industry's NRA code was somewhat clarified this week, with the following developments:

1. Self-rule of the motion picture business under the Code Authority was assured with the reversal of an "interpretation" of the Executive Order which originally gave General Hugh Johnson "dictatorial powers." Accordingly, the producer-distributors consented to the code.
2. General Johnson blamed Colonel Lea, his assistant, for recommending objectionable parts of the Executive Order, but Mr. Johnson's letter of transmissal to the President indicated that he made the suggestions.
3. Code to start actual functioning December 20 when Code Authority will hold its first meeting.
4. Administration began considering appointments to 400 posts on local zoning and clearance and grievance boards.
5. Sol A. Rosenblatt was appointed second government representative on Code Authority. Woman may be third appointee.
6. Administration took under advisement manner and method of collecting from industry between $350,000 and $400,000 for functioning of Code Authority.
7. Exceptions in Executive Order to writers were revoked.
8. NRA declared local complaints against non-compliance and against labor and trade practice provisions will be dealt with entirely within industry.

The motion picture industry under the NRA code will not be tied to the apron-strings of General Hugh Johnson's National Recovery Administration.

Reversal late last week by the Administration of the original interpretation of the Executive Order, which accompanied the Presidential approval of the document and bureaucratically enslaved the governing Code Authority by giving dictatorial powers over it to General Johnson, thereby removes the critical and impossible situation which jeopardized industry self-rule by its own code board.

As a result the producer-distributors have consented to the code.

Motion picture code functions actually will start on the afternoon of December 20, when the Code Authority will meet in New York for the first time.

The Administration has started to consider nominations for some 400 appointments which will be made to the 64 grievance and zoning and clearance boards which will operate in the 32 exchange cities. Suggestions from the industry will be welcomed, it was said at Washington.

Sol. A. Rosenblatt, NRA deputy in charge of amusement codes, was appointed the second Government representative to the Code Authority. Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, may complete the triumvirate of Government representation, although it was said that a woman may be named instead, in view of the nation-wide interest of women in motion pictures.

The Administration has taken under consideration the matter of raising in

JOHNSON "PASSES BUCK" TO COL. LEA

NRA Says Lea Asked President's Veto Right Be Explicitly Stated

General Hugh S. Johnson's National Recovery Administration, in an official communication released to the public over the weekend, "passed the buck" to Colonel Robert W. Lea, an assistant administrator, for the responsibility for the original suggestion that the President incorporate in his Executive Order accompanying the approved motion picture code, those paragraphs which threatened to jeopardize the industry's self-rule under the Code Authority. Specifically, they delegated to General Johnson such discriminatory and arbitrary powers over the Code Authority as virtually to place the business under the rule of the NRA.

Until General Johnson acknowledged a reversal late last week of the so-called "interpretation" of the Executive Order which placed each individual action of the Code Authority under his scrutiny, and possible veto, and which gave him the absolute power to remove at will any member of the Code Authority, the principal producer-distributor interests felt that the approved code created an actually confused status.

In the latest statement from NRA headquarters, the original source of the alarming suggestion was placed somewhere between Colonel Lea and the President. The statement said, in part:

"Colonel Lea recommended, he (Johnson) said, that the rights of the President to veto action of the Code Authority to protect the interests of all elements in the industry should be more explicitly stated. This was the reason why the Executive Order of the President reserved the right to disapprove any action of the Code Authority or any board appointed by it."

However, and regardless, in a letter of transmittal signed by General Johnson, which accompanied the code to the President, there appeared certain specific recommendations from General Johnson. Among these were the suggestions which eventually were found in the Executive Order, to confuse entirely the motion picture industry as to the self-regulatory aims of the NRA under code authorities.

General Johnson's letter of transmittal accompanying the code follows:

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Hearing on the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry in the United States was conducted in the Large Auditorium of the United States Chamber of Commerce Building in Washington, D. C., commencing on September 12, 1933, and ending on September 14, 1933, in accordance with the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

The following papers are included and annexed:

1. Code submitted.
2. Notice of Hearing.
3. Statement of Procedure.
4. Transcript of Record.
5. Report of the Deputy.

The Code for this industry was formulated by representative industrial groups, because there is in this industry no trade or industrial association fairly representative of the industry.

This industry embraces all activities connected with the production, distribution, and exhibition of motion pictures in theatres.

The three economic divisions of this industry are entirely interrelated with and dependent upon each other, and this Code, therefore, embraces every step taken by the industry from the production of motion pictures to their distribution and thereafter their exhibition before the public.

Cites Industry Importance

The industry assumes a position of unusual importance because of its far-reaching influence upon social and economic standards and conduct throughout the world. The total investment in all branches of the industry in the United States is estimated at $2,000,000,000, of which investment $95,000,000 is represented by production studios.

The labor provisions of the Code are, in my opinion, fair and equitable. Every class of labor in all the divisions of the industry is provided for as to minimum rates of pay and maximum hours of labor, the hours generally in the production field being 36 hours per week, and in the other divisions of the industry 40 hours per week.

Suggested Disapproval Power

Provision is made for safeguarding the working conditions of "extras," "free-lance" players, and actor employees in motion-picture vaudeville and presentation houses.

A Code Authority is provided for with respect to the administration of the Code, such Code Authority being named and consisting of five producers, distributors, and exhibitors with circuit theatre interests, and five producers, distributors, and exhibitors without circuit theatre interests.

I recommend such Code Authority, with the proviso, however, that the Administrator have the right upon proper showing to disapprove any of its acts or the acts of any Committees appointed by it; and that the Administrator further have the right to remove any member or when he declined to answer questions which were perfectly proper to the time and place.

But when the code was finally formulated and after it had been signed by the President and delivered to the industry as the law under which it must seek to live, then, it seemed to us, the very proper and logical moment for discussion had arrived. But Mr. Rosenblatt in precisely the manner he would expect if the Constitution of the United States had, in fact, been suspended declares that "no one is entitled to criticize the code until it has been tested in actual operation."

WHAT Mr. Rosenblatt does not see or is pleased to ignore is that all of the criticism we have published applied not only to the probable results of the code in actual operation but also—and most importantly—to the scheme as it was concocted. Irrespective of what the results might have been, the scheme itself was unsound, unreasonable and unfair.

As a good soldier, Mr. Rosenblatt is expected to go over the top when General Johnson cracks the whip, but no one was probably more surprised than Mr. Rosenblatt himself to discover finally that the motion picture industry code was eventually left, by virtue of the Executive Order, on a basis certainly never discussed and probably never thought of among the various principals participating in that interminable series of code conferences. If there was any trace of the principle of industry self-regulation in this we would like to have Mr. Rosenblatt point it out.

THE code set-up as it originally stood was the Administration's compromises with a list of special pleaders, each of whom had some ax to grind, and the industry was left unprotected to take the consequences. The industry was left subject to the expressed whims and fancies of the Administrator and, while it may be conceded for the purpose of this discussion only that the Administrator has no whims and fancies as far as the picture business is concerned, still he would have been kept well supplied by anyone who wanted to put something over on the picture business. The Eddie Cantor appointment which the Administration did not even trouble itself to wait on is a fair example.

The idea of a code authority which was not a code authority was simply and plainly a bureaucratic enslavement of a great industry and a great agency for influencing public thought. The question naturally comes to mind, why was this industry singled out for a strait-jacket? Did Washington decide that because of the propaganda and political uses to which the motion picture may be put it would be well to keep it dancing at the end of a stick?

HOWEVER, whether or not General Johnson and Mr. Rosenblatt thought anyone was entitled to criticize, the fact is that there was criticism and it was expressed directly to the President. The result is that the now famous Executive Order which the President's advisors allowed him to sign—and which we had the temerity to criticize—has virtually been thrown into the wastepaper basket, which course, incidentally, sets what would be a desirable precedent to have these same advisors follow.

The industrial code idea, as originally conceived and announced, contained enormous possibilities for the betterment of business and for the betterment of all persons connected with business. It was intended to be a plan of self-regulation under government supervision. Industries were expected to provide properly for their own regulation and in this effort the government was to stand behind them in full support and encouragement.

BUT a thousand self-styled experts laid hand on the original idea and each of them has sought to give it a twist to make it more nearly conform with his own particular notions and purposes. The result is that the original plan has become so weighted down with confusion, misunder-

Rosenblatt Attacks Critics of Code; Allied Threatens Fight

With an unprecedented number of exhibitor conventions for this time of year scheduled in various sections, the men in the field who sell motion pictures to the public are getting together to discuss the motion picture code which became effective last Thursday.

Many of these meetings have been repeatedly postponed on account of the delay in completion of the code. A number were held last week. More will be conducted before the turn of the year. However, all of them will hold discussions revolving around one moot point: the code.

Within one week, three such gatherings were addressed by Deputy Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt. Besides explaining clauses, Mr. Rosenblatt in each instance condemned those who criticize the code before it has had an opportunity to prove itself. "The code will correct a marked inequality of opportunity in the industry that has existed," he said at Columbus. In Philadelphia he said the code could be changed, with exemptions and exceptions. At Charlotte he appealed for unqualified support of the code.

At Grand Rapids on Wednesday, the managing committee outlined an "entirely different policy" for Allied in the future. Abram F. Myers, general counsel, declared they would fight fire with fire, which was taken to mean that validity of the code would be tested in court. Mr. Myers recommended three alternatives to the Michigan unit; to sign, assume financial responsibility and take what benefits are possible; do not sign at all, or sign with reservations that reserve the right to question the legality of the code or acts of the code authority.

In Hollywood, Ben Berinstein on Monday stirred up excitement at a meeting of 400 exhibitors when they received the impression he held authority for Mr. Rosenblatt to interpret code clauses affecting independent exhibitors. Mr. Rosenblatt, upon the wired request of a distributor, declared no one was authorized to make any statements on behalf of the Recovery Administration. Independent exhibitors of Southern California last week voted unanimously to make zoning and clearance retroactive when general zoning is set up under the code.

The annual convention of the Rocky Mountain Theatre Owners Association will be held in Denver December 19 and 20. The principal topic will be the code.

Independent Theatre Owners of Delaware met at Dover Sunday to clarify the code clauses.

At Indianapolis it was decided to hold the annual convention of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana on December 19.

Code operations were explained Friday to the MPTO of Maryland at Baltimore, by J. Louis Rome, chairman of its NRA committee. Harry Cluster, president, said terms regarding operators' hours were agreeable to his members.

Sidney E. Samuelson, president of Allied of New Jersey, expressed displeasure with the code and declared his unit would follow the decision made at Grand Rapids by the national directors. Other speakers there were Col. H. A. Cole, Texas; Nathan Yamins, a member of the code authority; Aaron Saperstein, Moe Horwitz and Abram F. Myers. The national managing committee decided Tuesday night to advise members to sign the code with the reservation that they "do not relinquish their legal rights," a decision which was amplified at the Wednesday session.

O'Reilly Calls New York Session

In New York it was announced that Mr. Rosenblatt will answer questions on the code at a meeting to be called for local exhibitors by Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the TOCC, the date to be set as soon as the code authority organizes.

The Independent Theatre Owners of America will sign the code by January 10 and test its fairness, Harry Brandt, president, said.

A strong plea for strict support of the instrument was made by Mr. Rosenblatt when he addressed 300 exhibitors of the North and South Carolina MPTO at Charlotte. Other speakers included Ed Kuykendall, president of the MPTOA, and M. A. Lightman, former president.

"I assure you that both President Roosevelt and General Johnson are anxious to be of constructive help to our industry," Mr. Rosenblatt said. "You are called upon to do your part."

Both Mr. Kuykendall and Mr. Lightman warned against "chiselers" and "cheaters" who, they asserted, would be driven from the industry's ranks.

The convention indorsed the code officially and Charles C. Picquet, re-elected president, said he would appoint an enforcement committee.

Other officers elected were: Albert Sotille, Charleston, first vice-president; W. T. Culpepper, Elizabeth City, second vice-president; Mrs. Walter Griffith, Charleston, secretary-treasurer.

"No More Cornering of Product"

In Columbus Mr. Rosenblatt refused to comment on the objections raised by the MPPDA to the Executive Order of the code. The MPPDA since has been assured of satisfaction on all their objections.

"The NRA is trying to deal industry a "New Deal," Mr. Rosenblatt said. "The code is a the industry an estimated $350,000 to $400,000 which will be required to finance the functioning of the Code Authority and the various boards and committees.

Vigorous protests by leaders of the industry against the provisions of the Executive Order of November 27, vesting in General Hugh S. Johnson, National Recovery Administrator, what were characterized as "dictatorial" powers, resulted in the issuance last Saturday of an "interpretation" of the order by General Johnson in which he acknowledged the industry was to be guided by the code authority without constant interference by the NRA.

Careful study of the Executive Order by members of the industry led to loud and immediate protests that it had been singled out for the most sweeping control by the Government of any industry codified, with the possible exception of oil and liquor, without the industry being subject to the very special problems which were held to make rigid control of oil and liquor desirable.

Under the Order, it was found, the Administrator had the power to veto decisions of the code authority and to change the membership of the authority at will.

Laid Case Before Roosevelt

Strongly determined not to admit the desirability or the necessity of intimate Administrative control, representatives of the industry, following a meeting of the MPPDA's executive committee in New York, December 4, asked the President for a hearing, which was granted. On December 8, a group of film leaders went to Washington and a special committee, consisting of Will H. Hays, J. Robert Rubin, vice president of MGM, and George J. Schaefer, vice president of Paramount Distributing Corporation, visited the White House and laid their case before President Roosevelt, General Johnson and Deputy Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt.

Later in the day, the entire group met with Deputy Rosenblatt at the Carlton Hotel, and the following day the matter was gone into further with General Johnson.

The special committee of the executives represented in support of the contention that the offending paragraphs of the Executive Order should be withdrawn, that in developing the code the industry had sought to establish a balance between the production and distribution phases in setting up the code authority. The question of contracts, it was pointed out, is a major phase of the industry; an effort had been made in the code to deal with problems involving contracts by setting up grievance boards, and it could not be agreed by the leaders at large that the Government was to be empowered to set aside decisions of the Code Authority or the boards.

The representatives of the leaders also protested the part of the Executive Order which exempted writers, authors and dramatists from the salary control provision, winning their point with respect to this also.

Although, following the conference at the White House on Friday, it was indicated by the Administrator that he would not recede from the provisions of the Executive Order, his announcement on the following day disclosed a direct about-face on his part, giving to the industry all that it had asked, thus assuring the motion picture of self-rule under the Code Authority.

Discussing the modification of the policy, General Johnson offered the explanation that the National Recovery Administration never had intended to create a board of review which would pass on all decisions, but that it felt it was necessary to watch the enforcement of the film code, at least during its initial stages.

There was no intention, he declared, of forcing a code upon the industry—a step which the Government has not yet found necessary in dealing with any industry—and the modifications adopted as a result of the conference, he said, had satisfied the industry.

Blame for the terms of the Executive Order was placed this week by General Johnson upon the shoulders of Colonel W. R. Lea, his executive assistant, who, Mr. Johnson said, had recommended that the rights of the President to veto decisions of the code authority, to protect the interests of all elements in the industry, should be explicitly stated.

Johnson Issues Memorandum

At the conclusion of the various conferences, General Johnson issued at his headquarters in Washington, a memorandum which said:

"The Administrator construes numbered paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of the Executive Order" (giving General Johnson the right to review and veto the work and decisions of the Code Authority and the right to replace Code Authority members at will), "as not creating any right of appeal from the determination of the Code Authority under Article II, section 4; Article II, section 10 (a); Article V, division d, part 9, and Article VI" (of the code itself), "or from the determination of the boards set up in Article VI, or in any sense creating the Administrator as a court of review of the action of these boards or the Code Authority in individual cases. These paragraphs refer to the right of the Administrator to inquire into the general course of the conduct of the mechanism of the code.

"The Administrator will exercise his discre-

COMPLETE CENSUS WILL BE STARTED

An exhaustive census of the business and status of amusement industries of the country, showing what has happened since 1929, is to be made by the Department of Commerce.

The proposed inquiry, to be financed by the Civil Works Administration, will be part of a general business survey to be conducted by the Census Bureau.

The study is to be made for the dual purpose of showing how and where the pennies in the consumers' dollars are spent and at the same time giving business men information which will serve as a basis for adjustments in current operating practices and in planning for the future.

The Code— Up To Now

standing, lost motion and cross purposes that it is now hardly recognizable.

The motion picture code, now stripped of the impossible conditions imposed in the Executive Order as result of representations made by industry leaders to the President last Friday, becomes the rule of the business. The document has been carefully and thoughtfully worked out by representatives of all important interests in the industry. While its history to date has largely been one of disappointment and travail there are still good and sufficient reasons for believing that it can and will contribute importantly to the betterment of the industry, as such, and that it will bring important benefits to all persons in the industry and to the public as well.

But the industry, to its eventual profit, may well realize that the accomplishment of these desirable ends depends very much more upon what the industry itself, rather than Washington, may do with the code.

Tri-State Acquires Ten Houses in Iowa and Nebraska

A. H. Blank's Tri-State Theatre Corporation, organized in Des Moines last month to take over all available houses in the Midwest, has acquired 10 houses in addition to eight in Des Moines and Omaha.

Included are the Princess and Capitol in Sioux City, Ia., the Rialto and Capitol in Newton, Ia., the Majestic and Capitol in Grand Island, Neb., the State and Paramount in Cedar Rapids, Ia., and the Paramount and Strand in Waterloo, Ia. Earlier it had taken the Strand, Garden, Paramount and Des Moines in Des Moines and the World, Orpheum, State and Paramount in Omaha.

Local Construction Ordinance Is Upheld

The local Milwaukee ordinance requiring a certain standard of construction for theatre builders has been upheld by the state supreme court in a case in which Edward Olson, operator, and Chris Caerdes, building owner, had appealed in an effort to contest closing of the Gem theatre.

The court ruled, however, that the city could not maintain its injunction against operation of the theatre and that penalties provided for violation of the ordinance were the only proper method of enforcing it.

at Memphis-on-the-Mississippi

FEDERAL largess flung to farms and labor and various public works has given the commonalty of this vast region some money to spend at the box office. Coincidentally a flow of rather better screen product is helping to bring the people back to the theatres.

The motion picture industry views this development with no little appreciation of the blessings of the day, while looking with considerable misgivings and uncertainty of promises and prospects for tomorrow in this Code-ordered world.

Meanwhile a storm of protest impends against a new race and color problem, raised by the code's regulation of wages, with no differentiation between black and white. The issue will doubtless soon be made loudly manifest in many lines of industry and mayhap will develop into some vehement expression in the next few months in and about Washington. The situation is indicated by the typical figures at a Memphis theatre where the pretty and well dressed blonde at the box office draws 18 dollars and now discovers that the black charwomen and the dusky dressing room maids who were prospering in pre-code days at $8 have been by legal necessity raised to the same $18. No Southerner, no matter how loyal a Democrat, can approve of that. The professors of the Brain Trust have, it seems, overlooked a problem in plain black and white and a potential source of considerable political difficulty.

Since New York and the North pay so large a proportion of the national taxes the Southerner can look with some equanimity on the vast public works projects, the farm relief and the like that bring money into the country, but he is socially offended with a federal process of making darkies "nigger rich" and upsetting the Negro labor situation for the whole of the Southland.

AGENCIES ADD PROBLEMS WHILE TACKLING OTHERS

This Memphis, stately and proud river capital, presides as the metropolis of a region where all the federal programs seem to meet and overlap. Here one finds in operation so many agencies that the mere enumeration of them suggests a type catalogue. To begin with, there's NRA, and RFC, and importantly AAA, and FFCA, or farm credit, and PWA, also HOLC, the Home Owners Loan Corporation, and lastly, TVA, Tennesee Valley Authority, meaning Muscle Shoals, etc.

Surfeited with the concerns of the Code and the business of Broadway, the editor of Motion Picture Herald rolled over the George Washington bridge and headed off on the motor trails into the United States a fortnight ago, to explore and adventure through the West and South to Hollywood and various Pacific Coast points. And now he turns up on the far border of Tennessee, still, it seems, not precisely escaping the Code.

Each of these agencies brings, it seems, as many problems as it essays to solve. The HOLC, for instance, is credited here with a large influence in depressing real estate values tremendously. There has been, the critics of the program assert, an effect of encouraging every delinquent mortgage borrower to determine upon a career and program of delinquency, airily aiming to let the owner of the mortgage hold the bag and seek out of it such federal nourishment as may be possible or take the inevitable losses and expenses of foreclosure.

The situation is being vigorously discussed hereabouts by the authoritative W. R. Herstein, a former president of the Memphis Chamber of Commerce, who ventures to forecast "a lenders' strike," which he sees as a disaster for both the borrowers and for business. "It has become the fashion in recent years," observes Mr. Herstein, "to roundly condemn nations which borrow money and fail to repay. Is such action any less reprehensible in an individual?" And he continues: "If one should wish to see a sight which in pathos equals the evicted home owner, let him stand at the paying teller's window in a mortgage broker's house and see the expression on the faces of some of the elderly mortgage holders when told that the interest due has not been paid and there is no money for them."

Here, as elsewhere across the nation, properties of all sorts have been thrown into salvage operation by bond holders' committees and the like.

But there is the sound of jubilee among the cabins in the cotton, and there's spending when the family gets to town, a lot of spending for lower grade merchandise and the lower movie admissions.

With $20 an acre for the cotton they plowed under and a Government-pegged price of ten cents a pound for the rather heavy crop from the remaining acres, many of the lesser planters have more money in actual cash than they have seen in years. Their political enthusiasm is vastly greater than that of the city taxpayers.

RECORDS IN HINTERLAND WITH "LITTLE WOMEN"

The current thrill of the industry hereabout is RKO's "Little Women," which is promising to hang up an all-time record, or a record for depression-time at least. It has just completed a two-week run at the Memphis Orpheum, independent, with a final gross somewhere above $14,000, which compares elegantly with the record for the house done with "Rio Rita" in the effulgent days of 1929 and the first flurry of sound excitement. And out in the hinterlands, even to the most remote of the hillbilly theatres, "Little Women" is proving the same phenomenal draw. Up in little Senath, Mo., where Lysle Richmond operates The Missouri for a town population of seven hundred persons, he did something over a hundred dollars in a day with a thirty cent admission, and not so far away, at Hayti, Mo., John Mohrstadt, whose theatre serves a town of 1,200, did $175 in a day. One-day business in small remote houses is equalling typical full week grosses.

The desk of R. V. Reagin, assistant branch manager for RKO, is piled high with reports and clippings from country newspapers on "Little Women." In this region it is getting a most remarkable attention from the small town papers usually indifferent to motion picture copy.

"That is one of the results of the impressive pressbook on 'Little Women,'" Mr. Reagin remarked. "The exhibitor seems to be able to walk into the country newspaper office with that press book and land space on page one while the editor is recovering consciousness."

GREAT CASTING ABILITY IN FILM ROW CHARM

All of Memphis' branch managers appear to have decided this week to take to the road As a group they can be complimented on their ability as casting directors, too. The feminine personnel of "film row" down in the 500 block of South Second Street is charmingly representative of the South and compares favorably with the highly decorative effects of some of New York's best home offices.

At Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer the excitement

DAY OF 'REDUCTIONS' DECLARED OVER

of the period is over "Dancing Lady," in which Joan Crawford and Fred Astaire and Franchot Tone seem to be pleasing the customers of the cotton belt extremely. And, says M. L. Basse, office manager in the Memphis branch, "The Prizefighter and the Lady" slipped in on them and is doing more than any salesman promised.

What with ten cent cotton and the local upturn, things are so much better along film row that the day of "reductions and adjustments" is declared over.

Up at Jackson, where E. L. Drake operates the Paramount for Malco—which means M. A. Lightman—"Dancing Lady" did a husky gross. Mr. Drake is a showman of long experience, and it is said long personal profits, in the region. He sold out to Publix when the selling was very good, in 1929. When in reminiscent mood he can tell tales of the early days, going back to a boyhood in Aberdeen, Mississippi, with Ed Kuykendall, the neighbor kid who went off with a circus to be an acrobatic clown and presently invaded our industry of the motion picture as a projection machine operator so skilled that in time he acquired the house.

Jackson is a railway shop center, with the shops mostly idle. The rail situation is not looking up, and with the public works drives extending the motor highways of the region the prospect for the rails is not brighter. The money that comes to Jackson these days is from tobacco and cotton.

CLUBWOMEN HELP FILMS AT MEMPHIS

The philosopher of film row in Memphis is the seasoned W. E. Sipe, otherwise "Bill" Sipe of Universal, who is rubbing his hands in glee these days over "Only Yesterday" and the local enthusiasm for Universal's newly discovered Margaret Sullavan. Miss Sullavan, being of Norfolk, in Virginia, gets a big hand as a daughter of the South all through the South, but additionally a good press where she made fame for herself in the roadshow tour of Brock Pemberton's stage show, "Strictly Dishonorable," some three years ago. Miss Sullavan was then understudy to Margaret Terry, and in the home town appearance at Norfolk, for exploitation purposes, was put in the role. It will be recalled that in the course of the action the fair lady is, or was, practically undressed bit by bit on stage. Miss Sullavan's indulgent mother and somewhat less indulgent and highly indignant father were in the audience. There was a good show that night both sides of the footlights. Here in Memphis Miss Terry became ill and was operated upon for appendicitis, while Miss Sullavan played the leading role to the immense enthusiasm of the local critics. Today, the critical enthusiasm for Miss Sullavan in "Only Yesterday" is being frequently reflected in the columns of Harry Martin of the Commercial Appeal, and Jack Bryan of the News Scimitar.

Mr. Sipe takes occasion to remark upon the fact that here in Memphis the motion picture is getting constructive help from the clubwomen, escaping many of the ancient ills of the days when clubwomen were synonymous with censorship. The active leader of the Better Films Council is Mrs. Lawrence Akers, who also brings to bear the influences of the pretentious and powerful Nineteenth Century Club, a women's organization.

"We were unable to get a downtown first run for 'Be Mine Tonight,'" remarks Mr. Sipe. "But we were able to enlist the interest of Mrs. Akers and her associates, with a result that we played the Linden Circle, a suburban house, for a run of thirteen days and a better gross than could have been expected downtown. The intelligent element of Memphis will support good pictures."

VAUDEVILLE COMEBACK REGARDED POSSIBLE

Among the interesting able showmen of Memphis is Roy Pierce, manager of the Orpheum through the vicissitudes and difficulties of the last five years. He arose in the Orpheum circuit in Omaha on the wild Missouri river, the town of "Old Bill" Paxton, Tom Dennison, Edward Rosewater, and the still effective and celebrated Colonel Theodore McCullough, for so many years managing editor of The Bee. This rambling editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD can well remember the day when in Omaha, what with the influence that Tom Dennison, undercover boss, brought to bear in behalf of Roy Pierce, there was not spare room in all of Omaha for a one-sheet or a snipe. Pierce had all the outdoor showings there were.

Mr. Pierce sees vaudeville as a victim of its interior abuses, but with a possibility of a comeback of important value in a limited number of locations.

The Memphis Orpheum is now independent, being leased by "G.C.S." from the bondholders. "G.C.S." is the brand of what looms as a new circuit possibility. It is a coalition of Chicagoans—Goldberg, lawyer, Courshon, sound equipment, and Solomon, money. Their initial step was the acquisition of three Chicago neighborhood theatres which they appear to have rehabilitated successfully—the Portage, the Admiral and the Drake.

ONLY PLACE TO GO FOR SUNDAY SHOW

Memphis is a six-day showtown, with Sunday tightly closed in "Bible Belt" fashion. But there's a picture show every Sunday night at the Hotel Peabody, the pride of Memphis. It appears to incur no exhibitor opposition, since the pictures presented are always selected from among those which have played both first and subsequent runs in the city. The admission is free, but only to those who have just paid $1.50 a plate for Sunday night dinner. The idea is said to have originated with the operators' union, looking to give a one-night job to two projectionists and some portable equipment. The project is prospering. It is the only place to go in Memphis on Sunday night.

LOWER ELECTRICAL COSTS IN OFFING

The hydro-electric developments of the Tennessee Valley project bring promise of a possibility of considerably reduced electrical costs for motion picture theatres. For even a lesser center, like Grenada, it is estimated that electric bills may be cut as much as $75 a month for a medium sized house. There is a large pother of political excitements in various communities over the issue of the establishment of municipal distribution plants to be supplied with power from Muscle Shoals and other developments to follow in the Valley as opposed to corporation utilities plants.

SUPPRESSED CURSING OF THE BLUE EAGLE

Incidentally, the revival of activities at Muscle Shoals is causing some suppressed cursing of the Blue Eagle among the few Memphis contractors who have projects in hand. Last Monday one contract using twelve carpenters and ten masons found that only three were reporting for work. The rest had departed on Saturday night for Muscle Shoals and Uncle Sam's high pay. There would be a dearth of skilled labor in several lines if Memphis had anything to do.

INDUSTRY WINNING ITS OWN FIGHT TO PREVENT OBJECTIONABLE COPY

Acknowledgment of Improved Tone in Three Weeks of Advertising Advisory Council Comes from Varied Sources

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

The motion picture appears, at last, to have a workable plan of its own for accomplishing the elimination of objectionable advertising, publicity and exploitation, some of which, in recent months, has provoked special attention.

At the conclusion of the first three weeks of what seems to be a sincere and conscientious effort by the various advertising departments to attain this purpose in the industry without any of the troublesome meddling of the "blue-nose" type of professional reformer, there is now evident an undeniable improvement in the moral condition of the printer's type and the engraver's half-tone with which motion pictures are merchandised by the distributor to the box-office of the country, and by the exhibitor to the public at large. Acknowledgements of this improved tone have already been forthcoming from sources both within the trade and elsewhere.

The Means Toward the End

Realizing that the motion picture's own advertising code, as drafted in June of 1930, had not been sufficiently effective, and apparently indicating an honest concern for the fact that the publicizing of their product was intended not only for jaded adults in need of diversification, but also as an appeal to America's educational and home environment, virtually all of the heads of the leading motion picture corporations met on the afternoon of November 17th, 1933, as the executive committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, and upon the call of Will H. Hays, president, for the purpose of effecting remedial measures. And when the hour of adjournment arrived, the industry had in its possession an advertising code with adequately effective and practical enlargements of its self-regulatory provisions.

Purpose of the Council

In expanding the workings of the 1930 advertising code, the executives thereby agreed, individually and collectively to cause to be submitted, without any exceptions, all advertising and exploitation and publicity material to an Advertising Advisory Council, headed by J. J. McCarthy, who, by way of identification, has purchased more motion picture advertising space down through the years than any other individual. Mr. McCarthy's work on the Council consists principally of an application of the companies' new advertising regulations.

The Advertising Advisory Council is exactly what the name implies, having been created, not as a puritanical body to rule indiscriminately with an iron hand in the manner of the "blue-nose" professional reformer, but to render service and advice in connection with motion picture advertising and publicity, to the point of eliminating the objectionable features in all forms.

The action of the advertising departments in cooperating with the Advertising Advisory Council to the point of eliminating the objectionable features in all forms of motion picture advertising "is further effort by the producers to make certain the greatest care and good taste in their advertising. We believe this amplified plan will help to that end." —WILL H. HAYS.

The Council is definitely not a censoring body. As a matter of fact, Mr. McCarthy, its guiding factor, has, since 1912, been conducting an independent and rather aggressive campaign against censorship.

Obviously the Council could not function without the unstinted cooperation of the advertising and publicity directors on both coasts, and the encouraging accomplishments witnessed during the first three weeks of its operation are due, according to Mr. McCarthy, solely "to the whole-hearted and unselfish cooperation of advertising heads and to the aid of the executives of the companies, who have devised the machinery for creating this new standard."

Strangely, many of the independent companies have voluntarily submitted to the plan.

One of the reasons for the apparently unsuccessful operation of the advertising code of 1930 was the fact that it provided for the submission of copy to the Hays advertising counsellors only when the distributor's advertising director was in doubt. Thus, there were some nine or ten varying opinions of what constitutes improper copy, and, as a result, objectionable advertising appeared quite frequently; usually accidentally, sometimes purposely.

In enlarging the 1930 document, the industry has eliminated the uncertainties of submission, changing it so that the advertising people now agree to submit every still photograph, every piece of advertising and exploitation copy, all cuts, mats and press books, poster sketches and any other matter, to the one medium of authority. At once, Mr. McCarthy's Council will complete inspection and inform the advertising department accordingly.

"If we feel that the material is improper or objectionable, it is rejected," he said.

When the executive committee of the MPPDA decided, unanimously, to ask the

J. J. McCarthy, Council Head, Has Fought Censorship Since 1912; Advertisers Agree to Submit Each Piece of Copy

Advertising Advisory Council to cooperate with the advertising authorities of their companies, they appointed a temporary "steering" committee, composed of John C. Flinn, representing the AMPA; Howard Dietz, of MGM, and Charles Einfeld, of Warners, to establish the contact with the Council and to work out with it a modus operandi for the handling of the copy.

Industry Committed Under Code

While the motion picture industry as a whole committed itself to proper advertising under the NRA code, which became law on December 7, the advertising directors actually set up the machinery to asure such standards on November 18, when they first contacted the Advisory Council.

The advertising clause in the NRA code, which legally binds all members of the industry, is to the point, and follows:

The industry pledges its combined strength to maintain the best standards of advertising and publicity procedure. To that end the industry pledges itself and shall adhere to the regulations promulgated by and within the industry to assure the attainment of such purposes.

"Not a Puritanical Effort"

"This new movement with which the motion picture industry has identified itself is being done entirely within its ranks, by its own members and methods," explained Mr. McCarthy. "It could not be done without the will of the executives and their advertising officials.

"Their willingness to work strenuously and unselfishly for the attainment of the purpose which they have in mind obviously would give the lie to any possible, highly inaccurate belief that this might be a puritanical effort."

"We are convinced that we are definitely headed in the right direction," Mr. McCarthy continued. "Compliments to those in the industry who are participating in the movement, and coming from sources in the business and from many others not connected with it, would indicate that there is already an improved tone reflected.

"There does not exist a single doubt in the minds of any of us that this job can be done, and done speedily and by ourselves."

From a first hand study of the material which is now being submitted to the Council for inspection, it appears that convincingly corrective measures already are being taken at the very sources of conception. Out of some 5,000 to 7,000 stills submitted to the Council, and dozens of pieces of advertising copy, press books and whatnot, there have been but a few rejections.

Discussing the economic advisability of clean advertising copy and proper campaigning, Mr. McCarthy said this week that he believes "there are more people of the country today who do not patronize motion picture theatres than those who do." In this connection, he continued, "I wonder if objectionable advertising and exploitation are not keeping these customers away from the box-offices. If this be true, it appears quite reasonable to suggest that we go after that vast audience of inactive picturegoers, and the very first method that should be used is clean advertising, to appeal directly to the many thousands of decent living families who have virtually been driven from our theatre doors by advertising of bad taste."

Mr. McCarthy also emphasized the unsoundness of promiscuously and excessively injecting sex angles into the campaigns of those dozens of productions where the theme itself, or its pictorial treatment, does not warrant it. "Frequently," he said, "the picture is not half as bad as it is painted."

At this point, Mr. McCarthy passed on another thought: "There are hundreds of nudes in the art museums of the country, but they are not being commercialized."

Flinn Explains Idea on Coast

In order to explain to Hollywood the idea of the new movement to bolster advertising standards and to outline the manner in which all of the companies will cooperate with the Council, John C. Flinn was asked to travel westward from New York to Hollywood to confer with the studio publicity directors. Mr. Flinn frankly told them that "If we do our own cleaning up we are all right, but we will have 'bluenoses' doing it for us if we don't, with Washington nodding approval."

"There will be no compromises, as in the past," Mr. Flinn added.

Showmanship and the New Order

There appears to be plenty of tangible evidence that the authority to whom have been delegated the duties of cooperating with the advertising departments in raising the level of advertising, is a well-schooled showman, who knows showmanship values not only in the product, but also, and equally as important, in the merchandising requisites of successful box-office performances.

"Jeff" McCarthy knows what it's all about, having been identified with and considerably responsible for the box-office careers of some of the big successes.

In the past sixteen years, Mr. McCarthy has handled advertising and publicity and the showmanship treatment of "Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Way Down East," "Covered Wagon," "Big Parade," "Ten Commandments," and others.

Out of eight motion picture roadshow attractions, playing in legitimate theatres, usually small, and only two performances a day, Mr. McCarthy's campaigns got some $40,000,000 in admissions from the country's box-offices. Of this sum, the staggering total of $27,000,000 was turned over to the companies as actual net profits.

Nor was that the total box-office earning of these eight productions. They were then retailed at the regular subsequent runs, playing to popular prices, and, from 1915 to 1925, they returned another $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 in admissions.

And All With Clean Ads

"Not in one single instance did we resort to objectionable advertising in the merchandising of these productions," declared Mr. McCarthy.

Nor did Mr. McCarthy stint on advertising at any time during his long and successful career as a motion picture showman de luxe. He always budgeted 60 per cent of the expenses allotted to each road company for advertising and exploitation purposes, a considerable portion of it to newspapers.

He signed with General Outdoor Advertising the largest single billboard contract ever negotiated anywhere in this country. This was for the single Astor theatre Broadway engagement of "The Big Parade." The billing ran for 90 weeks, at $1,500 weekly, totaling $135,000 for billboard advertising alone. This still holds the record.

"No Place for Objectionable Ads"

"Do you believe that equally as successful merchandising campaigns can be used in this period without the aid of so-called 'spicy' injections?" Mr. McCarthy was asked.

"Objectionable advertising has no place in the motion picture industry," he replied. "Except for the possible influences of current business conditions, motion pictures can still be sold to the public just as decently and just as profitably. I have never believed that the merchandising of sex is essential to good box-office results."

In this connection, the motion picture industry currently has on its hands tangible evidence that good, clean advertising copy, aided by decent illustrations and backed by proper showmanship qualities, can be highly successful, and popular with the public. "Little Women" and its treatment in both trade and outside publications offer such evidence. During its current single run in New York, where, according to one school of thought, bawdy advertising is necessary, "Little Women" will play to at least 750,000 persons at the Music Hall at Radio City, and continuing at the New Roxy. Yet, the campaign used is undeniably the most unobjectionable of any staged in years.

The Modus Operandi on Copy

The Advertising Advisory Council has set up independent headquarters on the fifteenth floor at 28 West 44th street, New York, where it inspects all material which is conceived in the East. Stills and other advertising-publicity matter originating in California will be reviewed in Hollywood by a subdivision of the Council, which was organized two weeks ago by Joseph I. Breen. This second organization will cooperate directly with the advertising and publicity personnel at the studios.

The New York headquarters of the large theatre circuits will pass on the idea of the new plan to managers of their properties in the field, with instructions to act accordingly. It is hoped, thereby, that the hundreds of circuit properties will set an example for local unaffiliated operations, besides raising the level of their own standard.

Physical Handling Practical

A study of the physical method of operating the plan, made this week at close inspection, reveals that the machinery and actual contacts between the Council and the advertising men have been so set up as to eliminate any possibility of holding up copy and other matter, thereby assuring the advertising departments of meeting their "deadlines" with printers and engravers.

The Council receives practically all material in proof form, reading every word in each press book; seeing first copies of still photographs; inspecting the original drawings for posters and each piece of ad copy.

Local advertising by theatres in the field eventually will be purged completely of any form of obscenity. With the elimination of material of this nature at their sources in New York and in Hollywood, exhibitors no longer will be able to get questionable illustrations for mats or in lobby displays, because the negatives of such stills and the drawings of such characters will have been destroyed before they can leave the two chief points of distribution. However, there still are some books in use in the field which were published prior to the launching of the new movement.

One of the immediate effects of the inspection of stills, principally in Hollywood, will be the end of much of the off-color shots which have found their way into the columns of the lower type of fan publications, which, unlike the better class fan periodical, has been concentrating of late on over-emphasized sex in illustrations, and thereby doing great harm to the industry.

Lester Thompson, who has had vast experience in motion picture publicity and showmanship, is assistant in New York to Mr. McCarthy. The Council also has on its staff a newspaper expert.

MOVEMENT WITHIN INDUSTRY'S RANKS

". . . This new movement with which the motion picture industry has identified itself is being done entirely within its ranks, by its own members and methods. It could not be done without the will of the executives and their advertising officials. Their wholehearted cooperation and support during these first three weeks certainly indicates that they have the volition."—J. J. McCARTHY, chief of Advertising Advisory Council.

AL COHN—A BIG MAN IN A BIG JOB

New Collector of Customs at Los Angeles Was Scenarist of First Talking Picture, "The Jazz Singer," But That's Only One Phase of a Real Progressive's Career

by GUS McCARTHY of MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S Hollywood Bureau

A big man was needed for a big job, so Uncle Sam reached into motion picture ranks and selected one of its ace scenarists. Alfred A. Cohn, to be Collector of Customs at Los Angeles.

Southern California, coastal and western states know Al as one of the original well known figures on the Franklin D. Roosevelt bandwagon. The literary world accords him acclaim for the co-authorship of "Gun Notches" and his forthcoming "Take The Witness." He will always be remembered as the scenarist of the industry's first talking picture, "The Jazz Singer."

You're going to hear a lot about Al Cohn in the future, so let's take a look at the man and see what kind of a fellow he is. Political and governmental affairs always have interested him. A progressive, with little consideration for hide-bound precedent, he has lived always in an environment of progress. Originally a Chicago reporter in his teen years, public affairs fascinated him and he concentrated his talents on analyzing and discussing politics.

A powerful writer, his experiences and studies in local affairs giving him broad vision and keen insight, he was an editor at 18. Interluding his reportorial career with a four year enlistment in the U. S. Marine Corps, Mr. Cohn hopped back into hectic journalistic life as the Associated Press correspondent covering the ill-starred Madero revolution in Mexico.

Discovering a new country, the scion of Freeport and Chicago, Illinois, became a westerner and as owner and publisher of a Globe, Arizona, newspaper, he took a prominent part in that territory's battle for statehood recognition and was elected secretary to the president of the state's Constitutional Convention, where he exerted tremendous influence in framing Arizona's enlightened organic law.

While a political leader enjoys plenty of hard work and lots of glory, sometimes, the pay check is seldom hefty, and Mr. Cohn, convinced that Arizona was headed in the right direction, packed up his portable and moved on to California, as political writer for the A. P. under John B. Elliott, a man who years later was to influence his life greatly.

Arrives with Motion Picture

Al Cohn and real moving pictures arrived in California about the same time in 1915. The entertainment marvel was just emerging from its swaddling clothes and giving promise of future greatness, and being on the ground flood, he became associate editor of Photoplay, pioneer fan magazine. There was much more glamour and excitement, and lots more money in the picture business and Mr. Cohn quickly became associated with the greatest of them all, Mary Pickford.

As the screen outstripped itself, it found that stories was its greatest need, and who should be better qualified to write them than that legion of newspapermen who knew so much of the drama, tragedy and comedy of life. Al Cohn was one of the first to sense the need and opportunity and he embarked upon a career which someone chose to term scenarist.

It's hard to get him to talk about himself, but, as another Al says, "Let's look at the record." That's not so bashful. Go down the list and see how much Al Cohn has meant to the screen. Although comedy and mystery predominate in his contributions, his accomplishments are marked with versatility. Screen plays on the first "Cohens and Kellys," "His People," "We Americans," "The Cat and the Canary," and a host of others, just fitted him for his most illustrious effort, the screen play on the entertainment-revolutionizing "The Jazz Singer." Glory enough there for any man, but only incentive to him as "Feet First," "Sweethearts On Parade," "Holy Terror," "Cisco Kid" and "Mystery Ranch" clicked off his typewriter. Then a hiatus, of which more later, and he did "Son of a Sailor" and "Harold Teen," soon-to-be-released Warner features.

A proud record, which more boastful men than Al Cohn would be content to rest upon. But that hiatus. Busy as he was, he always kept one eye peeled on the political situation. Iowaized Southern California had always been a Republican stronghold where the proverbial snowball was much more fortunate than a Democrat.

But when Franklin D. Roosevelt announced his presidential candidacy something happened. John B. Elliott, Mr. Cohn's old boss, was Democratic state chairman. He saw the chance his party had been awaiting for years. Calling to his side the man he knew could deliver, Al Cohn, Mr. Elliott and Woodrow Wilson's old right-hand man, William Gibbs McAdoo, went to work and California amazed the nation by turning its back on a transplanted native son and overwhelmingly casting its electoral vote for Roosevelt.

A Mighty Factor

Al Cohn was a mighty factor in that surprising upheaval. The new Administration, quick to recognize his worth, sought to bestow some honor upon him. High ranking posts were proffered, but Al Cohn, who as a boy years ago had dedicated himself to the cause of progress, considered that he had had reward enough in helping to make the New Deal possible. Once before, as a Marine, he had helped his country. Later he had helped the state of Arizona. And he had refused honors.

But the Collector of Customs post called for a big man, intelligent, diplomatic, resourceful. Candidates were not lacking, but none measured up. Then the president ordered. On December 1, Al Cohn swore that he would faithfully and to the best of his ability administer the office. The guarantee of that is his entire career of making good.

When you talk to Al Cohn, you realize what a human sort he is. He's regular. He knows and appreciates his new responsibilities, but they're not weighing upon him unduly. He's promised to do the best he can do and just to show you how human he is, consider his own words: "You know, precedent never meant a thing to me. But once before, quite a while back, a fellow named Nathaniel Hawthorne was a sort of Collector of Customs at Boston. He made good at the job and it also marked the beginning of a literary career that made him quite a figure in the world of letters. Who knows, maybe precedent will repeat itself and this job may be the beginning of my literary career. Anyway, I intend to keep on writing."

Abramson Suit Against M.P.P.D.A. is Settled

The suit of Ivan Abramson against the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and a number of large companies was settled last Friday in New York "out of court." The suit had charged anti-trust law violations.

Representatives of the defendants declared the suit was settled for a sum "less than it would have cost to try the suit." Mortimer Hayes described the settlement as "wholly satisfactory to the plaintiff."

WARNER PROFIT FOR QUARTER $100,000

Estimated Return After Amortizing and Fixed Charges Contrasts with $1,766,000 Loss for Same Period Last Fiscal Year

With announcement that for the first quarter of the new fiscal year, ended November 25, Warner Brothers would show a profit of $100,000—compared with a loss of $1,766,000 for the same period last year—the annual meeting of Warner stockholders was held in Wilmington Monday. Six directors of the company, constituting a majority of the board, were re-elected.

Directors re-elected are Harry M. Warner, president; Albert Warner, vice-president and treasurer; Jack L. Warner, vice-president; Abel Carey Thomas, secretary and general counsel; Waddill Catchings and Henry A. Rudkin.

Only the preferred stockholders took part in the election as the common stock had no voting power, due to the fact that the company passed four dividends on preferred, giving this stock the right to vote for a majority board. The directors re-elected received 86,939 of such votes.

$100,000 After Amortizing

The highlight of the meeting was the announcement of Samuel Carlisle, the comptroller, that the reports of the company for the first fiscal quarter, ended November 25, while not yet complete, showed that a profit of not less than $100,000 after amortization and fixed charges would be assured. This contrasted with a loss of $1,766,000 for the first quarter of last year.

John P. Laffey of Wilmington, a director, elected last year and former counsel for E. I. duPont deNemours & Co., told the stockholders that since his election he had carefully inquired into the company's affairs and had found charges of mismanagement and irregularities to be "absolutely groundless." At last year's meeting, Mr. Laffey was elected to the board at the insistence of large Wilmington stockholders to represent them.

"Since my election I have attended all the monthly meetings of the directors, but one," Mr. Laffey said. "I have paid close attention to the corporation's business. I accepted election because of a personal interest and because I desired to inquire into the wild charges of irregularity and mismanagement.

"Let me now assure you on my personal honor that nothing has been done at these directors' meetings by the three Warner brothers, or anyone else, that was not entirely proper and regular, and in every way respectable.

Stock Value 500 Per Cent

"Since the last annual meeting the stock of the company itself has increased 500 per cent in value, and the pictures it has exhibited have been well received.

"The possibility of Warner Brothers 'coming back' is just as good as the possibility of any other companies recovering. The company is now making wonderful progress.

"I can tell you that your company is well managed and that the interests of the stockholders are being as well conserved as the interests of the stockholders of any other company when we take into consideration the troublesome times through which we are passing.

"The directors have considered nothing except on its merits. There has been no evidence of any disposition on the part of the directors to gouge or to take unfair advantage of the stockholders."

Hugh F. Gallagher of Wilmington made a motion that Mr. Laffey be given a vote of thanks for the efforts he has made to obtain information for the stockholders. The motion was unanimously adopted.

Opposes Publicizing Salaries

Mr. Laffey then turned the chair over to Charles S. Guggenheimer of New York, one of the directors. Mr. Guggenheimer concurred in Mr. Laffey's statements and, after Stephen L. Lesher of Philadelphia, one of the largest individual preferred stockholders, made a motion that an itemized list of the salaries of officers and directors of Warner Bros. and its subsidiaries be provided, he pointed out that Mr. Carlisle, the comptroller, was present and could give the figures concerning the salaries of the three Warners. He said he did not think the information as to the salaries of others should be made public to competitors, who would take advantage of it.

None of the three Warners was present at the meeting.

Mr. Lesher argued that it seemed to be the order of the day for various companies to provide such information. He said he is in sympathy with and favors fair salaries.

Mr. Guggenheimer then pointed out that the year past the Warner company lost two of its valuable men because their salaries became known, and others nearly doubled what they had been receiving. These two men were assumed to be Darryl F. Zanuck and George Arliss.

Two other stockholders from the floor then agreed with Mr. Guggenheimer that it would be dangerous policy to reveal salaries so that competitive companies would have the opportunity to bid for the services of those persons mentioned.

Waived Claims

Mr. Carlisle announced that for the six weeks subsequent to March 4, in which period was included the bank holiday, the three Warner brothers called to receive their salaries, but waived their claims to any payments not obtained. In addition they collectively are receiving $5,000 weekly. They have waived all salary claims under their contract, which allows them $10,000 a week, collectively.

Following Mr. Carlisle's statement, Mr. Lesher withdrew his motion.

About 75 stockholders attended in person and approximately 32,000 proxies from other stockholders were received.

The board will meet in New York December 19 to reorganize.

The official figures of the stockholders' meeting showed that 2,335,202 shares of the common stock out of approximately 3,600,000 shares were represented. There are 103,107 shares of preferred stock, out of which 86,939 were represented.

Stanley Company Shows Net Loss of $2,439,104

Net loss of the Stanley Company of America for the year ending August 26, was $2,439,104, after depreciation, amortization, interest and other charges.

At the end of the previous year the net loss was $1,745,333.

MOST TRAGICALLY ACCURATE PROPHECY

With a rather intriguing introductory aside to the effect that his comment consists of "a few useless reflections," Roy W. Adams of the Mason theatre at Mason, Mich., writes to Motion Picture Herald as follows:

"Nomination for the most tragically accurate prophecy of 1933: the editorial in the Motion Picture Herald of August 5, mentioning a 'Germanic type of bird with one foot in a buzz saw and the other on a third rail.'

"The most sensible comment on exploitation: 'What's Wrong with Ballyhoo,' by Charles Bassin, in the Motion Picture Herald of November 25.

"Why do they try to tell us that 'Alice in Wonderland' is Charlotte Henry's first work in pictures? Nearly two years ago we had 'Lena Rivers,' with a little girl with the same name, face and 'figger' as 'Alice,' doing a swell job as a sweet, unsophisticated little girl impersonating a sweet, unsophisticated little girl."

P. A. Powers Announces New Cartoon Color Series

The New York supreme court recently gave authorization for the examination to be held prior to trial, which will be in February. H. William Fitelson is counsel for Amity.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THE opening, recently, of Alfred Dunhill's new "million dollar" tobacco shop, awefully modern, in Rockefeller Center, brought out many a yarn about the tastes of some prominent Dunhill smokers. Mr. Dunhill is tobacconist by special appointment to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, also Roxy, George Arliss, Adolph Zukor, Merlin Hall Aylesworth, Richard Dix, Douglas Fairbanks, Clive Brook and Rex Beach.

Many have their own special humidor at Dunhill's place on Fifth Avenue, and some won't smoke a cigar until it has aged at least ten years. Others are holding cigars to smoke twenty years from now. As with wine, they believe the aging process improves the flavor.

Paramount's Adolph Zukor, Albert Wiggins, Owen Davis and David Warfield are among the well-known who will smoke cigars only when they have been aged for many years.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, who is a heavy purchaser, pays Dunhill $60 the hundred for his cigars. Douglas Fairbanks pays $65 the hundred for a very long, blunt cigar. George Arliss is one of the few who has a made-to-order cigar, an exclusive personal cigar. He wanted something like the old two-for-five stogies which he used to smoke, but which can no longer be bought. So he had a Dunhill specialist put him up the nearest approach to them possible, and for this he pays a good stiff price.

Dunhill's usually sell their most expensive cigarets to movie actresses. Quite a lot pay $10 the hundred. Screen players also buy more expensive trick smoking gadgets than any other class. They buy them as gifts—not for their sweethearts, but for their favorite cameramen, says Dunhill.

To those showmen in the field who are not up on their Odobenidae it may be added that an Odobenusrosmarus is a walrus. Anyway, Billy Ferguson sent all the way to Iceland for one of these whale horses, for use in "Eskimo" exploitation. It got as far as Hamburg, Germany, and passed out. But they completed the shipment of several tons of Arctic mussels on which a walrus feeds. With so many mussels around, Billy is beginning to feel like Hercules.

Administrator Johnson told Capitol Hill newsmen that a yarn in a Washington paper regarding the $5,780 a year salary of a young woman assistant was "hitting below the belt."

The piece told a "success story within the ranks of the NRA," and said that Miss Frances M. Robinson had risen in six months from a $25 a week stenographer to a position as NRA Administrative Assistant, with a salary of only five dollars weekly below that of the Administrator.

General Johnson answered this with the remark that instead of being a $25 a week stenographer, Miss Robinson had a record as a successful executive in the Radio-Keith-Orpheum organization.

Radio-Keith-Orpheum told us that they never heard of Miss Frances Robinson and that no such name appears on any of their payroll records.

Hurrah, there'll be no more liquor raids,
Drinkey, drinkey, parley vous.

JUST as we had finished writing the preceding piece, the postman delivered to us the following military communication from Terry Ramsaye, who is marching from the Atlantic to the Pacific for winter maneuvers along the studio seaboard:

"I felt rather out of it for a while, the way military honors were breaking along Broadway, but I can now announce that I have been made a Colonel—it was all so sudden, just as I handed four bits to the headwaiter at the Andrew Jackson Hotel in Nashville, Tennessee. For six bits I could have been made a General, but I felt that would be taking advantage of Colonel Charles Pettijohn (Kentucky) and Colonel Colvin Brown (Puerto Rico)."

APROPOS of the salary control clause in the code, which was suspended but is still in the document, is Alexander Woollcott's blandly-told story about the sentimental bricklayer who, from the first, had worked in the building of the National Cathedral, at Washington. When his good wife died, the authorities at the Cathedral were embarrassed by his request that she be sealed within one of its crypts—along with Woodrow Wilson, Admiral Dewey, and the like. Tactfully and gently, they told him it might not be. But he seemed no whit offended when he returned to work after the funeral and cremation. He mixed his mortar and laid his bricks with his usual cheerfulness. His fellow-workmen had rather expected him to be sulky, and on the way home from work that day, one of them tried to incite him to a decent resentment about the uppity refusal. The bricklayer's wife had a right to be buried in the Cathedral. The bricklayer responded with an enigmatic smile. "She's there all right," he said.

Excerpt from an address by National Recovery Administrator Johnson:"No man is entitled to take credit for the place of his nativity any more than for the color of his hair. But when a man on due deliberation chooses a place after he is grown up, he is, at least, to be credited with good taste."

Does that go for Hollywood, too, Mr. Johnson?

Mr. John Hertz, of Yellow Taxi fame, testifying before a Paramount creditors' meeting the other day, told an attorney for some bondholders that, as an economy measure, he had had 200 telephones removed from the Paramount home offices, while he was chairman of the finance committee. And Mr. Hertz is a director of the Chicago telephone company.

Mr. Hertz and his eldest daughter, Mrs. Alfred Ettlinger, wife of the millionaire Chicago broker, took a stroll in the wintry winds last Sunday afternoon. Along 52nd Street to 5th Avenue they walked, from the Hertz home on East 52nd Street; and uptown to Central Park, where they circled the reservoir. They returned along the same route, and upon arriving home, Mr. Hertz's daughter discovered that somewhere on the way she lost a string of pearls. Newspapers estimated the loss at $70,000.

This news item from the corporate headquarters of Paramount in New York is obviously a case of locking the stable door before the horse runs away:

Despite the repeal of prohibition, real alcoholic liquors will NOT be used on motion picture sets in Hollywood for scenes depicting revelry; and ginger ale will still be served as champagne.

Also, may we add that the use of real liquors "for scenes depicting revelry," would, at the present profiteering rates of liquor purveyors, retard the progress of financial rehabilitation in this motion picture industry.

During a wakeful stretch the other night Odd McIntyre says he got to chuckling about W. C. Fields and one of his long ago sketches in a revue. The scene is in a bleak, blizzardy shack in the Arctic. Two frosty hard-panners have run into continual misfortune. Fields, as one, is trying to thaw out over a smidgin of fire. His partner comes in covered with snow, inquiring if anything happened while he was away. Whines' Fields: "That old pill was over here from Medicine Hat to foreclose the mortgage." Silence while the wind shrieks outside. Finally Fields continues: "But he won't get Balto, the lead dog, 'cause I et him!"

'REQUIRES ALL THE STUDIO TRICKS'

Says DeCasseres of "Thunder on the Left;" He Sees Several Others as Weak for Motion Pictures, But "Champagne, Sec" Appropriately Enough Rates High

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

THUNDER ON THE LEFT

You can't stew diamonds and produce a roast pheasant.

Then, again, as the Old Hermit of Prague, that never saw pen or ink, very wittily said to the niece of King Gorbeduc, "That that is, is."

The first aphorism means that Christopher Morley's bright and original book, "Thunder on the Left," has been turned into a heavy, dense and almost incomprehensible stage play.

The second quotation from Shakespeare means that this play, adapted by Jean Ferguson Black, while it attempts a Jimmie Barrie—"Peter Pan" plus "Mary Rose"—is merely a Gorbeduc. At least, so it was to me.

Now this book can be done into a "Berkeley Square" sort of picture—and a good one—but not with this play.

It opens at a children's party on the porch of an old house. Martin (the Peter Pan) wonders how it feels to be a grown-up. They all speculate. So Martin blows out the candles on the birthday cake, and Presto! there is a black-out—and we see the children as they are twenty years later.

It becomes slightly metaphysical here—a curious mixture of that that is, is, and why is a why-why like a why-why?

There are cross-neckings in domestic circles (which is all played in a kind of Peter Ibbetsonish dream-haze) and a final restoration of the kiddies around the birthday cake.

And what they become when they grow up is true enough, but not nice at all.

There is a picture in Morley's book; but the play bored me stiff. It is something that, more than any other play now running, requires all the tricks and technique of the picture studios. And it has got to be played down, down, down.

GIVE US THIS DAY

A grim, tragic play about the Strong family—eight of them—waiting around like a lot of buzzards for the old grandmother—who lives upstairs, is never seen and who has the jack which has just been willed to her by Grandpa Strong—to die.

"Give Us This Day" is by Howard Koch. He has done a powerful but incredible bit of work, and in a picture version (if and when) there should be a good dose of humor.

Dramatic points are these:

One of the Strong girls is with a future voter, but cannot get married because of the grandmother's ban against marriage. She's waiting for grandma to go West.

One of the boys wants to marry a cousin. And he is also waiting for the old pipe-tapper and floor-walker upstairs to cough out.

Finally, as the old tyrant threatens to hang on forever, the boy, who has been forced to give up the woman he loved, learns of his sister's condition, and in his desperation feels that there is but one thing to do—bump off the old woman.

After doing this he learns that he is her sole heir. In a spectacular scene he then divides the dough among the other relatives who have grown gray with waiting. He then does the Dutch.

It's a picture subject that would attract me; but, then, I'm one of the Morbid Few.

RATINGS OF STAGE PLAYS

As Benjamin DeCasseres sees a few of Broadway's current plays, in relation to their value as screen material:

"Champagne, Sec"—80 per cent.
"Thunder on the Left"—50 per cent.
"Give Us This Day"—40 per cent.
"Move On Sister"—30 per cent.
"Wise Man of Chelem" — "Who Knows?"

MOVE ON SISTER

Al Woods opened his season with a lurid and unconvincing, but somewhat picture-promising, tale of the Scarlet Woman (nowadays turned cheap ochre), with Fay Bainter doing the lady with the blotch on her 'scutcheon, as 'twere.

As a picture-promise, it is rather hemannish. Plenty of politics in it, too. The title is in memory of the cop's order to street-walkers of old, "Move on sister." Scenarists will have to tear it out—and maybe tear it up.

Locale: A small Western town. Eugene Greer, the town's millionaire Pooh-Bah and Pillar of Society, is dying in a hospital.

He summons his political enemy—the only fellow he can trust—and leaves him $50,000 to be given to Alice Drave, a woman whom he once sent for in a hotel.

After Greer's death a first will is read, but (hist!) Cromer, his political opponent, has the real will with the fifty thousand bucks for Alice, whom he had deserted to wed a rich woman. (Alice had then become ye abandoned creature.)

Well, at the funeral Alice shows up and puts a hundred-dollar bill in the corpse's hand. She's returning a loan. She had never spent it (with a hey-nony-nonny, and nerts to the author!).

It may make just one of them there pictures.

WISE MAN OF CHELEM

Maurice Schwartz, of Second Avenue fame, is one of the greatest producers of fine plays in America. Besides which, he is a superb director and a capital actor. If he were a European, he would be imported with a nauseating ballyhoo. But he is only Second Avenue. Such is our flunkeyism.

"Yoshe Kalb," which ran for a couple of years at his Second Avenue Yiddish theatre, is soon to be done in English on Broadway, sponsored, I hear, by Daniel Frohman. It is Jewish comedy and tragedy, with great picture possibilities.

Mr. Schwartz has just put on another startling fantastic comedy, by Aaron Zeitlin. If this isn't screened eventually, then I will lose my mucilagenous faith in the future of the celebrated Infant Industry.

The story revolves around the Angel of Death, who got bored killing off people. He resolves to visit the Earth. Before he goes he hears a fellow whom he has just checked over wailing for his bride, left behind in the Village of Fools—Chelem.

Well, Death comes down to the Earth, tells the girl her husband is all hunky-dory Up There, and marries her himself. Meanwhile he declares a moratorium on Davy Jones' locker.

But people get sick of living on, paying taxes and eating eggs every morning, and so the Angel of Death goes back to the job Up There.

A picture, some day, for some director with a cosmic-comic imagination, the coming Shakespeare of Filmdom. Is he Sam Hoffenstein?

Picture value, Quien sabe?

CHAMPAGNE, SEC

At last Dwight Deere Wiman has put on Johann Strauss' famous "Die Fledermaus" as it should be done!

The whole thing from beginning to end goes, rocks, rockets, sparkles. It is wild orgy of Viennese music, song and the gay fury that lies in the belly of the grape. And with those unforgettable Strauss waltzes and fiery drinking songs—yip-ho! and Laus Veneris!

I believe it would make superb entertainment if played and sung swiftly, directed on five cases of champagne.

The story needs new dialoguing. The old libretto is seedy.

There is a rattling good yarn for the screen here. Here are champagne parties, a jail, mixed identities and all the other horseplay, hooey and hokum of the operatic stage. But all done in high Viennese society, where Princes and Generals glitter like the nose of Bacchus at the birthday party of Venus.

If music is set for the pictures, let's have the great Strauss and his love-and-wine monkeyshines!

REORGANIZATION OF PUBLIX NEAR; FAMOUS THEATRES BIDS $1,800,000

Final Step in the Revamping of Theatre Subsidiary Due Dec. 21, When New Company's Offer Is To Be Acted Upon

The final step in reorganization of Publix Enterprises, Inc., theatre circuit subsidiary of Paramount Publix Corporation, is scheduled to take place the afternoon of December 21, when a special meeting of the Publix creditors will be held in the office of Referee Henry K. Davis, at 140 Nassau street in New York. At that time the Irving Trust Company, as trustee, will offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, all of the right, title and interest of the trustee in and to all or any part of the assets and properties of the bankrupt Publix estate.

A bid of $1,800,000 for these assets and properties already has been filed with Irving Trust by Famous Theatres Corporation, recently organized in Delaware, and a subsidiary of the parent Paramount Publix company.

It appears unlikely that any other bid will be received, and, therefore, next Thursday afternoon is expected to find the properties of Publix Enterprises transferred to Famous Theatres, and the way paved toward complete rehabilitation.

The offer of Famous must be acted on not later than December 23, and its legal consummation effected within 15 days following an order of approval by Referee Davis.

Of interest to Publix creditors was the unofficial estimate that the Publix estate may be in a position to pay off the allowed claims on the basis of approximately 32 cents on the dollar. However, a final computation of the rate of settlement on the basis of Famous Theatres' bid of $1,800,000 cannot yet be made. This is due principally to the fact that the referee still has pending rulings on many contested claims.

Publix Claims Totaled $13,381,333

Some fifty-seven claims amounting to $13,381,333 represented the whole amount filed against the Publix estate. Seven of these, totaling $972,660, were disallowed by the referee and with respect to which no appeal has been taken and the time to appeal has expired. Four other claims, for $592,327, were subsequently withdrawn. Total claims, thereby, were reduced some $1,564,987, to $11,816,346.

Approximately $3,557,377 represented the amount of claims for rent accrued or to accrue after the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy by Publix. Trustees for the bankrupt filed objections to these, and it is unlikely that all of them will be allowed, possibly none. This reduced the total claims to $8,258,969.

Although Referee Davis has yet to pass on three important consent reductions, it is expected that they will be allowed. They include an original claim by Publix Theatres Corporation against Publix Enterprises, for $5,687,442, which was reduced to $2,833,721 under a compromise agreement; a claim of the trustees of the bankrupt Paramount Publix Corporation, for $1,056,500, reduced to $792,375, and a joint claim of Commercial Investment Trust and U. S.

ASSETS LISTED BY IRVING TRUST

Foreign Securities, reduced to $437,377, from $465,660. Thus $3,126,129 in reductions under these three compromising agreements reduced the total claims against the Publix estate to $5,132,840.

In addition, the terms of the purchase offer made by Famous Theatres provides for 20 other claims, totaling $926,269, which reduces to $4,206,571 the total claims which the offer of Famous Theatres allows in its purchase agreement filed with Irving Trust.

The offer furthermore allows some $240,000 for administration expenses of the bankrupt estate, which will be deducted from the purchase offer of $1,800,000, thereby leaving about $1,560,000 with which to pay creditors.

Irving Trust Lists Assets

In a 68 page printed document, Irving Trust Company, as trustee for Publix Enterprises, listed with the United States district court, last week, a record of the Publix assets and properties to be sold next Thursday at public auction. Some ninety-four individual entries specifically set forth accounts receivable from subsidiaries which have a normal book value of $17,199,270; miscellaneous stock holdings of 56,178 shares which represent the bankrupt's interest in 79 theatre subsidiaries, and an indeterminate interest in six new theatre corporations. Miscellaneous assets listed include $47,818 in notes receivable and 1,066 shares in Butterfield Theatres, et. al.

Many of the properties and theatre subsidiaries are in bankruptcy or receivership, which negates to a large extent the otherwise imposing total of assets listed for sale. An independent appraisal, recently made for the United States district court in New York, fixed their current value at approximately $2,000,000.

Terms of the Offer to Purchase

Famous Theatres' offer to purchase the properties and assets of Publix specified the following terms, as listed in the official purchase order:

1. The payment of $1,800,000, in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

2. Closing of the deal within 15 days following the entry of an order by Referee Davis, or a later closing date may be mutually agreed upon.

3. This specification pertains to the legal transfer of the necessary papers, and also says that where stock of a partly owned theatre subsidiary is subject to restrictions upon transfer, the certificates shall be delivered to Famous Theatres only upon receipt by Irving Trust of written evidence of the consent of the party in whose favor such restrictions run, and unless such consent shall not have been received by Irving Trust within 60 days, the trustee will have the right to offer the stock for sale.

4. The purchase price of $1,800,000 is to be paid in the following manner:

(a) The sum of $240,000 to be paid by certified check to the order of Irving Trust, drawn on New York funds.

(b) Famous Theatres may present claims, duly approved and allowed against Publix, and there shall be credited as dividends upon such claims such portion of the $1,800,000 purchase price, after deducting the $240,000 first payment, as the amount of the claims so presented bears to the whole amount of the claims filed against the bankrupt estate. (Note: There were certain deeply involved exceptions listed in this part of the agreement which have a relation to and subsequent disposition of the various claims standing against Publix, and also those already allowed.)

(c) The remainder of the purchase price—$1,560,000—shall be paid by Famous Theatres by means of a certified check to the order of Irving Trust, drawn on New York funds, but to be held by Irving Trust for 40 days, subject to the filing of certain claims against Publix.

RENT CLAIMS QUESTIONED

That amount of the claims filed against the estate in bankruptcy of Publix Enterprises, Inc., which amount represents the amount estimated to be claimed for rent accrued or to accrue after the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy by Publix Enterprises, Inc., and any other contingent items:

Claim No.	Claimant	Amount of claim estimated to be claimed for future rent or other contingent items

70	First National Bank of Fort Worth, Trustee	26,465.93
6	Greenville Hotel Co.	62,103.48
51	Georgia Realty Corp.	674,666.70

46	Slappey, George H.	52,550.00
67	Sunrise Corp.	149,284.44
	Total	$3,557,377.19

Objections have been filed to the total amounts of the above claims, and the validity or provability of such claims or any part thereof is in no way admitted by the offer.

5. This refers to those claims against Publix, totaling some $3,557,000, for rent accrued or to accrue, and which the trustee has disallowed, and, therefore, Famous Theatres reserves the right to present claims in this group if finally allowed, and in such event, a recomputation shall be made and an appropriate adjustment made to Famous Theatres.

6. In the event that the cash sum of $240,000 paid by Famous Theatres as the first payment is not sufficient to pay the expenses of administration in bankruptcy of the Publix estate, incurred or to be incurred and as finally all owed by the bankruptcy court, Famous agrees to pay Irving Trust the remainder of such costs within 30 days, such additional amount paid to be taken into account and added to the $240,000 payment

7. Famous Theatres agrees that the bankruptcy court having jurisdiction of the bankruptcy proceedings of Publix Enterprises shall retain jurisdiction of Famous Theatres for the purpose of enforcing the obligations assumed by Famous in paragraphs 5 and 6 above, and in case of default in making these payments, the bankruptcy court shall have the right to take and sell all or any part of the properties and assets owned by Famous Theatres at the time of such default. However, unless in default, Famous Theatres shall have the right in making the payments provided for in paragraphs 5 and 6 to:

(a) Deal with its properties and assets in the normal course of its business, including the right to sell or exchange any part of same.

(b) Acquire new properties and assets, and in connection with the acquisition thereof to make and deliver purchase money mortgages and to acquire properties and assets subject to mortgages and liens existing thereon.

(c) Mortgage or pledge any of its properties and assets, the proceeds to be used in the acquisition of property having a value at least equal to that of the properties and assets so mortgaged or pledged.

Dividend Payment Rights

(d) Pay dividends on any class of its issued stock out of net profits, or out of earned surplus, or out of capital surplus established from the consideration received by Famous Theatres for the issuance of any of the shares of its capital stock to the extent of not more than 10 per cent of such capital surplus; and likewise to redeem, retire or otherwise pay off any class of its issued stock out of net profits, or out of earned surplus, or out of the said 10 per cent of capital surplus, it being, however, understood and agreed that Famous Theatres will not borrow money or sell any of its properties or assets in order to obtain cash to be applied to the foregoing purposes.

8. Famous Theatres further agrees that, so long as any of the obligations assumed by it in paragraphs 5 and 6 above remain unperformed, it will not:

(a) Exercise its option to pay, prior to maturity, the principal of certain five-year notes which it is contemplated will be issued by it in connection with the acquisition by Famous of certain claims against the bankrupt Publix estate.

(b) Exercise its option to pay, prior to maturity, the principal of any or all of three one-year notes in the respective amounts of $300,000, $50,000 and $80,000, which it is contemplated will be issued by Famous for cash and for reorganization expenses, except that prior to maturity the principal of any one or all of the three notes may be paid or reduced by the application thereto of such cash as may be received from Irving Trust as part of the assets contemplated to be sold by Irving Trust to Famous under this offer, and by the application thereto of any cash remittance made by Irving Trust to Famous under the provisions of paragraph 4, subdivision (c), above.

As to Note Renewals

(c) With respect to all of the three one-year notes, Famous further agrees that upon the maturity thereof, the principal will be paid only out of its net profits or out of its earned surplus, and that if the sum of its net profits and earned surplus is insufficient to pay all of the principal, Famous Theatres agrees to arrange from time to time for the renewal of such notes, or the unpaid portion thereof.

(d) Famous Theatres agrees that if it shall be in default at any time in making the payments provided for in paragraphs 5 and 6 above, the three one-year notes shall be subordinate to the obligations assumed in paragraphs 5 and 6. An appropriate reference to the terms of this offer shall be written on each of the three one-year notes.

Assets Listed

9. Famous Theatres further agrees that as security for the payment of the obligations mentioned in paragraphs 5 and 6 above, it will pledge with Irving Trust, the following assets which are among those which it is contemplated will be sold under the terms of the offer:

Associated Amusements, Inc.

1,000 shares, $100 par value; 500 shares Class A stock, 500 shares Class B.

Famous Theatres also pledges any and all accounts receivable due to Irving Trust from the corporations named above.

However, so long as Famous Theatres shall not be in default in the performance of the obligations previously mentioned, the income from the securities so pledged shall be paid to it and the company shall have the right to vote all stock included in the assets so pledged.

This part of the offer then relates at length certain other involved phases pertaining to claims and the like.

10. If the offer is accepted by Irving Trust and approved and consummated, Famous Theatres agrees to assume the performance of certain agreements made previously by Irving Trust, and including deals on theatres made with Karl Hoblitzelle, Hunter Perry and A. H. Blank.

Compromises on Claims Proposed

11. Famous Theatres asks Irving Trust to prosecute diligently its objections to the claims filed against the bankrupt estate for $3,557,377 in rent accrued or to accrue.

12. Furthermore, if the offer is accepted and approved, Famous Theatres asks that:

In the event that this offer is not accepted by Irving Trust and not approved and consummated as provided therein, the making of the offer and anything therein contained shall be without prejudice to the rights, claims and contentions of Irving Trust or of Famous Theatres, or of any other person or persons with respect to any matter referred to therein or affected thereby.

15. In the event of any disagreement between Irving Trust and Famous Theatres as to the interpretation or performance of any of the terms of the offer, the same shall be conclusively determined by the Referee.

16. The offer, when approved and accepted, shall constitute an agreement between Irving Trust, as trustee, and Famous Theatres, subject, however, to the approval of the Referee.

Receivers, Attorneys Ask $300,000

Creditors of the bankrupt parent Paramount Publix Corporation were notified over the weekend by Referee Henry K. Davis, to be on hand in his Nassau Street headquarters on the afternoon of December 18, to consider some 35 applications for allowances totaling some $300,000 made by receivers and attorneys who acted during the Paramount equity proceedings which began on January 3rd and preceding the voluntary petition in bankruptcy of March 14.

Mr. Charles D. Hilles and Mr. Adolph Zukor, who petitioned for $30,000 and $23,000, respectively, plus expenses of $41,240, were appointed for the interim operations of the equity receivership, on January 26, by Judge William Bondy, and superseded the trustees elected on April 17th under the voluntary receivership, namely Mr. Hilles, E. W. Leake, C. E. Richardson.

Expenses which the Paramount Publix creditors will examine, all of which were incurred only during the Paramount equity receivership, will then be reported to the district court, in accordance with the usual practice.

The applications for allowances by the two receivers, and by the various attorneys who represented them during the three-months period, follow:

Referee Davis' notice to creditors of Paramount on the application of receivers and attorneys for the foregoing allowances had hardly been received in New York when Saul E. Rogers, attorney for a group of bondholders, made known his intention to oppose payment of any part of the $286,059 which is claimed.

LOEW'S STOCK SALE PUT OFF TO DEC. 19

Rogers Declares Absence of Bidders for 660,900 Loew's Shares Indicates Return of Control to One Interest

Proposed sale of 660,900 shares of Loew's, Inc., received another setback this week when an absence of bidders for the securities was construed by Saul E. Rogers, attorney for Harley L. Clarke, as an indication of a return of control of Fox, Loew's and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to a single interest. Federal Judge John Knox continued the hearing on the proposed sale until December 18 and postponed the sale until the 19th. Meanwhile, Loew's came out with an announcement to the effect that its earnings for the first 12 weeks of the current fiscal year were double what they were for a corresponding period a year ago.

Citing an absence of bidders for the 660,900 shares of Loew's, Inc., which holders of $20,000,000 of defaulted notes of Film Securities Corp. are seeking to default on, Mr. Rogers, as attorney for Mr. Clarke, who holds 800,000 shares of General Theatres Equipment stock, took the stand Monday in New York at a hearing before Federal Judge John Knox on the sale of the securities and told the court that this absence was construed in many quarters as returning control of Fox, Loew's and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to a single interest. Thus the results originally obtained by setting up Film Securities to end control of Loew's by Fox would be completely nullified, Mr. Rogers asserted.

Chase Heads Bank Group

Mr. Rogers pointed out that the absence of known bidders for the Loew securities indicated that the 660,900 shares would be acquired by the banks which were underwriters of Film Securities' $20,000,000 of defaulted notes. Heading this group of banks is Chase National, which, Mr. Rogers said, controls General Theatres, which in turn controls Fox. Acquisition of the Loew stock by Chase National also would put the bank in control of Loew's and MGM, he declared.

"If that develops," Judge Knox said, "this court will then have jurisdiction over the case. In the meantime, however, I must allow the 'Shylocks' their 'pound of flesh.' The stock is posted as collateral on a defaulted obligation, and if the banks insist on foreclosing, I do not see how this court can interfere."

Earnings Up 100 Per Cent

Further indications of the financial well-being and strength of Loew's, Inc., were offered this week with the announcement from company headquarters in New York that the company's earnings for the first 12 weeks of the current fiscal year, starting September 1, have been approximately 100 per cent above those of the corresponding 1932 period, when net was $816,160, equal after preferred dividends to 36 cents a share on 1,464,025 shares of common stock. On this basis, earnings are now running at the rate of between 70 cents and $1 quarterly for the common shares.

Early in November Loew's had announced a net operating profit of $4,034,000 after all charges and dividends, for its fiscal year ended last August 31. At that time a surplus of $33,700,000 was noted; cash and government securities totaled $11,000,000, together with assets of some $123,700,000, after deducting $21,000,000 for reserve for depreciation.

An important factor in the larger earnings of Loew's, as well as of other film producers, is the advance in foreign exchange, particularly in the pound sterling, which greatly increases the income of the company from its foreign business. Its importance is shown by the fact that it is estimated Loew's will have an additional income of more than $3,000,000 this year on this account, assuming that principal exchanges hold at par and that foreign volume approximates that of 1932.

Domestic film revenues and theatre attendance have shown a fair recovery from the low point reached last year, the announcement said, and are holding at a satisfactory level, although they are by no means back to normal. The improvement, together with lower operating expenses, makes possible a much better profit showing and prospects were called reasonably good for Loew's to recover this fiscal year a considerable part of its former large earning power.

Cites Loew's Record

According to the Wall Street Journal, Loew's is the only large film and theatre company that has "kept in first rate financial conditions over the last few years when several other big film producers have experienced financial troubles."

"Loew's reported a net profit for the fiscal year ended August 31, 1933, of $4,034,289, equal after preferred dividends to $2.14 a share on 1,464,025 shares of common," the Journal said. "This compared with $7,961,314, or $4.80 a share earned in 1932.

"The decline in profits came principally because of the drop in gross income to $84,938,000 from $107,416,000 in 1932. Loew's maintained its earnings at a relatively better level than most of its competitors until 1932 and the spring of 1933. This was partly because Loew theatres are principally in large eastern cities where attendance was less affected than in smaller towns. The quality of film releases was also maintained at a high level by continuing expenditures for film inventories at the previous rate.

"However, with the slump in attendance in the 1932-33 season, the rate of film amortization based on the former rate of income was found to be inadequate and a new scale put into effect which was in force in the fiscal year just closed. During this period the company wrote off some of its older high cost films. There was also a very expensive delay in Hollywood which slowed down the rate of film releases and accordingly increased operating expenses."

"The company is now adjusted to the present level of income and operations," the Journal added, "and the effect of the various economies in production expense, theatre rentals, and overhead, should be increasingly in evidence if business continues to hold at a fair level. In view of Loew's large cash surplus, the present increase in earnings will probably be translated into larger dividends as soon as the management feels confident that the present business level will continue."

HERALD QUOTED BY WEIR IN THE POST

Motion Picture Herald is quoted by Hugh Weir, in the second of his series of articles headed "Wild Money, or, A Banker's Adventures in the Movies," in The Saturday Evening Post, issue of December 9.

Referring to one of the characters in his article, Mr. Weir writes:

"Russell's figures correspond very closely with a cost sheet as vouched for by the publishers of Motion Picture Herald."

There follow, in the article, statistics regarding production costs.

In the first article, issue of December 2, Mr. Weir quoted data from Motion Picture Almanac.

Universal Is Now Making Newsreel; Drop Daily News

The Universal Newsreel deal with the Chicago Daily News whereby the newspaper directed the accumulation of news and printed the newsreel for Universal has been suspended, according to Allyn Butterfield, Universal's newsreel chief.

"Universal's news office in Chicago is now operating 100 per cent within its own organization," Mr. Butterfield said. "Despite the fact that the Daily News is no longer acting in the same capacity which it has carried out for several years, we retain its name on our reel leader." Mr. Butterfield stated that Universal now has approximately 130 deals with newspapers throughout the country.

"Our Chicago office has absorbed a great many of the Daily News men who have been working on the newsreel," the Universal executive said this week. Meanwhile, Carl Laemmle announced this week that Graham McNamee has been signed for another year as the reel's "Talking Reporter."

ROSENBLATT ASKS BOARD NOMINEES

Naming of Boards Next tion under paragraphs 2 or 3 of the conditions incorporated in the Executive Order" (referring to personnel of the Code Authority), "in accordance with the recommendations of at least a majority of the voting members of the entire Code Authority and the successor of any person removed under the conditions in said paragraph 2 shall be appointed in the manner provided in Article II, section 2, subdivision F of the code.

"The provisions of section 5 of the Executive Order" (exempting writers, authors, dramatists from the salary control clause of the code), "are interpreted to mean only such writers, authors and dramatists as are not employed for stated periods by producers. All writers, authors and dramatists employed by producers for stated periods shall be included under Section 6 of said Executive Order" (which, in turn, suspends the entire salary-control clause).

"It is recognized that, based on the foregoing construction of the exercise of the Administrator's authority conferred upon him in the said Executive Order, the signatory producers and distributors have given their consent to the code as approved" (by the President).

Satisfies Executives' Doubts

The memorandum satisfied doubts of the motion picture executives as to the Administration's policy, and, on their behalf, Mr. Hays said:

"The result of the conferences is evidenced by General Johnson's memorandum. These conferences were cordial and the conclusion is very satisfactory."

It was pointed out by observers in Washington that while the film industry has obtained in effect what it asked for, it did not succeed in obtaining amendment of the Executive Order itself.

The effect is that the President still is standing firmly behind his Order as originally issued, but that Administrator Johnson has backed down from any determination he may have had of applying it literally and has "interpreted" it as desired by the industry.

Appointment of the 32 local zoning and clearance boards and the 32 local grievance boards under the Code Authority will be the next matter to engage the attention of the amusements division of the NRA. A large number of nominations for these positions already have been submitted to Deputy Rosenblatt.

Some 400 appointments will be necessary to fill all 64 boards under the plan to have in each exchange territory a grievance board of five members and a zoning board of seven. On each of these boards will be one member not connected with the industry, to represent the public, while the remaining personnel will be bona fide exhibitors and representatives of distributors.

In addition to the boards, there will be "free-lance," "extra" and agency committees in Hollywood. No size has been fixed for the free-lance or extra committees, but the agency committee will have ten members.

The zoning and clearance and grievance boards will be located at Albany, Atlanta, Baltimore, Boston, Buffalo, Charlotte, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Des Moines, Detroit, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Memphis, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, New Haven, New Orleans, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Portland, St. Louis, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Seattle and Washington.

Rosenblatt Asks Suggestions

It was stated in Washington on Wednesday by Mr. Rosenblatt that suggestions for appointments to zoning and grievance boards from all bona fide organizations within the industry will be welcomed by him.

Mr. Rosenblatt indicated he desired as large a list of such suggestions as possible in order that his final choice can be made from a wide range. Any organizations submitting their nominees in this manner must be bona fide, the deputy administrator declared, and must have a wide knowledge of the business.

He stressed the fact that the Government intended, as with all other industries, to see that all members of zoning and grievance boards are of the highest repute.

The remaining Government members, who will be selected from outside the industry, will probably be persons with no more than a superficial knowledge of the film industry, Mr. Rosenblatt said.

Meanwhile, the possibility that the third governmental representative on the code authority might be a woman was discussed Wednesday in Washington for the first time.

Various rumors have been heard in and around NRA headquarters to the effect that Frances M. Robinson, secretary and general assistant to General Hugh S. Johnson, might be named.

NRA officials indicated that in view of the interest in motion pictures of women's organizations throughout the country someone representing them was being considered for the post.

However, beside announcement of the appointment of Sol Rosenblatt to the Code

Walker Temporary Executive Director of New National Emergency Council

Frank C. Walker was named last week by President Roosevelt as temporary executive director of a National Emergency Council, organized by the President for the purpose of "consolidating, coordinating and making more efficient and productive the emergency activities of the Government."

The other members of the Council are the Secretaries of Agriculture, Interior, Commerce and Labor, the administrators of Agricultural Adjustment, Industrial Recovery and Federal Relief Board, in addition to the chairman of the board of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, and the governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

Early in July, Mr. Walker was appointed by the President as executive secretary of a Recovery Council—a "super cabinet" of the federal government—to guide the nation along the road to recovery.

Mr. Walker has been general counsel of the M. E. Comerford film interests for eight years, and has been prominent in the field of the motion picture for many years.

At the time of his July appointment it was considered by many that Mr. Walker had reached the pinnacle of an impressive career as "Grand Marshal" of the "New Deal." Now, it appears, he is second only to the Secretary of State and the President himself in the service of the Government.

The duties and functions of the Emergency Council will be prescribed by the President. It will set up in Washington a central information bureau to convey to the public all factual information with reference to the various governmental agencies.

Inasmuch as the creation of the Council is another step toward national recovery, its activities will have a direct and most important bearing on future business activities of the motion picture industry in all its branches, as well as in every other business.

OWN BOARDS WILL ACT

Authority as a Government representative, no official word was forthcoming as to the identity of the third Government voice. In the event that a woman is not appointed, it is held likely at Washington that the post will go to Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor and Assistant Recovery Administrator in charge of labor. Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, president-emeritus of Harvard University, was named as the first Government contact.

When the code authority meets, its first duty will be to elect a chairman and, because of his knowledge of the code and the various clauses in it, it is considered more than likely that Mr. Rosenblatt will be appointed to this post. After the selection of a chairman the group will decide upon the personnel of the 32 local zoning and clearance boards.

His appointment to the Code Authority is said to eliminate Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the TOCC, from a post on the New York clearance and zoning board. Harry C. Arthur has been mentioned for an important position on the New York board. Mr. Arthur is managing director of the Seventh Avenue Roxy.

With the declaration by NRA officials that all industries' problems would be solved "entirely within the family," the motion picture industry was assured this week by the Administration that complaints of non-compliance and labor and trade practice controversies would be handled by the film industry's local boards and by the deputy administrator of the code. No outsiders will administer the code, it was said.

Until the code authority has organized, all complaints to local NRA compliance boards will be forwarded to Washington for settlement by Administration officials.

Mr. Rosenblatt was asked at an exhibitor meeting in Philadelphia last week whether exhibitors have the right to challenge the selection of any member of a local grievance board.

"You bet your boots they have," he replied.

Code Authority Meets December 20

The initial meeting of the Code Authority will be held in New York on December 20, at 2 p. m., in the Bar Association building, on West 44th street. This is where the code drafting first started.

The session will be mainly for the purpose of organizing the group into a working unit and planning for future operations, but several other questions of pressing importance will be taken up, including that of financing the Authority and the 64 boards which will operate under its control.

In the case of the film code, it is anticipated the Authority, following as closely as possible the policy of the Administration, will work out a plan for financing which will impose a minimum of burden upon the members of the industry. A number of suggestions already have been made, among them that producers and distributors be assessed on the basis of business volume, and exhibitors on the basis of seating capacity. It is estimated that between $350,000 and $400,000 a year may be needed for administration of the code.

Another question to come before the meeting next week will be that of issuing the form on which distributors and exhibitors will signify their adherence to the code. Acceptance of the code is required by the document itself as a prerequisite to enjoyment of the benefits of the grievance boards.

It was indicated at Washington this week that the Code Authority will shortly appoint a special committee to investigate hours of employees engaged in stage production units, not with respect to their relation to wage scales, which are fixed in the code, but in regard to the overtime provisions.

Report Acts "Stranded"

Following the settlement of the dispute over the provisions of the Executive Order of the film code, the scene of code action for a time shifted to the West Coast, from where it was reported that a large number of theatres throughout the country either had already dropped vaudeville or were preparing to do so because, it was said, they could not continue the policy under the labor provisions of the film code. The reports also stated that a considerable number of acts were "stranded" because of the cancellation of bookings. In Washington, however, Administration officials denied having received any complaints of this nature.

Deputy Administrator Rosenblatt is planning to go to California next month on code matters, probably in connection with the investigations provided for in the Executive Order, although no formal announcement has yet been made as to how or by whom the studies will be conducted.

Under the caption: "General Johnson interprets the President," the voice of Allied States Association was heard on Tuesday from national headquarters at Washington, from which there emanated the following statement, which, it is assumed, was written by Abram F. Myers, general counsel:

"Although the Executive Order confers on General Johnson, as Administrator, the duty to review all acts of those boards so as to prevent unfairness and oppression, as well as the power to remove members of the boards who act unfairly, Johnson, at the behest of Mr. Hays, interprets the Order to mean that he is not to review individual cases decided by the boards and not to exercise his power to remove or add members of the Code Authority, save in accordance with the recommendation of a majority of the voting members.

"This development further complicates the code situation and makes the position of the independent (particularly subsequent run) exhibitors all the more perilous. The producer-controlled boards are authorized to establish protection schedules in all competitive areas."

United Artists, Twentieth Century Pictures and Columbia, which have not signed the code, are known to be satisfied with it, now that the various concessions modifying the Executive Order were made Saturday by General Johnson. The signatures of these companies are expected immediately.

Meanwhile leading independents in New York this week signified their intention of signing the code in a letter sent Monday to Mr. Rosenblatt by the Federation of the Motion Picture Industry. The Federation's communication stated its approval of the Executive Order for a 90-day trial period, which in itself constitutes approval of the code. At the same time Federation officials announced they would continue to to "act as it sees fit in attempting to obtain changes or additions to the code in the future."

Neilan Offers To Check Cost Sheets With Coast Studio

There was no intention of reviving the age-old discussion of the relative merits of eastern and western production in his recent statement in which he predicted a general trend eastward by producers, Marshall Neilan declared this week in answering dispatches from the Coast quoting Jack L. Warner as criticizing Mr. Neilan's observations on production geography. Mr. Neilan is producing his first at Eastern Service Studios in Astoria, L. I., as president of Asociated Film Producers Association.

"When I made a casual survey of the advantages of Eastern production in the making of motion pictures, as I see them," said Mr. Neilan, "it was not my purpose to draw the fire of Hollywood producers, who for obvious reasons will forever be entrenched there, nor did I intend to start anew a discussion which had its inception with the birth of the industry itself and which has been argued pro and con down through the years. I did, however, hope to encourage a great many independent producers who have been traditionally tied to the apron strings of Hollywood and who have been somewhat timid about breaking away from the cut and dried methods of Hollywood production, by pointing out certain definite benefits which I believe can be derived from a change of 'venue' (see Funk and Wagnall's Standard Dictionary, Page 848, for proper definition)."

"In view of Mr. Warner's criticism of my remarks," continued Mr. Neilan, "I might add a suggestion to my previous comments. The pioneer effort of the Associated Film Producers, 'The Social Register,' is about completed and we are prepared to offer the cost sheets of this production, which has, in addition to Colleen Moore, Pauline Frederick, Charles Winninger and Alexander Kirkland, a host of other name values in the cast (although it must be admitted we have no superfluous executive salaries to dole out) for comparison with the cost sheets of any similar type of picture made in the West."

Joseph Goldberg Dead; Was Sales Executive

Joseph H. Goldberg, former general sales manager for Columbia Pictures Corporation, was found dead early Wednesday in a New York rooming house. According to Dr. Henry Weinberg, assistant medical examiner, the death was suicide by gas. Police found several gas jets open in the room, which Mr. Goldberg apparently had engaged the night before he took his life.

Mr. Goldberg became general sales manager of Columbia four years ago, joining that organization from Fox West Coast Theatres, for whom he was film buyer. Upon expiration of his Columbia contract he joined Walter Futter, and later with Mr. Futter and Herbert R. Ebenstein formed Resolute Pictures.

The Resolute venture failed, however, and Mr. Goldberg joined J. G. Bachmann.

LABOR DISPUTES TO CODE AUTHORITY

Text of Johnson Letter on Code

or alternate from membership upon said Code Authority and to appoint his successor, if such shall be deemed advisable, and to add members to said Code Authority from any employer class in the industry should the same be advisable.

Provision is made for the seating upon the Code Authority of representatives of classes of employees whose interests may be affected, upon proper occasion; and also for the designation by the Administrator of three impartial persons to be appointed by him.

Asks Pay Clause Be Suspended

Among the proposed unfair practices is one which provides that the Code Authority may investigate whether any employer in the industry has offered an unreasonably excessive inducement to anyone to enter his employ, and that if found to have done so, such employer may be assessed the amount of the unreasonable excess payment up to the amount of $10,000.00. However, nothing in the proposal affects the validity of the agreement of employment so entered into between the offending employer and his employee. I recommend that such proposal shall not become effective and that the same shall be indefinitely suspended from operation pending further order from the President.

Among other practices of producers regulated under this Code, is one which forbids negotiation with employees prior to thirty days before the expiration of the period of employment. Any offers made during such last thirty days must be communicated to the then employing producer if he has made a bona fide offer for the continuance of an employee in his employ, and the proposal further contemplates that with respect to certain employees receiving a stipulated sum per week, and following the expiration of the period of employment, the former employing producer shall have notice for three or six months, as the case may be, of offers made for the services of such former employee. I recommend that such provisions shall in no event apply to writers, authors, and dramatists, and that with respect to other employees embraced within such provisions, that such provisions shall not become effective and shall be suspended from operation pending further report from the Administrator after investigation.

Defines Boards' Functions

Unfair practices by the distributors and exhibitors are specifically provided for, together with the creation of certain Boards known as "Clearance and Zoning Boards and Grievance Boards." The function of the Clearance and Zoning Boards is to establish a schedule which will be binding upon all distributors and exhibitors in any exchange territory regulating the number of days which must elapse between the theatres in their showing of the same motion pictures in such territory. The Grievance Boards are set up as industrial forums before which exhibitors and distributors may take not only specified grievances and unfair practices for determination within the industry by such Boards but also may carry their grievances other than those specified in the Code to such Boards for determination. The creation of these Boards is intended particularly to care for the buying problems of exhibitors, and so that they may be assured to the greatest degree possible of a sufficiency of motion-picture product with which to operate their theatres.

The various Advisory Boards have approved this Code, as well as labor and representative employers in the industry.

It is believed that this Code as now revised represents a great advance in dealing effectively with the problems of this industry.

I find that:

(a) The Code as revised complies in all respects with the pertinent provisions of Title I of the Act including, without limitations, subsection (a) of Section 7 and subsection (b) of Section 10 thereof; and that

(b) The respective Producers', Distributors', and Exhibitors' Committees, under their Coordinators, were and are industrial groups, truly representative as a whole of the Motion Picture Industry; and that such groups imposed no inequitable restrictions on admission to membership therein; and that

(c) The Code is not designed to promote monopolies or to eliminate or oppress small enterprises and will not operate to discriminate against them, and will tend to effectuate the policy of Title I of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Accordingly, I adopt the report of the Deputy Administrator and I hereby recommend the approval of the Code of Fair Competition for the Motion Picture Industry.

Respectfully submitted,

HUGH S. JOHNSON,
Administrator.

SEEKS INFORMATION ON ANIMALCYCLE MAN

Love B. Harrell, secretary-treasurer of the Southeastern Theatre Owners Association, with headquarters at 1525 William Oliver Building, Atlanta, Ga., is seeking information as to the whereabouts of "a Mr. Cole, who does business under the name of Animalcycle Promotion Service, and who gives an address at 231 James Building, Atlanta, Ga."

Mr. Harrell asks that exhibitors wire him collect should the man call upon them.

Majestic Seeking Studio Exclusively for Product

Herman Gluckman, president, and William D. Shapiro, vice president, of Majestic Pictures, plan the acquisition of an option on a Coast studio for Majestic use exclusively, prior to their departure next week for New York. The eight pictures still remaining on the company schedule will be produced on a more elaborate scale, it is indicated.

The first will be "Husband Hunter," featuring Sophie Tucker, and for which Jack Yellin is doing the music. Several producers are being contacted to take over production, with Lou Sarecky believed most likely to get the assignment. Phil Goldstone, ill, is dropping production after having made four.

Charles Dickinson Dead

Charles E. Dickinson, president and general manager of the Lock City Theatres, Inc., Lockport, N. Y., died at his home there this week after a long illness. He was 71.

sincere, honest and constructive, not destructive, effort in that direction. It gives exhibitors more than they have had heretofore. No longer will exhibitors dare to corner product to the detriment of a competitor."

At the first meeting of the new MPTO of Ohio board this week, steps were taken to revise the constitution and by-laws with appointment of a committee consisting of W. A. Finney, Max Stearn and P. J. Wood. Mr. Wood was re-engaged as business manager.

From Portland, Ore., came word of a call to exhibitors by exchange leaders for a meeting December 18.

Asks "Chance to Start"

Mr. Rosenblatt told the MPTO of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware at Philadelphia last Thursday that critics of the code should withhold judgment until it had "a chance to start."

The deputy told the exhibitors that union and non-union disputes would be carried directly to the code authority. He also made clear that so long as existing agreements are met the code has no interest in changing union and non-union status.

In an open forum Mr. Rosenblatt said:

Provisions covering cancellations and substitutions probably will be made retroactive.

The cancellations clause applies to short product as well as features.

Votes on all cases passed upon by local zoning and grievance boards will be open to the entire industry.

In two resolutions passed at the meeting of 60 Texas Allied exhibitors Tuesday, President Roosevelt was asked to use his power to "give the true independents representation on the various boards, and not to appoint the nephew of General Hugh S. Johnson as government representative on the powerful code authority for this industry."

Resolutions offered to the convention declared that the code "contains little, if anything, to correct the abuses suffered by the independent theatres, and not only suffers from such omissions, but places in control of the entire industry, through the personnel of various boards, the same organizations and individuals who have in the past used their power to oppress the small enterprises and create a monopoly in the motion picture industry."

Texas Allied Picks Directors

New directors of Texas Allied are: Col. H. A. Cole, president; T. W. Lewis, J. B. Adelman, F. W. Zimmerman. Re-elected directors: C. H. Cox, Will Dorbant, Mart Cole, Leaman Marshall, Paul Scott, Howard Bland, Tom Donnell, P. V. Williams and Homer Mulkey.

Al Rosenberg, vice-president of Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, Seattle, was elected president of Allied Amusements of the Northwest at the annual convention last week in Seattle. Other officers elected were: Art Bishell, Spokane, vice-president; William Ripley, Longview, second vice-president; Leroy V. Johnson, Seattle, third vice-president; J. M. Hone, Seattle, re-elected secretary and treasurer.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Flying Down to Rio

(Radio)

Musical

It's a musical, chock full of patron pleasing values, colorfully different and original. Premised on a catchy romance, lavish and elaborately mounted, tuneful tunes featuring four hit numbers, new solo and group dance ideas, oodles of gorgeous girls, laugh-laden comedy situations, a little human interest drama, breath-taking spectacle, together with nicely balanced dialogue and action, blend zippily into fresh eye and ear entertainment. It moved the preview audience to frequent applause.

Add to those material assets the strength of cast names with Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond, Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire and Raul Roulien in the top spots, and in addition there are the intriguing title tone, the show's unique atmosphere, the combination of which permits development of any number of unique exploitation ideas.

Tinged with exciting glamour, the show, after an opening Miami Beach sequence where plot, characters and motif are established, is located in Rio de Janiero. Well handled scenic process shots are utilized as background for development of the triangular romance conflict among Roger, Julio and Belinda. For the girl and dance spectacle numbers enormous sets are used, and as the exotic Carioca and Tangos are danced to the tunes of "The Carioca," "Orchids in the Moonlight" and "Flying Down to Rio" with solo and dance specialties by Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, comedy mingles with romance. Political intrigue provides the premise for the anti-climactic spectacle, which takes to the air with scads of filmily clad girls dancing and evoluting on the wings of flying planes. Surprise succeeding surprise, the supreme punch is reserved for the finale—Julio sacrificing his love for Belinda to her happiness with Roger, tricking them into a mid-air wedding as he parachutes to the earth.

There's just about all that anyone wants in the line of peppy, pleasing entertainment in "Flying Down to Rio," and just about all the necessities with which to sell it. Names, with Dolores Del Rio, Astaire, Raymond, Ginger Rogers and Roulien, are adequate. While not listed, Alice Gentle, noted concert singer, Franklyn Pangborn, Louis Alberni, Paul Porcasi and Ray (Torchy) Cooke also are in the cast. Vincent Youmans, author of many popular hits, wrote the music, and the lyrics are by Eddie Eliscu and Gus Kahn. The Carioca dance looks to have the swing and rhythm to make it a ballroom feature and suggests the tying up with clubs, cafes and dance halls for follow-up dance contests. You can talk about plenty of stunning girls to lure the interest of men and women, too, and the more contacts made with music stores, radio stations and song-pluggers to popularize the music numbers the better. More important than anything, if your patrons are satiated with musicals, you can tell 'em that this one is brand new.

For ballyhoo you can go all the way up the line from the contacts suggested to tieups with commercial airlines and stunt fliers who will do skywriting for you. One sequence in the picture, with Miss Del Rio and Raymond on a deserted island, suggests a new exploitation gag. Their bad angels dissociate themselves from their bodies and urge them to make the most of their love making opportunity, and that suggests a tempting loud speaker gag urging passersby to come in and see the show. A mental debate would go like this: "I've seen enough musicals." "But you never saw one like this." "No, I won't go in." "Oh, come on, you'll be sorry." Following would be terse descriptive lines.

Exploitation should be limited only by your own ingenuity and the size of your budget. Every element in the show from scenic beauty, romance, comedy, music, dancing and girl glamour to thrill, can be showmanshipped. Readapt the effective standby ideas, concoct new ones.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Mr. Skitch

(Fox)

Comedy

A topical Will Rogers laugh-getter here is made more interesting by its travelogue background. Primarily a family type show, "Mr. Skitch" carries sufficient novelty and punch in its story, acting, dialogue and specialty features to make it entertainment of high standard for big town as well as small. Human interest is nicely blended with comedy and there are occasional touches of pathos. While Rogers, with his depression-inspired homey philosophies, is the central figure, he is ably supported by the continually bewildered Zasu Pitts and by Florence Desmond, Harry Green and the unidentified children. A pleasing romantic angle is revolved around Rochelle Hudson and Charles Starrett.

A wholesome, familiar atmosphere prevailing, this picture, in addition to the name draw, affords a number of curiosity-arousing showmanship possibilities. The travelogue nature, with such wonders as Old Faithful Geyser, Bridal Veil Falls and other Yellowstone Park wonders portrayed as well as those of the Grand Canyon, Yosemite and the Rocky Mountains, suggests cooperative contacts with schools, railroads, bus lines and travel agencies. Likewise, although the picture is inspired by a bank failure, Rogers' quipping the situation makes possible logical tieups with banks, bond and mortgage companies and other financial institutions. Much of the action taking place in auto camps, and one of those serving as the finale background, tieups with camps, if weather conditions permit much traveling, are in order.

The story opens with the Gibraltar bank receivers foreclosing on the residence of Skitch. In common with many who have had the same experience, Ira decides to make the best of it and in consideration for the feelings of his daughter, Emily, who has been cold-shouldered by her big shot sweetie, he loads the family into the veteran flivver and California is the goal. All the thrill, excitement and hardluck of a cross-country hegira are portrayed in situations dominated by comedy. Desperate in Yellowstone with no dough to buy food, Ira plays a super-Jesse James with Cohen, as romance is born for Emily and Denby. The scenic tour brings the whole party, the Skitches, Denby, Cohen and Flo, into Calneva, where Ira meets Merriweather and cleans up at the roulette table, only to lose his winnings after telling the Missus to buy a whole lot of new duds for the family. But Denby and Cohen, both of whom have been innocently victimized by Skitch, get together and finance him in an auto camp back in the old home town of Flat River, Mo., where Emily and Denby are married, the Skitches restored to prosperity. Woven into the picture, Florence Desmond, noted mimic, contributes imitations of Lupe Velez, Jean Harlow, topping 'em off with one of Katharine Hepburn that should amaze audiences.

All in all, the picture is satisfying entertainment. Sufficiently strong in name and amusement value for de luxe presentation, it's of much better than usual caliber for neighborhood and smaller town houses. Not being seasonal or tied to any particular event, it has the advantage of being a suitable attraction for any time. Not only is it a logical Saturday-Sunday feature, but it also has the strength to bring the patrons in on the off days.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Going Hollywood

Musical

With much new and different which should amuse and likewise can be talked about in ways to stir up patron curiosity, the picture is premised on a Cinderella romance. Love interest that overcomes many handicaps is preserved continually, the suspense generating triangle is developed with timely topical comedy contrasting the light drama. With Hollywood locale, the extra girl's heartache and heartbreak are portrayed. Girl grouping spectacle movement is presented against unusual backgrounds. pert introduction of solo song and dance numbers, and the show smoothly yet surprisingly brings about its expected conclusion with the girl winning not only the starring spot in the picture, but the man she loves as well.

Where the cycle of musicals seemingly may have exhausted the supply of patron-alluring ideas, "Going Hollywood" opens the way to fresh media of approach. Due to the success of "Peg o' My Heart" in both big and small towns, Marion Davies seems to have regained much of her popularity. In this picture she sings and dances in the style one expects of a former Follies girl and displays plenty of stunning clothes. That's an asset that should not be overlooked in publicity and exploitation. And there are the other players. Bing Crosby is one radio personality with a definite picture-fan following. Fifi D'Orsay, long absent from major production, returns as a volatile firebrand. Stuart Irwin, in a glove-fitting character role, is the befuddled amateur producer, a lamb in a yardful of wolves, and Ned Sparks reading lines as in "Lady For a Day," is the hardboiled director. They should accommodate name demands. Newcomers Patsy Kelly, Miss Davies' friend in need, and Bobby Watson, Crosby's press agent, together with the Radio Rogues, air favorites, are adequate in comedy and atmospheric support. Girl glamor is provided by the Albertina Rasch ballet.

The title, carrying a showmanship ring automatically suggests a Hollywood motif in all salesmanship. It can be developed in conjunction with merchant contacts for style displays suggests by the Davies modern fashion ensembles as well as the transformation of lobbies and foyers into rural settings to correspond with the spectacular dream sequence. While deluxers can afford to splurge the picture in vivid ways, neighborhood and smaller town exhibitors, capitalizing on the furore they stir up, can call it to the attention of their patrons as pleasing eye and ear entertainment, void of undue spiciness, that tends to make satisfactory entertainment for the entire family.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Through the Centuries

(Beacon Films)

Pictorial Record

A record of the development of the Catholic Church, presumably from its inception, this picture, distributed by Beacon Films, and made under the supervision of Rita C. McGoldrick, president of the Federation of Catholic Alumni, is very obviously restricted in its potential audience. Special performances, with a clear indication of what the picture conveys, would be the use in a theatre playing to the public in general.

The continuity, prepared by Rev. Francis X. Talbot, S. J., conveys an impression of the highlights of Catholicism, while the narration, given by Pedro de Cordoba, emphasizes throughout the religious aspects of the record. Actually, the whole film is a compilation of shots, some from such motion pictures as "The Sign of the Cross," numerous stock newsreel shots, clips from the Signal Corps in government archives of the World War, threaded together against a background of the Catholic Church.

The film, in its opening sequences, attempts to convey something of the battle waged by the early Christians, in Palestine, and ancient and lurid Rome. Then is pictured the manner of the spread of Christianity into other countries of the World, into Europe in the early centuries, later into Alaska, Africa, Australia and China, with newsreel sequences indicating the operation of the Church in both lay and religious aspects today. Such material as the war sequences and jungle animal shots in Africa and the like are rather obviously inserted to impart to the film a measure of drama, thrill and what is meant to be entertainment punch. These sequences do, to an extent, enhance the effectiveness of the whole.

Much of the second half of the feature is devoted to scenes within the Vatican, virtually a compilation of scenes seen many times before. There are the opening of the Vatican radio station offered by Senator Marconi, Pope Pius XI addressing huge throngs in Rome on the occasion of his induction to the position following the election of Cardinals. The Eucharistic Conferences, held every two years in various cities of the world, are given a share of attention.

It is a Catholic motion picture, a story of the Catholic Church in brief pictorial form, touching on highlights of past and present. That fact must definitely be borne in mind by the exhibitor, and where he may offer the film to those who would be interested, he has an opportunity. Contact with Catholic groups in the community is the obvious method of procedure in selling the film.—Aaronson, New York.

Distributed by Beacon Films. Supervised by Rita C. McGoldrick. Continuity written by Rev. Francis X. Talbot, S.J. Narration by Pedro de Cordoba. Release date, December 1, 1933. Running time, 70 minutes.

Alice in Wonderland

(Paramount)

Dream Fantasy

Both producer and exhibitor have ample precedent on which to base hopes for the success of "Alice in Wonderland." As an allegorical dream fantasy in which Alice meets all the famous characters, it is a radical departure from any current entertainment trend. There is no drama. There is a lot of romance, comedy, thrill and spectacle surrounding the adventures of a modern little girl who dreams herself into the room behind the looking-glass to live with the friends she loves so well.

"Alice" is a unique experiment in adapting the personalities of known stars to fairy-tale characters. It has two definite assets. First, the popular reception accorded the Disney subjects, "Santa Claus' Workshop," "Babes in the Wood," "Old King Cole," "Pied Piper" and "Three Little Pigs," has demonstrated effectively that theatre-goers are appreciative of visionary novelty. Where these animated cartoons succeeded, "Alice" has the additional appeal of utilizing the color of human beings to create its interpretive novelty. Thus there are familiar household characters as well as names to sell. That it is often difficult to identify the personality with the character should be an audience-interesting advantage, rather than a handicap. Secondly, "Alice" will be widely released during the Christmas holiday season. At that time, the public being in a more than ordinarily sentimental mood should be more easily persuaded to consider this type of entertainment.

Because "Alice" is such a different entertainment attempt, it requires an uncommon brand of showmanship in its selling. Primarily it's a children's attraction, though there's an abundance of name values for the adults. The story in action and dialogue is simply the turning of pages in Lewis Carroll's book with each new character presentation being a separate episode. To arouse the maximum patron appreciation, it appears that the fairy-tale atmosphere that marks the show should be preserved and expanded.

Paramount has prepared an extensive publicity and exploitation campaign to support this picture. It would be wise to avail yourself of the benefit of every suggestion advanced whenever possible. Additionally, not forgetting that today's youngsters are pretty modern-minded, cooperation and endorsement should be sought from schools, parent-teachers' associations, churches, clubs and every other influential contact medium.

The show offers plenty of opportunity for ingenious showmanship. Most necessary is it to get patrons into the proper receptive mood. Knowledge of what to do and how to do it is the peg upon which hangs the individual exhibitor's success with "Alice in Wonderland."—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Night Before Christmas

(United Artists)

Excellent, Timely

Walt Disney comes to the fore with a Christmas Silly Symphony that ranks with his other numbers in the color series. Santa comes to the home with his bag of toys, fills the stockings and watches the toys having a grand party. The youngsters waken, the toys rush back into their packages and boxes and Santa escapes up the chimney. The children burst in, start on their presents and rush to the window in time to see Santa in his sleigh drive away into the sky. Fine material for the family, and a natural, worth special billing, for the Christmas season.—Running time, 8 minutes.

He succeeds, with the aid of caricatured comedians, representing, in very clever fashion, Laurel and Hardy, the Four Marx Brothers, Chaplin, Garbo, Durante and several others. He is being tortured by the jealous court jester when he wakes. It is an amusing and clever cartoon.—Running time, 8 minutes.

COUNSELL

OF THE PRESS,

I Thank You!

N. Y. Daily Mirror:

"A stunner ... Elmer Rice's recent Broadway hit has been made into a film drama of unusual strength and brilliance ... Barrymore does his greatest work as 'Counsellor at Law,' and Bebe Daniels is a delightful foil for him."

N. Y. American:

"Another hit for the Music Hall!... It comes to the screen a vivid, well-played piece, in which tense drama is punctuated by lines of laughter."

N. Y. Daily News:

(3 stars) "Elmer Rice's play faithfully filmed ... Barrymore performance convincing ... William Wyler, who directed, keeps the action moving spiritedly."

N. Y. Herald-Tribune:

"Barrymore is admirable in his role ... 'Counsellor at Law' is a striking, intelligent and invariable interesting motion picture—another in that series of superior works being presented at Radio City Music Hall."

N. Y. Times:

"Incisive and compelling ... moves along with lusty energy, the scenes being so complete that none of them seems a fraction of a minute too long ... Mr. Barrymore gives to it the vigor, imagination and authority one might expect."

N. Y. Journal:

"Elmer Rice's silver-tongued attorney is impersonated by John Barrymore, who has in the play a highly entertaining vehicle for his brilliant talents ... Smartly cast and directed ... moves fast and vigorously."

N. Y. World-Telegram:

"Mr. Barrymore appears here in a part which falls so perfectly into line with his ability as a sterling actor that it might very well have been written for him originally."

N. Y. Sun:

" 'Counsellor at Law' the daddy of them all (Lawyers' films) ... Unquestionably the best written lawyer play of the modern era in this country."

DEAR HERALD:

E. A. Reynolds of the Strand theatre at Princeton, Minn., writes and says that likely we don't remember him and his "Minnesota 13." It grieves us that an exhibitor would credit us with having such a short memory. How could we ever forget him, and how could we ever forget his "Minnesota 13"?

E. A. goes on to say that he would like to be up in the pineries of northern Minnesota located in a warm log cabin with a few bags of flour, some potatoes, coffee, pork, etc., etc., and some traps, and all set to put in the winter away from codes, lynchings, acquittals of the Touhy gang, etc., etc., and wants to know how we would like to join him. He forgot to mention that, isolated like that, we'd be away from jazz orchestras, crooners, inflation and deflation, Al Smith and Father Coughlin, Eddie Cantor and other disturbing elements.

He also forgot to mention the deer we'd have hanging out in front of the cabin, and the bass and pike we'd catch through a hole in the ice, and he also left out a goodly supply of his famous "Minnesota 13." Oh, boy! Oh, boy! Would we like to go? Well, you tell 'em, Oscar, (last, and real name, unknown), you tell 'em.

No, we haven't forgotten you, E. A. We know just how your town looks and how your theatre looks, and know that it is located on the west side of main street pretty well toward the south end and you are rather tall and a blond. How's that for a memory when we only met you for the one time? Don't you dare go to northern Minnesota for the winter without us. Don't you dare do it.

Art Records of the Majestic and Empress theatres at Hebron, Neb., writes us about the big catfish in the Blue river that got away. He wants us to come down there and catch 'em. That's a very sensible request. Art says when he has a poor picture he might as well hang a skunk up in his lobby. He thinks the public can smell a poor picture. He's right about it; they can. Art's experience is no different from thousands of others who have told us the same thing, but Art, you can't feed 'em huckleberry pie all the time—the bakeries don't put 'em out, and somebody has to keep the bakeries busy.

An Onery M.D.

We wish somebody would come out here and fix Doc. He's getting pretty doggone onery and insists that we stay in the house and continue to take his horse medicine. Marjorie has doped us on everything she can think of from stove polish to Old Dutch Cleanser and the ducks are still flying up and down the Elkhorn river, and here we are. Oh, Geewhiz, Goshallfishhooks, Geminentlykraut.

The divine Ethel must have blown the lid off and opened her mouth and stuck her foot in it when she told the women's club down in Philadelphia the other day that "you don't know anything, you never did know anything and you never will know anything." Guess that was moving in with a stack of reds and blues, eh?

If Ethel had said that to the girls out here in our town they would have said, "Oh, phooey on you, Ethel, you are not so much; you better go and take a dose of Pluto water." That's the way our girls are. We'd like to hear Ethel tell Una Merkel that. Una's reply would be worth listening to.

If the N. R. A.'s and the C. C. C.'s
Knew our pants are out at the seat and knees,
And the P. W. A.'s and the F. L. C.'s
Could hear us sneeze in this wintry breeze,
They'd join with the C. W. A.'s and F. R. B.'s
And the A. A. A.'s and the H. L. C.'s
And the C. R. A.'s and the R. F. C.'s
And send us P. D. Q. some B. V. D.'s.

By gosh, there's no use talking, we've got to get some pants from somewhere, and if the above relief associations won't help us out we are going to call on the F. C. A.'s, the H. O. L. C.'s, the T. V. A.'s and the F. A. C. A.'s. Some of 'em ought to do something for us.

But speaking of pants, we are reminded of the colored brother who was always calling on his pastor and requesting a donation of some sort until the pastor got tired of it and wrote the brother not to send him any more requests, for he was tired of receiving them. To which the brother replied, "Dear Pahson. Dis haint no request; dis am a fact. Ah haint got no pants."

That Man Harry Day

Just because Harry G. Day of Ida Grove, Iowa, has one of the finest theatres in the state is no reason for him to swell up like a poisoned pup and say that, because he is sending us a renewal of his subscription to the HERALD, he don't expect us to call on him again (just as though all we'd call on him for would be his subscription). We'd like to be in kicking distance of that guy.

Harry says, "Mrs. Day sends her regards" and says "Come up and see us some time." It's simply astounding the number of invitations we get from the ladies. Thanks, Mrs. Day; we'll sure do it some time. Let us know when Harry is out of town.

HELP, HELP! We've got to have a Bootlegger's Code right away. Out here in our town the Leggers have put their enamel remover up to $2.40 a pint, and to test its efficacy we gave Marjorie's skyoodle two drops and all he did was gnaw the legs off of the piano, tear the cushions off the divan and chase a truckload of cattle six miles before the effect wore off. What we want is something with a kick in it, something that will make us want to hit our grandmother with an ax.

When we consider that a jury of American citizens up in St. Paul turned that notorious Touhy gang loose and gave them a clean bill of health to go out and prey upon society, we wonder if the citizens of San Jose, Calif., didn't do the right thing, after all, when they lynched those confessed kidnapers and murderers recently. We are decidedly opposed to mob law. We can't right a wrong by committing another wrong, but when justice is meted out by shyster lawyers and spineless courts and juries, what other recourse does society have?

This government one time sent Admiral Decatur over to the Barbary Coast with instructions to clean up the pirates, and he sailed into the harbor of Tripoli and didn't stop to ask any questions, but proceeded to sink every pirate ship in the harbor. Since then there has been no more piracy on the high seas.

Sh! Here comes the Doc!

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

ANN CARVER'S PROFESSION: Fay Wray—Excellent entertainment. Good on any night. It's clean. Running time, 68 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BRIEF MOMENT: Carole Lombard, Gene Raymond—A good socalled society drama with good production values. Both stars appear to good advantage while no special draw. It easily held its own.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

DANGEROUS CROSSROADS: Chic Sale—Just a fair picture of railroads. Not enough Chic Sale. Business way below average. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Nov. 10-11.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

HELL'S CARGO (BELOW THE SEA): Fairly good picture. Slow starting, but excellent climax. Pleased. Business only fair. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Dec. 1-2.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE WILD HORSES: William Janney, Dorothy Appleby—Pleased audience very much. Good Indian stuff in it that pleased all. Fair business. Running time, 67 minutes. Played Nov. 20.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William, May Robscon—No doubt that this picture is the best made this year or any other year. It's a picture everybody will see, and those that will see it will send you many more. Thanks to Columbia for this great picture. Play it and step on advertisement. You will never regret. Played November 12-13-14.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William, May Robson—This is 100% entertainment value. It has something that will please everyone from the rough-necks to the high collared boys. Plenty of nice compliments from our patrons. H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

MAN'S CASTLE, A: Spencer Tracy, Loretta Young—This is the second we have shown of Columbia 1933-34 features and boy what a HIT. A grand picture, beautifully done. Our patrons thought it was much better than "7th Heaven." Columbia have very good accessories and we used a little extra on this and with very good results. Played December 3-4-5.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

MY WOMAN: Helen Twelvetrees—Pretty good program picture. It's clean. Running time, 74 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

PAROLE GIRL: Mae Clark—An old picture that got over O. K. Played Nov. 3-4.—G. A. Hart, Roxy Theatre, Stratford, Texas. Small town patronage.

POLICE CAR 17: Tim McCoy—If the rest of McCoy pictures are as good at this, we will be satisfied. Played Nov. 10-11.—G. A. Hart, Roxy Theatre, Stratford, Texas. Small town patronage.

THAT'S MY BOY: Richard Cromwell—This is old. but would not ask for a better one. It pleased everyone that saw it. Played Nov. 24-25.—G. A. Hart, Roxy Theatre, Stratford, Texas. Small town patronage.

TREASON: Buck Jones, Shirley Grey—This is one of the best western pictures I have ever seen anywhere, and if your patrons like good westerns, here it is. The locale is the state of Kansas soon after the Civil War, where a band of soldiers, headed by a woman, are raiding and burning towns. Jones as the Federal captures and falls for the woman. Played one day to a big business. Running time, 61 minutes. Played December 2.—J. J. Melford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TREASON: Buck Jones—This is a good Saturday action picture, as are all of Buck Jones' pictures. The western fans will never go back on this star, as he always gives them a pleasing performance in most any kind of a story. Shirley Grey is splendid support for him in this one. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Nov. 25.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

WHITE EAGLE: Buck Jones—Excellent western. Much better than the usual run of westerns. Pleased 100 per cent. Business just fair. Running time, 75 minutes. Played Nov. 17-18.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

First National

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Pat O'Brien, Bette Davis—A very nice program picture. An all star cast put this one over in good shape. Good enough for any theatre on any day of the week.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Bette Davis, Lewis Stone—A fine picture. Fine business, but a poor print with plenty of noise. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Dec. 3-4.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Bette Davis, Lewis Stone—A different kind of story that will probably please your patrons. The big "punch scene" in this one, according to the minds of the producers, is where the man and woman are in her room and he tries to "make her." This offers an excellent opportunity for you to tie up with your leading furniture store. Have them dress window with bedroom suite. Have a man and woman in the room and have the man trying to stay all night with the woman. Put in a loudspeaker so their conversation can be heard on both sides of the street. Have action and dialogue so you will arouse the "sex appeal" in the spectators. Then go to your theatre and lay off your ushers and do everything possible to cut down expenses. Have any of you boys ever heard about the producer that went crazy and made "Little Women?" Yes, they have actually made a clean picture. Your people know about it. The folks here are already asking me when we are going to have it and everyone of them said something about it being clean.—H. G. Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

CENTRAL AIRPORT: Richard Barthelmess—Not the good, clean picture Barthelmess appeared in last, "Cabin in the Cotton," and drew only one-fourth the business. Sorry we played it on our best picture night. Dirty in spots.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Very good. A baseball story, and well done. Played November 30-December 1.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

FEMALE: Ruth Chatterton—This one is different from the common run because the heroine chases the men. Exploit this one by having women flirt with men on the streets. Have the woman slip them a card on which is written something like this: "If you want to see me tonight go to the blank theatre, between eight and nine and sit about middle way down on right hand side."—H. G. Stettmund, H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla.

HAVANA WIDOWS: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—A plenty spicy picture that went over swell. Plenty hot in spots but will not offend anyone. A nifty trailer, and six good comedians should make the box office hum and the picture will please okay.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

I LOVED A WOMAN: Edward G. Robinson—A good one to put you to sleep. Had several walkouts on this one and the second night's business told the story. A very weak picture that failed on the lowest admission prices in the week.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

SHE HAD TO SAY YES: Loretta Young, Lyle Talbot—Just another one of those pictures that no exhibitor would have been better off if it had never been made.—T. S. Woolcott, Liberty Theatre, Waitsburg, Wash. Small town patronage.

WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD: Frankie Darro, Dorothy Coonan—Our first picture from this company on the new schedule, and what a picture. It has action, comedy, in fact it has a touch of everything. It's a pleasure to run a picture like this one. Went over good and everyone pleased. Played November 22.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

Fox

BROADWAY BAD: Joan Blondell, Ricardo Cortez—Just a very good program picture. Not a special, but it pleased the family night audience. Played November 22-23.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

DR. BULL: Will Rogers—A good picture to nice business. We can always depend upon Will for a good box office report. However, there seems to be a growing sentiment here that a little smut is creeping into the Rogers pictures lately. If this is not stopped a new clientele will have to be worked up for his pictures and the box office will suffer in the interim.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General small town patronage.

DR. BULL: Will Rogers—Not what my people like to see Rogers in. Did not draw like "State Fair." Am afraid his next one will take a nose dive here unless they keep him where he belongs in pictures for the family. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Nov. 13-14.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

GOOD COMPANIONS, THE: Jessie Matthews, Edmund Gwenn—Decidedly a good picture, well acted by a great cast, but not a box office success. Appeals to old country people best. Drags somewhat to the point of boredom almost for those who don't like English pictures. Only fair business resulted. Running time, 110 minutes. Played Nov. 16-18.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY: Warner Baxter, Elissa Landi—One nice, big lemon, like they grow in California. This was wished on me in place of a Janet Gaynor and it fell flat, with a dull, sickening thud. Didn't take in enough to pay the operator the second night. Recording so poor you cannot understand more than half of it, but guess that is enough, for they talk and talk and do not say anything. This "special" rates zero plus. Running time, 75 minutes. Played November 15-16.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

MAD GAME, THE: Spencer Tracy, Claire Trevor—A mighty good one of this class. A racket picture, but dealing with kidnaping. Pleased our patrons. Played Nov. 21-22.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey, Lew Ayres—Musical comedy that pleased. Charles Butterworth the hit of the show. The song "Gather Lip Rouge While You May" is very good. Played November 13-14.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey, Lew Ayres—Now here is a motion picture. Man, man, you will want to attend every show yourself when you run it. My folks thought it the best entertainment of the year. And I have recently played the two big musicals. But this has them both beat a mile as far as pleasing the public. Running time, 74 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General small town patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey—Failed to draw. No title, but it is a very pleasing picture. If you can get them it will please. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Nov. 20-21.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

PILGRIMAGE: Henrietta Crosman, Heather Angel, Norman Foster, Marion Nixon—I am another that took it on the chin with this picture. How the critics can rave about a dismal, heart-breaking picture such as this is beyond this writer's ken. I can't see any improvement over the product they had last year. Out of some eight pictures that I have run to date, "My Weakness" was the only one that clicked, and that is a bad batting average for any producer. The radio will gain in popularity again. Just when business was picking up you get a lot of lemons and they stay away until another good one comes along. They haven't stopped shopping yet and you can fool them a couple of times and then see your business slip.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

COLUMBIA PICTURES

POWER AND THE GLORY, THE: Spencer Tracy, Colleen Moore—A hard type picture to put over, some thought it wonderful and some thought it poor. These first specials from Fox this year have been flops for us. Here's hoping they start picking up in the very near future. Played November 16-17.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

POWER AND THE GLORY, THE: Spencer Tracy, Colleen Moore—This is another of those artistic masterpieces that are breaking a lot of small town exhibitors who are foolish enough to believe the reviewers. It is a good picture, all right, but it must certainly was not good for the box office. It seems a pity to waste such fine stars as Tracy and Colleen Moore on a thing like this. Running time 76 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General small town patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Sally Eilers, Ralph Bellamy—Excellent entertainment. Sally Eilers very good in this. Just the picture for Friday-Saturday. It's clean. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SECOND HAND WIFE: Ralph Bellamy, Sally Eilers—Old, but good for midweek picture. Pleased men as well as women. Business fair. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 22.—L. G. Tewksbury, Opera House, Stonington, Maine. Small town patronage.

STATE FAIR: Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers—Exceptional picture that drew well above average. These stars are well liked here. More pictures of this caliber would eliminate the necessity of double features. It's a treat to see your patrons come out smiling. Played November 30-December 1-2.—E. Reiss, Park Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla. General patronage.

WORST WOMAN IN PARIS: Benita Hume, Adolphe Menjou—As poor as they come. In the first place Benita Hume is not known and the story is thin. Menjou may wow 'em in New York but he is certainly a flat tire to head a cast, and try to put a picture over. Plenty of them exited before it was through.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MGM

ANOTHER LANGUAGE: Helen Hayes, Bob Montgomery—Another winner for Metro. This is an excellent production, clean, funny and entertaining from start to finish. I do not see how this picture can fail to please every audience from the metropolis to the small town in the sticks. You can't advertise this one too much. Running time, 79 minutes. Played November 18-19.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

ANOTHER LANGUAGE: Robert Montgomery, Helen Hayes—Robert Montgomery and Helen Hayes proved to be a great team in this picture and everyone spoke highly of both the stars and the cast. This is a splendid picture, rating about 100% entertainment. It will sell itself and advertise by word of mouth. Running time 75 minutes. Played Nov. 22-23. —William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan—Very good picture to fair business. The only objection to this one is the length. The acting of Brady and Morgan is very good. The music and dance numbers are O.K. The ones that saw it were pleased. Played December 4-5.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

HOLD YOUR MAN: Jean Harlow, Clark Gable—This is a wonderful picture with unusual drawing power. This is strong drama and will occasionally draw tears from the audience. This is strictly adult entertainment and will not appeal to the children. This is one of the best pictures of the year from Metro, but after so many bad ones, they should make a few good ones. Played one day to capacity business and pleased everyone. Running time, 89 minutes. Played November 30.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

LOOKING FORWARD: Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone—In this one Lewis Stone seems more in the limelight than Barrymore, but they both give excellent portrayals. The only fault is the length; it drags for the first two or three reels but becomes very interesting and entertaining from them on. Well liked by those who did see it. Business only poor.—Running time, 81 minutes. Played Nov. 20-21.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl, Jimmy Durante, Zasu Pitts, Ted Healy, Edna May Oliver—This is absolutely the screwiest, nuttiest picture that we have ever run. It don't make sense but it will do business if you lay to Pearl, who is Baron Munchausen of the radio fame. The only trouble is that Pearl's German dialect is a little hard to get, especially where there is music in the background. It wouldn't have a chance if it did not have this man Pearl with his radio reputation, for it is directed a little disjointedly. Durante is not so hot. The people are getting tired of him. His line is always the same. There is no variation to it and a little of it goes a long way with the audiences. The same goes for Zasu. She's slipping as far as draw goes.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl, Jimmy Durante—Musical numbers good! That's all! The movie industry must be hard up for comedians to put these two guys in pictures. Sorry I can't talk this one up, fellows. Business good mainly because it was thanksgiving night. Running time, 7 reels. Played Nov. 30-Dec. 1.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

MEET THE BARON: Jack Pearl—If you don't get the jitters watching Durante and Pearl trying to be funny, well, you can take it. Everything they did failed to click. First day business okay, but the second day was nothing.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: John and Lionel Barrymore—Don't know why they put all these stars in it. None had much to say except John Barrymore and Helen Hayes. Is well produced, but too much airplane flying. Pleased about 50 per cent. Patrons expected something extra with all these stars and were disappointed. Played Nov. 26-27.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: Clark Gable, Helen Hayes—This picture proved to be a disappointment in business as well as production. A very ordinary picture to very ordinary business. It takes more than an all star cast to put a picture over in this day and age.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

PENTHOUSE: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Fine picture to good business. Everyone liked it very much. When they stop on the way and use such words as "wonderful," "grand," etc., they must have enjoyed it.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

SOLITAIRE MAN: Herbert Marshall, May Robson—An English picture. Scotland Yard. Crooks (clever) and romance. Really interesting but it looks as if people here just can't take (good stuff) it. Played Nov. 24-25.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. General patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore—Another excellent picture that you will be glad you ran. Will please everyone and you can put your personal O.K. on it.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—Another hit for Marie and Wally and don't forget Frankie Darro, Robert Young and Maureen O'Sullivan. Do not think I can add any new praise for this production, as about everything has been said. Not so good at the B.O. owing to having been shown in two adjoining towns just a short time ago, but a show you will be proud to exhibit. Running time, 88 minutes. Played November 25-26-27.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—This is the picture that will let you know you are in the show business again. Dust off your unused seats because they will be occupied again. Good business for us even if we did get rained out one night. They will please practically everyone and will bring out the folks who only come about twice a year. —H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—Thought there was a depression until I ran this one. Packed them in for two nights. One man 95 years old walked a mile. Said he could not miss dear old Marie. Thought I had all the money in town, but they came right back the next two nights to see Marion Davies in " Peg O' My Heart." Good pictures never get old. Played Nov. 24-25.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—This is a very good picture and one that is sure to please any audience. This is a comedy drama and should be a natural at the box office. The thrilling climax will have every patron on the edge of the chair and adds considerably to the entertainment. It is good, clean amusement for the whole family. Played two days to capacity business and pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 88 minutes. Played Nov. 27-28.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—Well received here. Such characters always draw. Story very simple but give these two stars anything and until the people become a little more particular, Dressler-Beery will always be a box office hit. Played Nov. 19-21.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. General patronage.

TURN BACK THE CLOCK: Lee Tracy—Not so hot. Failed at the box office and failed to please generally. Maybe 40 per cent like it. Put this on the weak nights and sluff it off.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

IT HELPS ALL; SO HE JOINS

Representative of exhibitor appreciation of "What the Picture Did for Me" as a practicable help to the showman is the note from a new contributor, Louis Perretta, Crescent theatre, Mahoningtown, Pennsylvania.

Writes Perretta: "I first want to thank you for having 'What the Picture Did for Me' in your Herald, because it helps all exhibitors in many ways. I am listing a few pictures which I have played recently."

Look for his reports in this issue.

Monogram

SENSATION HUNTERS: Preston Foster, Arline Judge—This is another good little picture from Monogram, but not of the action type, as one might gather from the title. It will make an excellent mid-week showing. It is more of a romance with music, with several catchy songs and some dancing that will please the average theatregoer. Here's wishing Monogram success and many more good pictures. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 25.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI, THE: Mary Carlisle, Buster Crabbe—This is a very good college comedy romance that is full of entertainment. It is clean, lively and interesting from start to finish. The thrilling climax adds much to the entertainment. Plenty of music, rendered by Ted Fiorito and his orchestra and should make a hit with the audience. We played this one day to capacity business and pleased 100 per cent. Running time, 76 minutes. Played December 1.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

Paramount

BIG EXECUTIVE, THE: Ricardo Cortez, Elizabeth Young—Good program picture and fair box office, but leading character names have no drawing power here. Enough comedy to keep all in good humor. Richard Bennett real good in supporting cast. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Nov. 27-28.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Mary Carlisle—One of the biggest crowds this year and they all said good.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

HELL AND HIGH WATER: Richard Arlen, Judith Allen—Only a program picture with nothing but the title and Dick Arlen to pull them in. There are few who like Arlen in this type of picture. Why kill a star like this by casting him in a picture like this when there are so many who only rate such a picture. Running time, 66 minutes. Played Nov. 19-20.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West, Cary Grant—All Mae West from start to finish and they ate it up. Some thought that it was not as good as "She Done Him Wrong," but that is a matter of opinion. I, myself, thought that the settings for that picture suited her better than he circus setting of this one. But someone dared Mae into tights, as I understand one fan did, and so Mae had to show them. And she did. Her technique does not vary in either picture and I am wondering if she can keep it up with no variance in treatment, that of getting her man. There is no question but what Miss West has arrived and with good stories she should be a bet always. Smoky eyes and swinging hips and how. Played November 26-28. —A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

KING OF THE JUNGLE: Buster Crabbe, Frances Dee—Another old one that packed them in. One of the best of its kind. This man Crabbe is wonderful. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Dec. 1-2.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SHE DONE HIM WRONG: Mae West—I just don't know how to report on this one. Quite a number of our patrons did not like it and thought it was very suggestive; others liked it. Mae West is a good actress. I'd like to see her in a picture that has a good story and a good moral. "She Done Him Wrong" did not make any money for us. Running time, 66 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—A good picture for grownups, but too many nude statues for the kids. Took my trailer off after one day's running as there were too many comments and laughs from the younger set. Miss Dietrich marvelous actress and picture good at box office. Running time, 89 minutes. Played Nov. 24-25.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—This is only a fair picture, nothing big about it. This is not a musical, but a romantic drama and is strictly adult entertainment. The locale is a small German town, several generations ago, and the story centers about a statue that seemed to influence the lives of the three leads. Played one day to a good business. About 50% were pleased. Running time, 92 minutes. Played Nov. 23.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THIS DAY AND AGE: Judith Allen, Charles Bickford—Not a special. College life mixed with murder. Mr. Cecil DeMille probably wanted to bring before the public's eyes just how crooked some lawyers can be, but in the end the people always take a hand and straighten things out. Play it! Running time, nine reels. Played Nov. 28.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

THIS DAY AND AGE: Charles Bickford, Judith Allen—Here is a picture done in a big and sincere manner. A story wherein high school boys take the law into their own hands to avenge the death of one of their schoolmates when the police department and the court free the gangster with a maze of technicalities. While romance is lacking, there are many scenes that are thrilling and suspensive. As a whole it can be classed as big and in the "special class" and is worth making a fuss about. Business a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert, Richard Arlen—Not a very good selection for Saturday night, but our moderate sized audience was entirely pleased. Played November 25.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth —Fields is always good in anything he appears. This is a very good team in a fair picture. Nothing big, but will send them away pleased if you will play a good short subject with it. Running time, 54 minutes. Played Nov. 21-22. C. A. Pratt, Texas, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie —This is an excellent picture and the customers will go for it in a big way. Tuneful aplenty and above the average musical picture. Played it against strong opposition and business was fair. Everybody satisfied. However, Paramount holds the small towns back till all the cream is taken off of such pictures. Then should you make good they start in on them with a percentage split which is tough on little towns. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Nov. 25.—C. A. Pratt, Texas, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby—Nothing great, but just a good show that will do extra business. The production shows that not much money was spent on it. Should do well on your best nights. —Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

WHITE WOMAN: Charles Laughton, Carole Lombard—Absolutely no entertainment. Laughton's acting is excellent but you cannot understand what he says—so that's that. Played Nov. 28-29.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

WHITE WOMAN: Charles Laughton, Carole Lombard—Here's another one that should be left in the exchange. Dialogue of Laughton terrible in recording. The kind of a story that will not get any favorable comments and you'll want to hide as they come out with the look of disappointment on their face. But they force you to date and play these cluckers, if you want to show any of their pictures while they are new "I'm No Angel," "Duck Soup," etc. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Nov. 28-29.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

Principal

TARZAN THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—Am playing it as a straight serial. It has topped them all from the start and holds attention of adult audience.—J. A. Cook, Park Theatre, Huntington Park, Cal. General patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix, Elizabeth Allan—Did about twice as much as we had expected. Another good one from RKO. The story is good, the acting is good, the air scenes are good, in fact, the whole thing is good. Played December 1-2.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix, Elizabeth Allen—Good acting by Dix. He's always there. Sorry to see him in war pictures. Of course others want action so here you get it. Heroes of the sky, fighting and war. Play it if you must. Would like to see some civil war dramas made with Richard Dix. Less fighting. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 2.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

AFTER TONIGHT: Constance Bennett—Will say this one is very good if your patrons like her acting. That last picture we played her in, "Bed of Roses," was enough for me of her acting. I'm not telling you to play it. You know best. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 3.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

YOU READ HIS; LET HIM READ YOURS!

That's the philosophy of L. G. Tewksbury, of the Opera House at Stonington, Maine, in making a plea for fellow-exhibitors of the native state to join him in motion picture discussion in "What the Picture Did for Me." Reversing the slightly worn phrase into "As goes the Union, so goes Maine," state representation in the department must step along to keep up with the rapidity of general growth. But to return to Tewksbury:

"Am I the only exhibitor in Maine? Have never seen reports from anybody else in the state. Wake up, boys, and help the other fellow. You read his; let him read yours!"

Is he? And will you?

AFTER TONIGHT: Constance Bennett—A pretty good Bennett picture which isn't saying much any more. A war theme which the public cares nothing about any more and Connie as usual doing her reclining act. Did only fair business on Sunday and nothing Monday and Tuesday. Played Nov. 26-28.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

AFTER TONIGHT: Constance Bennett and Gilbert Roland—This is a very good picture, a drama with romance. The locale is the Austrian-Russian frontier about the time of the outbreak of the World War. The story of a woman spy with a dramatic-romantic angle. The story concerns the activities of a woman spy and the efforts of the Austrian Intelligence Corps to trap her. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Nov. 24.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

BIG BRAIN, THE: George E. Stone, Fay Wray—Did not take in rentals on this one, although it is a good picture with plenty of action. Running time, 76 minutes. Played Nov. 22-23.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: William Powell, Ann Harding—An excellent picture. Really should have been a special. People that do not appreciate Ann Harding in a picture like this are hard to please. William Powell also very good. It will live up to what you may promise. Second day doubled the first. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Nov. 16-17.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

FLAMING GOLD: Bill Boyd, Mae Clarke—Here is just a waste of film but they didn't waste so much, as plenty short. One of those pictures that open with a title and close with the end and you go out of the theatre without having seen a thing. Running time, 52 minutes. Played Nov. 19-21.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town theatre.

FLYING DEVILS: Ralph Bellamy—A good enough picture that went over okay on Friday and Saturday play date. Why don't producers give Cliff Edwards a better break? The few scenes he was in the picture was enough for him to steal the whole show—and he never even played the ukulele.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: William Gargan, Frances Dee—Played this one with "Tomorrow at Seven," also an RKO picture. Both are fair. Not strong enough for single picture. Done fair business.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot—Good picture of Annapolis. Excellent recording, but business was 'way below average. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Nov. 24-25.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—A very good program picture. Barrymore wonderful in this. When it comes to real acting this man Barrymore is hard to beat. It's clean. Running time, 72 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—Will Barrymore never appear in a bad picture? A story that all will enjoy and the love interest is well taken care of by Dorothy Jordan and Joel McCrea. Lionel as the country doctor is real good. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 22-23.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster—This is a comedy romance and a picture that will please all classes of patrons. It is a picturization of the "inside stuff" of radio life. At times it is funny, then tuneful with catchy musical numbers. In the cast supporting cast are Zasu Pitts and Frank McHugh. Plenty of fun, color and life in this one. Played one day to a good business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played November 29.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

RAFTER ROMANCE: Ginger Rogers, Norman Foster, George Sidney—A very clever little comedy above the average and the farther along in the story the better it gets. Ginger Rogers does nice work in this one. Clean as a whistle and plenty of laughs.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TOMORROW AT SEVEN: Chester Morris, Vivienne Osborne—Played this one with "Headline Shooter," also an RKO picture. Both are fair. Not strong enough for single picture. Done fair business. —Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

United Artists

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman—This is a prize package in the entertainment line. Those who enjoy real romance will relish every bit of this. Colman does his best work in this. Elissa Landi also shines in this. A bit that is outstanding is the part of the butler, Halliwell Hobbs, I think his name is. Business a fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman, Elissa Landi—This picture surprised us. Didn't expect much but it went over better than was expected. We did not break our house records by any means but it took care of itself. Colman does some real acting in this picture. His best since "Raffles." Played November 23-24.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

MISCHIEF: Ralph Lynn—For a comedy this could have had more comedy in it to put it across. Only fair entertainment results. Depends too much on the star's work. The vehicle is only fair, resulting in poor business. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Nov. 20-21.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SECRETS: Mary Pickford, Leslie Howard—Ran this picture a little too late. Too many of our patrons had seen it. A little too long, cut out about three reels of it and it would still be a fairly good show. The ones that came to see it were pleased. Played November 27-28.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

Universal

FLAMING GUNS: Tom Mix—Tom Mix at his best. Will more than please Mix fans and general Saturday's patronage. Plenty of action and cleverly done throughout. Certain patrons like only this kind of pictures. Others will stay away. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Nov. 4.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts —Very good production, but for some reason business was below normal. Played November 22-23.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville —They butchered this fine pair with that "going to have a baby" stuff Hollywood thinks so smart. If Hollywood could only think the public have had babies so long they are not interested in hearing it in every picture. Second night on this picture nil. Reason, picture—story itself. Not the stars. Hollywood, please give the stork a rest or else handle this delicate subject in a more subtle, dignified manner.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Slim, Summerville, Zasu Pitts —Better than most of these stars' pictures. Drew a good average considering the weather when this was played.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts —This team is good and well enjoyed by everyone.— H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville —Fair program picture. Though this pair have lost their popularity, if they ever had it, they are not funny. This line of hokum without real comedians goes over very poorly. Two reels of this kind of stuff is plenty. Running time, 68 minutes. Played Nov. 18.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

INVISIBLE MAN: Claude Rains, Gloria Stuart—A mystery picture that is really a good detective story, rather than a horror picture. Seemed to interest and please. Played Nov. 26-27.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

KING FOR A NIGHT: Chester Morris, Helen Twelvetrees—A very good picture. Public didn't like TRACY SEEMS A GOLD MINE IN 'ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN'

Werker Direction Gets Special Note

"ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN"
(20th Century-United Artists)

Director .....Alfred Werker
Novel by.....Nathaniel West
Adaptation .....Leonard Praskins
Photographer.....James Van Trees Sr.
Cast: Lee Tracy, Sally Blane, Sterling Holloway, Jean Adair, Paul Harvey, Matt Briggs, Charles Levinson, Adalyn Doyle, C. Henry Gordon, Isabel Jewel, Judith Wood, Etienne Girardot, Ruth Fellows, May Boley.

Darryl Zanuck has an above the average piece of entertainment here, and it is our hunch that he has more than that in a money way. Just call it our hunch, and take it for what it is worth. But if you had felt the spontaneous lift throughout an audience which came with the flashing of Lee Tracy's name on the screen, if you had heard the "welcome home" reaction when he appeared in the picture—we think you would make it your hunch too, Mr. Exhibitor.

And what an opening. First, an exceedingly clever slant on California earthquakes that caused Californians to chuckle and will make easterners roar—then Lee Tracy discovered. How? Slightly stewed, inclosed only in a Turkish bath sheet, which is inclined to slip, bad-boyish smile and all, trying to kid the boss that all is well on the Potomac.

You picture it. You don't need much imagination even if we have told it briefly.

We have to confess we haven't seen much of this chap Werker's work. And we are going to put him down on our list. He has the touch. That indefinable thing about handling the scene, from angles, to gag and line spacing, to topping the situation and then the tempo of a group of scenes that spells "Direction." He's due for a lot of attention on the strength of this one. Leonard Praskins' good script job helps.

Pete Harrison and others who have been worrying about the sex angle of the original on which the picture is based can rest easily. They have put it forth in a Lee Tracy laugh adaptation, with an innocuous love story and a brief heart moment, that has its adult spice appeal but won't cause any fathers of daughters to write letters to Dr. Lowell.

Sally Blane looks more like sister Loretta Young every day—and does a nice job despite a couple of lazy shots when someone let her work her first scene against a rear light that was fighting her every inch of the film. Sterling Holloway is a standout. Paul Harvey, May Boley, Jean Adair and C. Henry Gordon contribute good performances, while Isabel Jewel does a "Blessed Event" scene in the capable manner you would expect from that real trouper.

If you'd like to know the story it is about Lee Tracy as a hard-boiled heman reporter given the "Advice to the Lovelorn" assignment as a punishment, making good at it but with complications that involve his own love affair, and with a dramatic twist that finds a crooked druggist putting him on the spot.

Incidentally there is a local tie-up with drug stores for many exhibitors that will give them the greatest break they've had since the good old days of real exploitation.

And to sum it up—THERE'S GOLD IN THAT THAR LEE TRACY. You could sense it all over the theatre, and in the lobby afterward. It's one of those accidental breaks that make a showman's life. It's a natural.

And Cheering the Trailers too!

On two different occasions in the past week we have hit the trailer on "Advice to the Lovelorn." The theatres on both occasions were well filled, and we must truthfully report that the moment Lee Tracy's name was flashed on the screen the audiences burst into enthusiastic applause and hilarious laughter, with a few million cheers and wisecracks thrown in!

MOTION PICTURE DAILY'S HOLLYWOOD PREVIEW

"Advice to the Lovelorn"

(United Artists)

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 4.—Recent headline stories anent Senor Lee Tracy and his alleged Mexican peccadillos, together with the gossip created by the incident, have made Hollywood's stormy petrel something of an itinerant hero.

The day after the story broke, a trailer heralding a forthcoming Tracy production was flashed at a local house, with Tracy's appearance on the screen receiving the acclaim of a celebrity.

"Advice to the Lovelorn," Tracy's latest screen escapade, arrives when Tracy is the talk-of-the-moment personality of Hollywood. Handled effectively, this sentiment could easily be turned to good account by sagacious showmen.

"Advice to the Lovelorn" pictures Tracy as a reporter assigned to write a column signed by a female "Misslonelyhearts"—and much to his chagrin, too.

To blast himself out of the assignment, he ladles out syrupy hooey and phoney advice to lovesick males and females. He gets into jam after jam—but the circulation of the paper goes up and up. An outraged mother wants to horsewhip him for giving cockeyed advice to her daughter, but horsewhips the editor instead. His best girl makes him squirm in and out of situations he builds for himself. A racketeer in the cut-rate drug business puts him on his payroll—sells him some drugs which Tracy believes killed his mother.

Attacking the racketeer in his column, Tracy is put on the spot—wriggles off, but is in hot water again as the film fades out with a belly laugh.

Tracy gives his usual energetic, fourth estate portrayal.

Standouts in the cast are Sally Blane, Sterling Holloway and C. Henry Gordon.

Al Werker's direction stresses comedy, the opening, kidding California, getting big laughs.

Showmen should concentrate on Tracy—his publicity—and tieups with local sheets running "Advice to the Lovelorn" columns.

Released thru UNITED ARTISTS

the ending as hero dies in electric chair. Grant Mitchell as the pastor father of Chester Morris, the boxing champ, does some of the finest acting I have seen in some time. Played Nov. 19-21.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town theatre.

KING FOR A NIGHT: Chester Morris, Helen Twelvetrees—Story of the young boxer, who was king of his world for a night. Good picture, but with rather sad ending. Played Nov. 24-25.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LADIES MUST LOVE: June Knight, Neil Hamilton—June sings three or four songs. Light, peppy entertainment. Played Nov. 23-24.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

LADIES MUST LOVE: June Knight, Neil Hamilton—This picture is terrible in spite of nice press material on it. Each of the cast poorly selected. Story very weak. My patrons walked out on it, and second day I might as well not have opened the box-office. If you have it bought and cannot get out of playing it, send them a check and leave it in the exchange. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Nov. 14-15.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

LOVE, HONOR AND OH, BABY! Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville—These pictures are too much of a repition of what has gone before. They are not the kind of feature comedies that will ever pull in my situation as people don't appreciate the same old gags over and over plus the smut that these pictures usually have. Running time, 58 minutes. Played Nov. 23-24. C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Leo Carrillo—A disappointment here. However, it would have been a great picture had the producers put some comedy and a catchy song or two in it. Why can't some of the producers realize that a successful musical picture is not a picture with some music in it, it has to have something else. Running time, 84 minutes.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General small town patronage.

ROME EXPRESS: Conrad Veidt, Esther Ralston—Boys, what a piece of junk. On the second night left out third and fourth reels. No one knew the difference. You'll be ahead to pay for this and not run it as you won't be able to look your patrons in the face. —Bernard W. Levy, Central Theatre, Manville, R. I. Small town patronage.

RUSTLER'S ROUNDUP: Tox Mix—The kids turned out to see Tom Mix's final picture. It gave general satisfaction. Played December 2.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—This was one of the most satisfactory features we have played in months. Our women patrons seem to get an exceptional kick out of it. Played November 29-30.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Lelia Hyams, Robert Young—Very good story with some mighty good football. Clean and pleasing in all ways. Played Nov. 19-20.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—Just an ordinary football picture with a plot. Not very strong cooperation with local football squad. Created fair business. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 9-10.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

S.O.S. ICEBERG: Rod La Rocque—Some beautiful scenery in this picture filmed in Greenland. I was oversold on this one and spent extra money advertising same. Ran Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Business on Saturday was however better than average with Thursday. Friday no better than average. This picture is good for the kids and farmers for Saturday. Not enough action for average theatre patron. Played Nov. 16-19.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

TRAIL DRIVE, THE: Ken Maynard—Outdrew all the big specials and pleased. Guess the crowd figured they would not talk about having babies all night. And they did not. Play it. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Nov. 18.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

Warner

CAPTURED: Leslie Howard, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—Played it two days which grossed very good. Of course it's a Warner picture; it must be good. Played Nov. 29-30.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

COLLEGE COACH: Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien—A nice picture to extra business. Had a night set aside for school night and admitted all school children in the county at reduction in rates. Also had four football teams as my guests and got plenty of publicity. The picture should do extra business anywhere.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

GIRL MISSING: Ben Lyon, Glenda Farrell—A very good program picture, played a little late but did fairly well. I believe it would have done better if the trailer did not have the mystery touch to it. Mystery pictures are out, here. They will not go for them. But do not let this fool you, the picture is not of that type. Played November 28-29.—James Augustine, Spa Theatre, Hot Springs, Ark. General patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Warren William, Joan Blondell, Aline MacMahon, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Stung again. Yes it did pretty good business but after the split I found less than I obtained the previous week with an ordinary feature. The folks all seemed to like it, though the consensus of opinion seemed to be that it was not as good as "42nd Street." —M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General small town patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—Music, girls, comedy and beautiful settings. Well received but let's not ruin the show business by trying to cram people's throats too full of the same thing. Vary your diet doesn't only apply to things to eat. Played Nov. 26-28.—Paul C. Morgan, Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. General patronage.

GOODBYE AGAIN: Warren William, Joan Blondell—This was the last of the Vitagraph contract and the only picture that did not satisfy. You had to see it twice to get it. No good for small town. Played Nov. 17-18.—G. A. Hart, Roxy Theatre, Stratford, Texas. Small town patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell—An average murder mystery to about average business. I believe the public is tired of mystery and murder but this should go okay in mid-week.—Warren L. Weber, Deluxe Theatre, St. John, Kan. General patronage.

MARY STEVENS, M.D.: Kay Francis—A lively program picture that has some drawing power. The only objection is the fact the woman doctor has a child born out of wedlock.—T. S. Woolson, Liberty Theatre, Washougal, Wash. Small town patronage.

PADDY, THE NEXT BEST THING: Warner Baxter, Janet Gaynor—Excellent picture that will please about as near 100 per cent as anything you can put on the screen.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

PRIVATE DETECTIVE 62: William Powell—Double featured this and still it did not get by. Powell is all washed up as far as getting business is concerned although the picture is very good program fare.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kan. General patronage.

WORKING MAN, THE: George Arliss—Poor old George never gets any money at my box office. But it is a pleasure to run and go to see one of his pictures. You come out feeling clean. You are not ashamed to meet your minister at the theatre door. This picture is one of the most entertaining of the Arliss pictures. It is great entertainment. If he would make three or four more like it I do believe Arliss would mean Box Office in the small town.—M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas. General small town patronage.

World Wide

SON OF OKLAHOMA: Bob Steele—Terrible. The biggest bunch of nothing we ever played. Why do they release such. Running time, 62 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GREAT BIRD MYSTERY, THE: Scrappy Cartoons—Very good. Got plenty of laughs. Running time, eight minutes.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

HAUNTED HOUSE: Mickey Mouse—The first smutty Mouse to date. Skip it if you can.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

MICKEY IN ARABIA: Mickey Mouse—Up to the previous standard. Good for a lot of laughs. Appealing to young and old alike. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

MICKEY'S TOUCHDOWN: Mickey McGuire—Pleased the kids. Running time, two reels.—G. A. Hart, Roxy Theatre, Stratford, Texas. Small town patronage.

MOVIE STRUCK: Scrappy Cartoon—Poor. Running time, one reel.—G. A. Hart, Roxy Theatre, Stratford, Texas. Small town patronage.

POOR FISH: Leon Errol—Good comedy. Errol excellent. Running time, 21 minutes.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SAFE IN JAIL: Eddie Lambert—Good comedy. Burlesque on fugitive from a chain gang. Running time, 20 minutes.—Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SNAPSHOTS (NO. 10): Excellent. Running time, one reel.—G. A. Hart, Roxy Theatre, Stratford, Texas. Small town patronage.

STRANGE CASE OF POISON IVY: Sunlight Comedies—Excellent burlesque on old "meller" dramas. Went over good. Running time, 21 minutes. —Don R. Stevenson, Star Theatre, Williamson, N. Y. Small town patronage.

Educational

BABY BURLESKS: The poorest excuse for entertainment ever to reach our screen.—G. Carey, Strand Theatre, Paris, Ark. Family patronage.

GYPSEY FIDDLER, THE: Terry-Toons—Good music and singing puts this over.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HOCKEY HICK, A: Gleason Sport Featurettes—This is just another fair comedy of the sporting type. A few good scenes in a hockey game, a few laughs and that about covers the entire two reels. This is the last one for us and here's hoping for them. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

KEYHOLE KATIE: Vanity Comedies—This is a very good comedy of the slapstick variety and should bring many laughs from any type of audience. The story of a girl's school and their pranks on the rival sorority. This is sure to please and make them all laugh. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR MELODY: Outside of a couple of good dance numbers, this one is very poor and not worth running. The reaching for laughs by what were supposed to be comedians was terrible.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Fox

ANIAKCHAK: Special Subject—Interesting, but too long. Running time, 3½ reels.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

MGM

ARABIAN TIGHTS: Charley Chase—The last six or so comedies (?) from this boy have been pitiful but this one is good.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Theatre, Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

BARGAIN OF THE CENTURY: Pitts and Todd—The two comedy cut-ups, Pitts and Todd, ring up a few new gags in this one that are screams. By the way, we note Charlie Chase directs this one, making it better than usual. Running time, 19 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

BEAUTY AND THE BUS: Thelma Todd, Patsy Kelly—Just slapstick. Nothing to rave about. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BEDTIME WORRIES: Our Gang—These "Our Gangs" are getting weaker and weaker all the time. They have none of the original cast which made them at one time and are very poor comedies. In fact, the weakest spot in MGM's comedy lineup. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Ted Healy and Stooges—They listed it as a Colortone Review but there is no color in it. It is not up to the standard of MGM Colortones. Without the color it is rather overdone as to silly gags. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

PALEFACE: Flip the Frog—These cartoons are very poor. Just another unit of shorts you must make room for and play to get rid of them. Running time, seven minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

RHAPSODY IN BREW: Colortone Musical Revues—Beer garden comedy. Partly musical. I have seen better. Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

RIO THE MAGNIFICENT: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—A good entertaining short subject. Makes a welcome change on any bill. Running time, nine minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

SHERMAN SAID IT: Charley Chase—Chase always comes through with some comedy and the brand that most of the fans like. Of all the comedians, he has been the most consistent throughout the season and a good puller. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

SHERMAN SAID IT: Charley Chase—Charley sings and dances. This is an addition to his comedies.—D.

SWING HIGH: Sport Champions—This is trapeze stuff that is the best you ever saw regardless of what or when you seen it. Will cause more comment than your feature. Watch for a vulgar dirty remark in the first reel about one of the men's "Sex Appeal." Have your operator switch off sound for a few seconds when this happens.—H. G. Stettmund, Jr., H. & S. Chandler, Okla. Small town patronage.

TAXI FOR TWO: Taxi Boys—A pretty fair comedy for this brand. Has a few new gags for a change, making for a few laughs which is something. Running time, 19 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

BABES IN THE WOOD: Silly Symphonies—This is a wonderful cartoon. In fact, it is positively the best that we have ever screened in our theatre. All in gorgeous color. AFRICA SPEAKS—ENGLISH: Pepper Pot—This is only a fair comedy, but by far one of the best of this series. A few laughs and that is about all. BARBER SHOP BLUES: Melody Masters—Very entertaining. One of the best acts I have ever played.—Louis Perretta, Crescent Theatre, Mahoningtown, Pa. General patronage.

FIFI: Broadway Brevities—Not so good, too much singing. My patrons do not care for singing. They get plenty of that over the radio. Running time, 17 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOT COMPETITION: Looney Tunes—Good. Running time, seven minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

HOW'VE YOU BEAN?: Fatty Arbuckle—Not as good as some of his. Running time, two reels.—G. A. Hart, Roxy Theatre, Stratford, Texas. Small town patronage.

I LIKE MOUNTAIN MUSIC: Merry Melodies—This is a very good cartoon with plenty of laughs and good music. Quite a few caricatures of some of the movie stars and they all should bring many laughs. Pleased every one. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

"NO" MAN, THE: Broadway Brevities—Something different in musicals. After you play it you'll say thanks to Vitaphone. Play this one and boost it. Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

PARADES OF YESTERDAY: Pepper Pot—Was told this was not very good, but I think it is fine and it seemed to click here, more, perhaps, with the older patrons than with the young folks, but it is good.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

PAUL REVERE, JR.: Guy Shy, Janet Reade—This is fair entertainment as a short and about an average of this class of short subjects. Nothing to write home about. Running time, 17 minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

RUBINOFF AND BAND: Melody Masters—This is a very good one-reeler, showing Rubinoff and his orchestra playing several popular numbers. Also featuring Jean Sargent singing the popular selection, "Lying in the Hay." Good entertainment for both young and old. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SALT WATER DAFFY: Jack Haley—Not much to this one. Running time, 21 minutes—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SALT WATER DAFFY: Jack Haley—Another good comedy from Vitaphone. Without a doubt these are the best two-reelers on the market. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

SEASONED GREETINGS: Lita Grey Chaplin—You'll be disappointed in this one, as the recording is poor and this gal cannot sing. The line of hooey worked into it is very poor. You'd better have another short with it to pull it through, as it is only a filler. Running time, 17 minutes.—C. W. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas. Small town patronage.

SPEAKING OF OPERATIONS: Broadway Brevities—Very good. Running time, 17 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

THREE'S A CROWD: Merry Melodies—Another good cartoon comedy from Vitaphone. This one has plenty of music and seemed to please our entire audience. Practically this entire series are good and will make excellent fillers on any programs. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

WE'RE IN THE MONEY: Merry Melodies—Very good. Running time, eight minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Mascot

DEVIL HORSE, THE: Harry Carey, Noah Berry—One of the best serials we have ever run. Wish it had 50 episodes.—Claude Hazel, Star Theatre, Shreveport, La. Colored patronage.

Universal

CLANCY OF THE MOUNTED: Tom Tyler—A serial that seems to please, especially the kiddies and young folks who like westerns. Have shown five chapters and it is well produced and recorded, with beautiful scenery.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CLANCY OF THE MOUNTED: Tom Tyler—Twelve chapter serial. Only fair.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

GORDON OF GHOST CITY: Buck Jones, Madge Bellamy—This is a very good serial. However, it is not the big puller that you will expect, as there is nothing unusual in it, but an extra good cast. The story is the same old line of hokum contained in most serials. Business fair, but not above that on other serials. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. W. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas.—Small town patronage.

PERILS OF PAULINE: Evalyn Knapp, Robert Allen—Have played the first three chapters and seems that it will hold its own. Will not draw like "Gordon" did. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 202.—(A) Explain why light rays are refracted or "bent" when passing at an angle from a medium of one density to a medium of another density. Note: I will look upon this with some leniency, as the matter is not fully explained in the Bluebook. Such of you as can visit a public library will find explanation in some good work on physics. (B) Just what is meant by spherical aberration in a lens. (C) Explain its effect, illustrating if you wish by diagram. Note: When making drawings, use either sharp pencil and straightedge or black ink and straightedge. Don't send "sloppy" drawings. (D) What quality of a lens produces chromatic aberration?

Answer to Question No. 196

Bluebook School Question No. 196 was: (A) Of what does rubber-covered insulation consist? (B) Were you to receive some R. C. wire and find the wire itself to be just plain, uncoated copper, what would you do and why? (C) When you see power lines supported by two insulators in series, what do you conclude? If there were four or six in series what would you conclude? If upon preparing to run some wires into conduit you found only weather-proof insulation available, no other kind available for days, circuit to be used within a few hours, what would you do? (D) Under what conditions is it not permissible to use R. C. wire? (E) In what classes of work is it necessary to to use R. C. wire?

The following made good on these: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; H. H. Menefee; G. E. Doe; L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; J. Wentworth; W. Ostrum; P. Gaeth, Jr., B. Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg; K. Again we urge you: write your names plainly at top of first page; also number of question you are answering. We have much trouble deciphering illegibly written names. If you are not guilty, the foregoing won't hurt your feelings; if you are, I hope you emit a vigorous "ouch" and—do better.

To section (A) the answer of our old friends Rau and Evans is concise and correct, as follows:

"Rubber-covered insulation consists of pure rubber in which is embedded a copper wire coated with tin. This rubber coating is protected and its insulation properties aided by one or more layers of cotton braid impregnated with a fireproof insulating compound."

(B) Paul Gaeth says:

"I would return the wire and secure other wire properly coated with tin, for the reason that rubber contains sulphur and sulphur acts upon copper to weaken it by a process very similar to corrosion, in its effects. Not only would such action weaken the wire, but by reducing its cross section it would increase its resistance so that finally if its rated current be used, heating would result. Sulphur does not act thus on tin, which is why all R. C. wires are tin-coated."

(C) G. E. Doe answers thus:

"Since insulation must be increased as voltage is increased, and since one ordinary small insulator is sufficient for ordinary commercial voltages, I would conclude that the one having two insulators in series was a 'low tension' power line, probably less than 1,000 volts. Four insulators in series would lead me to estimate the voltage as probably around 5,000. Six of them would probably mean somewhere between five and ten thousand volts, though I would presume six insulators of the sort usually employed on such work would withstand perhaps 20,000 volts.

"As to the second section of the question, I would certainly not put the fireproof insulated wire into conduit. If that were pulled off here in Chicago it would probably cost the man who did it his license. Under the conditions named I would consult the proper authority and ask permission to run a temporary circuit without conduit protection, the same to be used until R. C. wire could be obtained. If properly done there would be no good reason why such a circuit might not be used in such an emergency."

(D) W. Broadbent says:

"Rubber-covered wire may not be used in places having high temperature, or where fireproof, slow-burning or weatherproof insulation is demanded."

There seems to be a general misunderstanding to the effect that R. C. cannot be used where wires are bunched on rear of switchboards. The rule with regard to this (Page 162, National Electrical Code) is: "Insulated conductors where closely grouped as in rear of switchboards shall each have a substantial flameproof covering."

(E) F. B. Klar and T. H. Morton say:

"In all interior work where fireproof or slow-burning insulation is not demanded, it is necessary to use R. C. wire. Rubber-covered insulation in conduit is imperative."

Buys Up Duovac Tubes

The Harrison Radio Company, of 142 Liberty Street, New York, has purchased the entire bankrupt stock of Duovac tubes. Although originally purchased for use in broadcast stations, they have available for sale to theatres a quantity of tubes of various types. The company has indicated that prices on these tubes represent a large saving.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

EDUCATIONAL STARS FORETELL PROFITS FOR WISE SHOWMEN

YOU CAN READ IT IN THE STARS! Educational's Big-Star-Name attractions are blazing across the film firmament, and astrologers of the show world foretell profits for wise exhibitors from the favorable conjunction of major constellations in this stellar group. Every star of major magnitude! Every subject a sparkling unit of entertainment. Every group a nebula of scintillating subjects. Hitch your Short Subject Policy to the Big-Star-Name Educational Program for a brilliant success during the coming year.

The Busy Comedy Lots

EDUCATIONAL Studios in Hollywood . . . literally a bee-hive of production industry. 'King Bee' E.H. Allen and his swarm of comedy concocters completing "FROZEN ASSETS" with ANDY CLYDE buzzing around as Easy Mark Anthony . . . making hot love to Queen Bee Cleopatra! . . . There's a honey of a role for Andy! .

LLOYD HAMILTON . . temporarily out of commission due to an accident . . . toddles in again in a MERMAID COMEDY . . . "POP'S PAL" (oh what a pal!) . . with George Bickel and Billy Bevan.

The youngsters who make so much hotcha in "Frolics of Youth" are whooping it up in "WHAT TO DO?" . . and are producing for the next one "PARDON MY PUPS" (There's a title!)

* * * *

AND IN THE EAST . . . Tom Howard has made his most uproarious comedy . . . he's a dumb detective with a just-as-dumb partner . . . The name of this sweet patootie is "DIVORCE SWEETS."

Strike up your mandolin! . . . Tom Patricola and Charles Judels . . . have completed a rollicking comedy of Old Mexico and its bad hombres..."THE GOOD BAD MAN"

MORAN & MACK . . . the 'Two Black Crows' . . . fly all the way from frozen Alaska to Hades for laughs in "THE FREEZE-OUT." . . . they're hot laughs! . . .

EDUCATIONAL'S "TREASURE CHEST"

a Box Office Cache of scintillating entertainment gems that radiate as much brightness and joy as a Christmas tree ablaze with Yuletide cheer. These one reel jewels will fill your house to the roof-top with the festive spirit all the year 'round.

"DAY DREAMS"

. . a fantasy of rare loveliness . . . the visualization of a child's dreams . . . with special music by Henry King and Walter Scharf . . . played by Henry King's orchestra . . . is an ideal subject for holiday bookings.

"WHAT DOES 1934 HOLD"

. . . another timely gem for the holidays from the "Treasure Chest" . . . in which the internationally famous astrologer WYNN will show what is in store for the coming year . . . according to his readings of the stars.

BIG STAR NAMES IN FIRST RELEASES

TWO MORE FAMOUS STARS make their first appearance for Educational in new single-reel subjects in the popular SONG HIT STORY series. . . .

JAMES MELTON IN "THE LAST DOGIE" with the noted tenor singing several of the famous cowboy laments.

HELEN MORGAN IN "MANHATTAN LULLABY" with the famous torch singer at her melodious best.

BEAUTY—ROMANCE—FUN

WHILE EDUCATIONAL'S ONE-REEL MUSICAL gems make a perfect setting for the melody spots on your programs . . LAUGHS and ROMANCE are also found in abundance in Educational's single-reel entertainment . . . Nothing is more sure-fire for a laugh than the TERRY-TOON cartoon classics . . . and nothing more beautiful than the natural color "ROMANTIC JOURNEYS."

SHIRLEY TEMPLE GRADUATES FROM BABY STARS TO "FROLICS"

GRADUATED from the Baby Stars after having been featured in several of Educational's Baby Burlesks . . . SHIRLEY TEMPLE is now appearing in "FROLICS OF YOUTH" . . She is seen in "WHAT'S TO DO?"

EXPLOITATION

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

Effective exploitation of motion pictures is an essential factor in the progress and prosperity of the industry. Irrespective of how great, in terms of potential box office draw, any motion picture may be, it cannot be proportionately profitable to the theatre unless it is represented to the public in such terms and in such manner as to create in the minds of the public a genuine desire to see it.

The theatre must, of course, depend greatly on word-of-mouth promotion. But this is a decidedly variable factor which cannot be gauged in advance and cannot be relied upon. Hence the public must be told. If the telling is fortified by considerable word-of-mouth advertising—so much the better. But whether it is or is not, the theatreman consistently must see to it that the public is adequately informed about coming product—and that it is informed in an arresting manner.

Failure to do this—any lag whatsoever in this vital function, cannot help but slow the progress of the industry. Hence the responsibility and the opportunity of the theatreman in this connection is enormous.

Now, at the approach of a New Year—which ought to be a year of really bigger and better exploitation—the Managers' Round Table Club in an effort to recognize meritorious work and thereby stimulate its creators to even greater efforts announces a series of awards to managers for outstanding campaigns.

Such recognition is fit and proper. If it shall serve to widen and better the uses of exploitation its sponsors shall feel that their objectives in providing the awards have been splendidly served.

"ATTENTION DETRACTORS?"

The following from a Round Tabler's recent communication contains much food for thought concerning a matter that without question can stand quite a bit of simplification. He says:

"You no doubt have seen from time to time, the ones, threes and sixes put out by the various producers on their particular pictures. Have you ever tried to read what this paper sometimes has to say from across the street or from 20 to 30 yards away? . . . it seems that each company is trying to outdo the other with as many colors as they can, instead of trying to present paper that will tell the story in a manner that will attract attention instead of detracting from it . . . we should like to get your opinion regarding this, and what can be done through the influence of the Club pages."

Your chairman can well sympathize with this member's complaint, having tried unsuccessfully in the past to clean up some of the poster mess. Without doubt, home office ad men agree in part, but eager as they are to turn out work that will "attract instead of detracting attention," the flies in the ointment oftimes are the legal requirements in the contracts of the lesser players, directors and authors that necessitate inclusion of their names in the billing.

Not all paper is so burdened, but the effect of many an attractive poster has been destroyed by the stupid demands of "no-draw" names that do not mean a hoot at the box office. Nevertheless, there is more to the subject than these silly studio vanities, and our further findings will be chronicled in a subsequent issue.

In the meantime, if there are others who wish to voice their accord or disagreement with this manager's protest, as usual the Club columns are wide open to whatever they have to say. Let's have it.

A SPLENDID ATTITUDE

A few days ago, we had the pleasure of hearing from a member, long silent J. P. Harrison, whose activities on "Duck Soup," we have given space on another page. With an account of the campaign he includes the following cogent words. Read them:

"It is not fair and it isn't right to take everything and not give back in return. . . . The right spirit is to put back in the Club at least as much as you take out, so at this time am enclosing a few stunts on this date."

There are many members, splendid showmen, who read the Club pages religiously and from them obtain many ideas. But due to their modesty, desire for self-effacement or kindred cause, reports of their doings are rare. To these, and to the other "laggards" is the suggestion made that they adopt Harrison's splendid attitude.

A. Mike Vogel

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Maybe this is a "Believe It Or Not" Cartoon.

Harrison Promotes Real Duck Soup as Give Away

A campaign that embraced a free toy Christmas matinee, and a tieup whereby a nearby restaurant distributed over 15 gallons of real duck soup were two of the clever slants executed by Manager J. P. Harrison, Waco, Texas, on his showing of the latest Marx Brothers' opus.

The soup stunt, started as a gag, was publicized in a two-column ad to the effect that to each patron attending the preview midnight showing would be given a ticket good for a load of "zoup." It went over so well that the restaurant ran out of supplies early the next day. A nice gesture to the needy was incorporated in the same ad whereby Harrison advertised for a hundred ducks to be paid for over the market price and to be distributed among the unemployed. Signed "The Four Marx Brothers," it naturally attracted plenty of attention.

The accompanying photo illustrates how "J. P." tied in his picture to the toy matinee. On the shelves were placed the contributions from the youngsters, and in the center the table was elaborately set with the cutouts fitted to the chairs, the card in the center reading "Laughing Menu." Incidentally, the shelves have been used since the opening of school for the collection of canned goods brought to the theatre for the free food matinees Harrison has been putting on monthly for the benefit of under-privileged school children.

An excellent street bally made itself felt in the person of four men who wore specially made bright orange lettered smocks, so that when the four lined up the title and theatre were spelled out across their breasts from left to right. Each also wore huge, grotesque papier-mache heads closely resembling the Brothers, which naturally brought the desired results.

This street gag should go over as well in other spots, and we have written Harrison for costs and details of their construction, which will be published upon receipt for the information of the membership. The permanent lobby shelf idea for canned goods is not a bad good will slant, either.

Harrison's Striking Display

Harry Peddles Tin Cans on "Duck Soup"

And now it comes in cans, according to Round Tabler Harry Botwick, Paramount, Rutland, Vt., who sends along an honest-to-Henry tin can sealed and labeled "Laughing Soup" to advertise his showing of the Marx insanities. The cans were passed out on the streets during the rush hours and as the size and shape were such that people had to carry them in their hands, the stunt therefore was very noticeable and built up a pile of laughs.

The labels were printed locally and sold the picture as well as providing giggles, a smart line being "Look for the opening date on every can." Each of these contained an imprinted paper bagful of peanuts, and the work of filling, sealing, and labeling was done by Botwick and his house staff. The expense for the entire thing was about $20 for 500 cans, which Harry says paid excellent dividends at the box office.

Round Tablers Put Over Season Drive

An autumn leaf trade-mark cut in all theatres and co-op advertising readily identified the "October-November Autumn Season Drive" put over successfully at the Capitol, Lyric and Orpheum Theatres, Aberdeen, S. D., by City Manager A. J. Sonosky, aided by Manager Herbert Gahagan of the Lyric. The cut was used wherever possible, copy varying according to ad.

For instance, merchants used it to congratulate the theatre on the coming pictures; it was made up as a sticker placed on all store packages, restaurant and soda fountain menus and also glued to the back of tickets sold for a series of high school dances. The leaf idea was also carried out as background, painted on a number of leading downtown windows, and on a special six sheet poster pasted in center of lobby floor.

Newspapers, of course, gave splendid support, outstanding being a front page 40-inch type ad, announcing the opening of the season. A unique ad that caused plenty of buzzing was a cartoon idea in which the photographed heads of leading citizens on midget cartoon bodies praised the coming shows. Papers also ran three-column cuts showing Mickey Mouse disembarking from airplane, bringing some of the new pictures.

An effective tieup was arranged with the local 4-H Club in which tickets were given as prizes for the best exhibit of garden produce, handicraft, etc. Two thousand letters to club members were sent out by the Club officials, all of which of course mentioned the theatre. Special calling cards were printed with the names of the theatre cashiers, the girls making a house to house canvass, leaving a card at each house with a short talk on the coming attraction, besides a bookmark with names of the big pictures.

Another unique idea was the distribution of pieces of jigsaw puzzles made up from production stills, one piece being sent to every home within a certain district accompanied by a letter stating that the 34 other pieces of the puzzle were distributed in that neighborhood, and offering prizes for those collecting the complete sets and turning them into the theatre.

HERALD OFFERS AWARDS FOR 1934 EXPLOITATION

Martin Quigley Will Present Plaques to Managers For Outstanding Monthly Campaigns Submitted To Club; Grand Award to Be Given for the Best Campaign of Year; Every Theatre Manager Everywhere Is Eligible for These Important Prizes

by A-MIKE VOGEL

The Managers' Round Table Club is honored to announce the inauguration, starting January 1, 1934, of the Martin Quigley Awards, to be given one a month for the theatre exploitation campaign selected by the judges as possessing the highest merit. In addition, a Grand Award will be presented at the expiration of the year for the campaign judged to be the best submitted within that time.

Every theatre manager everywhere in the world is eligible to qualify for these awards. First run or subsequents, small town or big cities, small capacity theatres or deluxers—no one is barred, nor is any product barred.

COMMITTEE WILL BE REPRESENTATIVE OF VARIOUS BRANCHES OF THE INDUSTRY

It is expected that the committee of judges will be composed of executives from different branches of the motion picture industry. Sales and theatre heads, as well as advertising managers, are being asked to serve for the purpose of insuring the utmost consideration for every campaign insofar as local conditions are concerned and their bearing on individual efforts. Arrangements are being made to have different judges serve each month so that competing managers may have the advantage of these fresh viewpoints. Thus every precaution will be taken to give each campaign "full measure," so to speak. The names of these judges will be published in succeeding issues.

AWARDS MARK MOST FORWARD STEP IN CAUSE OF THEATRE EXPLOITATION

The Quigley Awards signify the most progressive step yet taken in recognition of the importance of theatre exploitation. For the first time, showmen now have the opportunity to win worldwide recognition for their exploitation efforts. Winners of the prizes may well point with pride to their accomplishment, undoubtedly a most distinct mark of honor.

The rules are few and simple. They will be found in another column on this page, as well as more detailed information. There is nothing onerous about these qualifications, as every effort is being made to encourage theatremen in every situation, big or small, to send in their campaigns.

Everything is being pointed to make the Quigley Awards as significant to theatre managers as are the Academy awards to the studio-ites. Showmen who have already been sounded out are unanimous in their enthusiasm.

It should be the biggest thing in the history of the Managers' Round Table Club. We aim to make it so.

Rules and Information

STARTING JANUARY 1, 1934, the Quigley Awards will be presented monthly during the ensuing year, a plaque to be given each month for the campaign submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club and selected by the judges as the most meritorious executed between the first and last day of each month. . . .

THE QUIGLEY GRAND AWARD will be given for the campaign submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club during the year of 1934, selected by the judges as possessing the highest merit. . . .

CAMPAIGNS may be forwarded after the last day of the month, but they must be on pictures that have been played during that month. This includes attractions that are played on the last day of one month and succeeding days of the following. . . .

THEATRE MANAGERS everywhere in the world are eligible for the awards. Campaigns from distant parts will be given extra consideration in order to provide for the difference in mailing time. . . .

MANAGER'S NAME and theatre must appear on all campaign material, which should include photos, tear sheets, heralds, etc.

NON-MEMBERS of Managers' Round Table Club are eligible for the awards. . . .

EACH CAMPAIGN will be given equal consideration regardless of the situation, large or small, from which it emanates. What was accomplished for the money spent will count more than how much was spent. Thus the small budget will not be ignored. . . .

ALL CAMPAIGNS entered are to be carefully wrapped and forwarded to the following:

MORE ON "ANTIQUATED BALLYHOO"

Showmen's Responses Indicate Further Approval of Bassin's Statements on "Exploitation"; Right Idea, Says E. E. Bair; Courageous, Declares Dick Moss.

Outpourings from the membership continue on Charley Bassin's recent blast on exploitation, and in these columns we have the pleasure to present the further views of Round Tablers who have something to say on the subject. And there's more to come. Gentlemen, we present you:

E. E. BAIR
STATE, UHRICHSVILLE, OHIO

Dear Mike:

Two minutes ago I just finished reading Bassin's story. This chap, to my mind, is correct. Matter of fact, I am attaching my answer or remarks of his comment in printed form. This printed form, I will explain, is a regular mouthpiece in my daily paper appearing under the caption "Motion Pictures and Local Things Theatrical," which I sign "Mickey Mouse."

Text of the attached column is you will notice inspired by comment of a Pittsburgh writer. I have passed it on to my patrons in this manner—it serves in this instance a double purpose, my comment of Mr. Bassin's article.

Florence Fisher Parry, writing for the Pittsburgh Press, just about missed the new motion picture entitled "Broadway to Hollywood."

She minces no words, she calls a spade a spade. In her remarks she relates that the title did not sound good, beside the advertising looked like another conglomeration of exaggerated theatre ballyhoo.

Business at the theatre showing this picture had the theatremen bewildered. The public stayed away from one of the very best pictures of the year. This "Broadway to Hollywood."

Miss Parry relates further as she believes it to be a general experience. . . . "It was about show people I gathered from its title and advertising. The advertising conspired to make me think it was a picture to stay away from, so I stayed away and saw another instead."

The Old Wolf Wolf story. I had actually passed up the best picture in New York. Then the engagement was over and the critics started to rave. Every one was bowled over. No one had expected what they were treated to.

Theatremen are still asking Why? Why? Our advertising said it was a human interest story. It said it was a great show, but, as Miss Parry points out, "They have made the same boasts before. Not just that theatre, mind you, but generally, all over."

"Some said it lacked the bait of big names to attract crowds. That may be true, but WHY is it true? Because that's all the public has been fed for years, ever since the old Mary Pickford days.

"But this is a new era in motion pictures. The industry is being recruited from Broadway; legitimate actors of a lifetime standing are placed in well balanced casts—then why not publicize the well balanced cast together with the story's excellence?

"Some one has to start a new line of publicity to suit the new regime.

"Names have been made to carry a poor picture; but that day is definitely on the wane. The play's the thing. It is so in the theatre, and is fast becoming so in the movies.

"What we want to know is now: What kind of a picture is it? Is it well directed? Does tell an intelligent story?

"We're getting a new kind of 'glamor' into our pictures, thank heaven; glamor that isn't all sex and passion. The glamor of human relationships; of family life; and we need a kind of publicity that suits this new regime.

"When that happens, no longer will a screen play of real merit suffer; for the public, reading the advance stories and notices about it, will at last be ready to believe them."

Bullseye, Miss Parry. You hit it; no argument.

Without doubt many excellent pictures have suffered due to poor titles and too much ballyhoo in advertising. If you know what we mean, you will not miss "Stranger's Return," "Another Language" and "Man Who Dared" at the State soon. We'll make it our business to tell the public about these attractions in a manner as suggested by Miss Parry.

Yours,
MICKEY MOUSE.

DICK MOSS
RKO, LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Dear Mike:

I've read Mr. Charles Bassin's article in the November 25th issue, and I want to congratulate him on the courageous stand he takes upon a very sensitive phase of theatre management. I believe Mr. Bassin is right when he claims that it is practically impossible to sell the public anything which it doesn't want. I said practically impossible, and that doesn't mean it is absolutely impossible. I've had very many experiences, in fact, some very recent ones, when a specially conceived exploitation plan will put over a picture. But, it usually worked on what is known as a "freak" attraction.

What good is putting over big campaigns when you haven't anything big to sell? And, as Mr. Bassin stated, the fan magazines tell the public all about it long before the theatre manager knows his booking date. Of course, that is a great evil. It is like knowing all the answers; going to a football game and knowing the score in advance, or going to a show and knowing all the jokes beforehand. Most of these fan magazines relate the complete picture; where the hero meets the heroine, what happens, and how they lived happily ever after. What enthusiasm can you work up over going to see a picture, about which you know all. I believe that is one of the reasons why talking pictures, made from old silent successes, have generally flopped. The public knows the answers.

When Mr. Bassin tells about the big campaigns which he has worked and seen them flop, I felt like shaking his hand. I've had the same experience many a time. Big campaign, with lots of money spent and effort used, and the picture takes a dive. Why? Because they didn't want it in the first place, and it was just a waste of time, effort and money to attempt to force them into it. Wouldn't it have been better just to spend a normal amount on advertising? Wouldn't the weekly statement have looked better because of the money saved? This is a question that can never be definitely settled, because it is almost impossible to figure what difference the extra advertising makes. But, experience tells you it would. Upon the insistence of national distributors, I've seen campaigns put on that would have been worthy of heralding the coming of the Messiah. But, the pictures flopped.

Build Up "Clucks"

Every theatre manager should put his heart and soul in selling every picture, but he should select the correct way. When a cluck picture is on the schedule, why not scout around and try to find another attraction to put on the program—possibly an outstanding short subject, a Comedy Carnival, a radio attraction, a special kids' picture, or possibly a revival. I don't say that these things would make the week a great success, but they'd help the gross. Wouldn't that be better than doubling the newspaper advertising space, taking a couple more billboards or putting some heralds into grocery bags . . . just to tell them you've got a picture which they have previously heard is rotten? What good is it to tell them that here is "the greatest, most colossal picture since 'Birth of a Nation,' when the critic in Liberty has given it a sixteenth of a star? What good is it to say that this picture "teems with action, is crammed with sex, and over-flowing with music and comedy," when the movie commentator of Screenland informs that "the action drags, the love interest is nil, the music is absolutely without melody, and the comedy smells." What's the good of trying to make a liar out of the press, the medium which forms public opinion. And, the funny thing is that the press is usually right. When the picture is good, they usually say so, and when it's lousy they exclaim that in no uncertain terms.

I've put on quite a few campaigns. Most of them I've put on because I sincerely felt that I had an attraction to sell, and I'll also be frank enough to admit that I've put some on because I wanted to make a showing for one reason or another.

All in all, I believe the answer is: Shout about the big ones, and when the poor ones come along look elsewhere for something to put them over, but don't try to butt up against a stone wall with exploitation as the only buffer.

Many Strong Ideas Sell "I'm No Angel"

From various spots come many ace campaigns on "I'm No Angel." It seems that very little, if anything, has been left unsaid or undone to make the country "West conscious," and the following speak for themselves:

Anna Bell Ward
Ben Ali, Lexington, Ky.

Putting over the appointment of Mae West as a colonel on the staff of the Governor of Kentucky was one of the smart ideas of this well known showwoman, whose fast thinking resulted not only in plenty of space in the local newspapers, but also brought national response through the Associated Press papers everywhere carrying the story. As Anna Bell is an officer in the "Honorable Order of Kentucky Colonels," her picture appeared with that of West in many of the dailies.

In addition to this outstanding stunt, an effective broadside of exploitation was put over locally, including street car placarding, attractive window displays, and many newspaper breaks, including the press book wisecrack contest. An unique lobby display was made up with a cutout of the star reclining on an actual divan, so lighted as to give the figure a life-like appearance.

J. J. Rosenfield
Paramount, Omaha, Neb.

A midnight matinee for men and a working girls' matinee at 7 A. M. on the opening day were two of the click gags that worked very well for this Round Tabler. The men received an autographed picture of the star, and the girls free breakfast, which was promoted from a nearby restaurant, and served during the showing. Each woman present also received a copy of the press book NRA code for girls.

Numerous angles were used to put over both performances, such as street parades with bannered musicians making all the downtown streets, and by giving passes to the personnel directors where many girls were employed, "J. J." was able to place cards on bulletin boards.

A local beer distributor supplied 5,000 beer pads upon which most of the space was devoted to the picture, all Postal telegraph offices displayed jumbo telegrams from the star advertising the showing and numerous store tieups were made, including one in which a local girl was dressed in a Mae West gown and spotted in the foyer.

One of the most novel ways we have yet seen to sell this picture on the billboards was a special 56-sheet (see photo) in which Swedish, German and Yiddish were used to interpret the famous "Come up and —."

J. Clayton Tunstill
Saenger, Pine Bluff, Ark.

A fashion revue sponsored in conjunction with leading women's stores, sponsored by local society leaders, for the benefit of crippled children's society was one of the highlights of Tunstill's campaign, considerable interest being aroused by announcement that Mae West herself would appear in the show, which of course turned out to be a local girl dressed as the star.

Many press book ideas were put into effect, including the animated dance cutout planted in a prominent window and proving a continuous crowd stopper. The star reclining cutout was also used, being planted in a furniture window on an actual settee.

Frank P. Larson
Paramount, Idaho Falls, Ida.

Stressing the "heat" angles, Frank enlisted the aid of his local fire department to deliver the film from the express office to theatre via bannered fire truck. That's Larson in accompanying photo holding film can, who also planted empty film can in ice block on street corner with copy reading "Keeping this film cool for the preview."

Promoted local neon agency to place illuminated theatre sign free of charge on building at most prominent corner. Also used the press book gold fish gag in three windows and distributed the teaser cards at all local football games Saturday before opening. Put on wisecrack contest with local paper, and took part in civic "Spud Day" celebration with bannered float.

We have not mentioned in the above campaigns the wealth of West publicity stories planted by these showmen, but in every case newspapers all cooperated.

Reservations Jump For The Xmas Party

Gettin' better n' better. Yowsir, you know what we mean. Plans for the big managers' shindig, the Santy Claus "How-Are-You." We mean that:

Round Table Midnite Xmas Party, next Thursday Nite, Dec. 21, at the Brass Rail, 49th Street and 7th Avenue, New York. It's to be tremendous, and the price for everything is just—One Dollar.

Your chairman had the pleasure of meeting up with the party committee of arrangements from the Randforce Circuit, composed of the following Round Tablers: Maury Reisner, Joe Herman, Bill Brown, Ben Friedman, Sam Rinzler, Ben Reisner and Paul Binstock.

And are those lads rarin' to go. Each of them has pledged himself to round up every manager in his district, and they're also going to bring their supervisors, assistants and others. Looks like we'll need more room, as there will be at least 50 from this outfit.

Jules Curley, Warner New Jersey ad chief says he'll be there with other Warnerites from his territory and from New York. Mort Blumenstock, Warner Theatre advertising director, will be on hand with the home office gang, and Will White, Skouras division chief, has assured the committee that, as usual, his zone will be adequately represented.

So come on, everybody. You'll meet friends you haven't seen in years, and you'll be tickled pink with the surprises that are being planned. Yes, there are plenty of them. Xmas presents of course for every one, and other souvenirs from the producers. And the entertainment?

All the stars who expect to be in town that night are being invited. Eddie Cantor has been invited, as has Gary Cooper, and many other celebs from MGM, Warner, Radio and the other studios. Lou Preston has promised his orchestra and a flock of headline acts, and there should be plenty of others.

There is every reason to believe that this "Get-Together" will be the best yet, and managers from nearby points in Connecticut, Jersey and on Long Island are included in the reservations, for the party starts at midnite, and keeps going until?

Remember, One Dollar covers everything. Beer, sandwiches and other accessories, souvenirs, presents and entertainment. Not too tough, what? So plan to be there. Fill out the blank below right now. Make up a party or come alone. You'll have a good time either way. See you Thursday.

Here's The Dollar!

Please mail me my ticket for the Round Table Xmas Party to be held on Thursday, December 21st, at the Brass Rail, Seventh Avenue and 49th Street, New York.

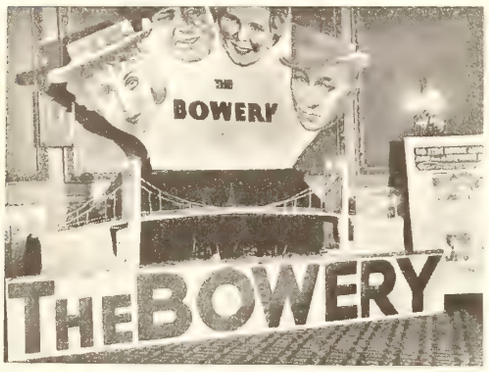
Loew-ites Crack Down On "Bowery" Showings

Some very intensive exploitation was put on in advance of "The Bowery" dates in the various New York Loew houses, District Manager Gene Myers and the managers in his division working with Perry Spencer of Oscar Doob's department to land a lot of smart tieups in the different neighborhoods where the theatres are situated.

Manager Crawford, 167th Street Theatre,



Crawford's Bridge Replica

topped his campaign with a papiermache replica of Brooklyn Bridge, miniature boats and docks being added to give more atmosphere. Manager Schiller, Grand Theatre, tied in with a nearby ballroom for a costumed Bowery dance, distributed free beer in his lobby, and as a street stunt put out an old-fashioned organ grinder and monkey. Manager Loew, National Theatre, went for the street stunt of the old-fashioned bannered hansom cab, and Manager Bruno, Burland Theatre, had a girl in costume distributing souvenirs on the streets.

The makers of the Jackie Cooper sweater came in on an essay contest for the kids, this being tied in to one of the leading neighborhood papers and promoted by all the theatres. Another cooperative stunt was an attractive street float which covered the areas around each house.

Brooklyn, New York, Loew divisional manager, George Schenck, also put plenty of thought behind his "Bowery" campaigns which played day and date at 12 theatres, the managers of which received Bowery lamp post signs which they had no difficulty in planting over the regular street signs in their neighborhoods. Pearl Gray derbies were worn a week in advance by the house staffs in each theatre, and a float carrying a reproduction of Brooklyn Bridge and two Bowery impersonators toured all sections of the borough.

Manager Levi, 46th Street Theatre, installed a special lobby with swinging doors, arranged Bowery balls at four nearby dance halls and also promoted the free beer stunt in his lobby. Manager Woolfolk, Coney Island Theatre, put out an old-time carriage with man and woman dressed in character, and had another costumed girl walking about his neighborhood with a prop bannered lamp post which was planted at prominent corners.

Manager Rose, Bayridge Theatre, used the lettered beer barrel pyramid in his lobby and Manager Powell, Bedford Theatre, had a girl riding a bannered high-wheeled bicycle on the streets.

The showmen in all Loew houses in both boroughs playing the picture put over a lot of sound box office stuff, and those stunts mentioned above were the outstanders.

Boston Daily Carries Sidman Picnic Story

A free outing given to the members of his local Buck Jones Ranger Club netted Manager Maurice Sidman, Arcadia Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., a nice story and three-column cut in a leading Boston newspaper. Sidman tied up with the head of a popular riding school upon whose grounds the picnic was held, the local transportation company supplying busses free of charge.

Athletic contests were held and refreshments served through tieups with local merchants. The Mayor of Portsmouth accompanied club members and other prominent citizens served on the arrangements committee. Not only did Sidman add to his theatre patronage through this party, but also received a lot of publicity that should count at the box office.

Lykes Decorates Lobby With Crepe Paper

Quite successfully, he reports, Manager Jack Lykes, Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, Ohio, has been experimenting with crepe paper for decorative purposes and sends along a number of photos to show the effective lobby displays worked out by the ingenious use of this inexpensive material. Jack states that it is not necessary to be skilled in its use as by watching any expert window decorator working with this paper, sufficient ideas may be gained to adapt it to theatre use.

A recent ballyhoo on his showing of "Take a Chance" is illustrated in the accompanying photo, whereby a "wheel of chance" was planted on the sidewalk containing a regular paddle wheel with 60 numbers mounted on a display board. A corresponding amount of small paddles with the same numbers were handed out to the gathered crowds with the holder of the winning number receiving a pass to see the picture. In spite of the extremely cold weather, enough attention was created to effectually stop traffic, and for this reason the gag had to be discontinued from time to time.

Quite a snappy slant, indeed, which, as Lykes says, can also be used in the lobby. It doesn't sound expensive, either.

Edris and Conner Move Fast in Tacoma

Recent activities in the Northwest are recounted from Tacoma, Wash., by Will J. Conner, assistant to Ned Edris, city manager of John Hamrick's Theatres in that city, which comprise the Music Box, Blue Mouse and Temple. A Mickey Mouse Club at the Temple Theatre, just one year old, now boasts a membership of over 5,000 and includes a band of 50 skilled musicians. To celebrate the birthday of the club a special picnic was put on at a nearby park attended by over 2,000, who were transported by bannered street cars and automobiles promoted for the occasion.

For the local engagement of Al Pearce and his Gang, a well known Northwest orchestra, a parade was put on to publicize the opening, and the accompanying photo shows the gathering at the theatre with Edris to the right holding the straw hat and Bill immediately next to him.

Another recent activity of this closely knit organization was a banquet given by Hamrick to the 60 employees of his Tacoma theatres, one of a series put on by the genial John in the various towns where he operates. Knowing your big boss, Will, from our old Seattle days where we trouped for Paramount, the party must have been very enjoyable. Let's hear from you folks.

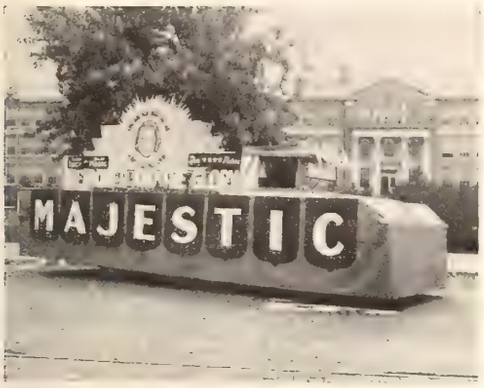
Shaw Whams Over "Keyhole" Gag

The "Keyhole" gag on "Broadway Thru a Keyhole" is doing yeoman service for Round Tablers, who are making the most of it in tieups with local merchants. In Syracuse, N. Y., Harry Shaw, Loew publicity chief, used this ace press book suggestion in cooperation with one of his leading department stores whereby a special two-day "Keyhole Sale" was announced in a series of five-column newspaper ads, with a large portion of the copy given over to the theatre and attraction.

Each purchaser at the sale was given a key attached to a card with copy to the effect that if that particular key unlocked a special door in the lobby of the theatre, the holder would be presented with a pass to see the picture. Besides the newspaper advertising, the idea was carried further in half-sheet cards which were tacked in prominent spots throughout the city.

Another gag which hit the newspapers was a tieup with the head of the local Board of Education, who sponsored a presentation to local high school honor pupils of the famed Winchell orchids, a local florist supplying the blooms in exchange for a break.

VARIOUS SLANTS FROM THE FIELD



Myers' Majestic Float

(Left) MYERS BROTHERS, Majestic Theatre, Chillicothe, Ohio, entered this float on "The Power and the Glory" in their recent local NRA Parade, and the flash it made just about copped the spotlight. Which is as it should be, for the display is very artistic and looks like a heap of dough.

One Prizefighter to Another

(Left) JACK SHARKEY, in person, was the first one in line at the Capitol, New York, on the opening day of "Prizefighter and the Lady." Evidently his defeats have not dimmed that happy smile, and he still seems to be of great interest to the gathered crowd.

(Right) LOUIS ORLOVE, Uptown Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., planted this advance stopper to let the folks know about his coming date on "Lady for a Day." Placed above the inside lobby doors, it made an ace flash, as patrons leaving the theatre could not miss this announcement.

A Seagoin' Front

(Left) STANLEY MEYER, Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., is responsible for this slick front on "Her First Mate." The grotesque figures of the stars were taken from the posters, and above the box office, a rocking effect was obtained with a ferryboat and the star cutouts.

(Right) LEO JUSTIN and STOCKTON LEIGH, Mayfair Theatre, New York, plugged the press book tieup on "Midshipman Jack" wherein a new style in millinery, the "Ensign Beret," and worn by Betty Furness, was given a nice plug in the lobby on a department store hook-in.

Nice Work from Utica

(Left) BERT LEIGHTON, manager, art director WILL WILLS and ANTHONY ALDI, designer, cooperated on this flash "Footlight Parade" float for the Stanley Theatre date, Utica, New York. A lot of thought and talent were expended to turn out a very attractive display.

(Right) FRANK GRAVATT, Steel Pier, Atlantic City, N. J., put over a Hallowe'en Party in conjunction with his showing of "Worst Woman in Paris," and although after the season at that resort, the affair drew very well. Note the decorations around the ballroom. Very harvest-like, what?

SOME PROJECTION POINTERS

Expert Suggests Various Ways And Means of Improvement In Articles Written for Managers

by F. H. RICHARDSON

The author of this article and those to follow, hardly needs any introduction to the membership. Acknowledged as an outstanding leader in the field of projection, his lectures, books, and regular departments in the Motion Picture Herald and Better Theatres have done much to better vision and sound on the screen.

Written expressly for the non-technical showman, these observations should be carefully studied by every manager intent on a better picture.

The series is based upon the now generally recognized fact that box office income is not wholly based upon what theatre patrons see upon the screen and what they hear in sound, but also to a very considerable extent upon how they see and hear. Consider the fact that a really beautiful scene may be almost anything but beautiful if poorly shown. Sound that might be charming, may be just plain punk if projected in distorted form. You surely know that is quite true. You also surely know poor work has a direct and injurious effect upon your box office income.

If you admit the foregoing to be true, then does it not automatically follow that you as an exhibitor or theatre manager have no more important duty than that of fitting yourself to judge intelligently as to whether or not the picture is being displayed at its best, and whether or not the sound is or is not all that it might be? Not only that, but if you are to take the matter of either picture or sound faults up with your chief projectionist and talk convincingly, you must have at least some rather clear idea as to what the fault consists of.

Not necessary that you know all the details of projection. Not at all. Perhaps better that you do not, but just the same you must know enough to discuss matters intelligently and with some degree of understanding if you expect to make much impression.

Room for Improvement

Remember this, Mr. Manager. While it is quite true that you have no possible control of what your patrons will see and hear, save in the matter of selection of subjects, the fact remains that you may have a very great deal to do with "how they see it" and "how they hear it." That you surely must know and admit to be quite true, yet it is astounding how many otherwise excellent theatre managers fall down flat in the matter of picture and sound excellence. I have myself entered many, many theatres, only to view a dull, flat and perhaps unsteady screen image and to hear sound that might have been improved by a full 100 per cent. I came near saying 200, but will be conservative. Yet the manager seemed to have no idea that improvement was possible.

Mr. Manager, it should be one of your duties of highest importance to educate yourself thoroughly in the matter of screen images and sound. You have many duties, but that should head the list. If you yourself are unable to look at your screen and listen to your sound and say, with at least some authority, they are good, or this or that stands in need of improvement, then you are engaged in selling to the public "goods" you do not yourself understand very well.

There is no better method of studying screen images and sound than by actual comparison, and there is no more effective comparison than the visiting of theatres and observing results.

Were I a theatre manager or exhibitor, one of my most important duties would be to pay a visit to at least half a dozen theatres other than my own, of various classes if possible. I would enter as a paying patron, wholly unannounced, and if possible unknown to the management. I would sit through a full performance, carefully making mental and written notes as to how various things compared with results in my own theatre. If mine be better, good! If I found certain things were being brought out better in other theatres than in my own, it then would be up to me to ascertain just why that was so, and to build up my weak point.

Check Projection Faults

In doing this it is of course very necessary to be able to distinguish between faults due to wrong procedure and faults inherent in the films themselves. This is, however, not at all difficult to do. In sound, if it is found that the sound is consistently poor throughout, it is unlikely the reason lies in the print itself, because very seldom will a print be so very poorly recorded, either in picture or sound, that no part of it will be good. If, then, in sound I found the results to be generally poor, but that occasionally it was excellent, I would immediately conclude the theatre equipment to be itself good, for the reason that if there is any basic fault in the equipment itself it would show up continuously. No part or parcel of the thing would be good.

I would make careful notes of such points, if any, as seemed to be better than my own, and next day go into executive session with myself in an endeavor to find out exactly why my own results seemed less excellent; also by what means improvement could be brought about. Sounds like good logic, does it not? Think it over! I know all about the chap who does not believe in paying any attention whatsoever to his competitor, or to what other managers are doing.

I agree that he is right, in so far as concerns matters having purely to do with competition. What I have in mind is, as I see it, a very different matter. It has only to do with enabling managers to compare their own results with that attained by others, preferably not competitors, by the way, to the end that they may know just in what way they may be in some degree failing, and thus be enabled to improve.

READ "BETTER THEATRES"

During the holidays and through the winter, fire hazards are greater. These and other sources of complaint, loss and danger are discussed by Jack Knight in his theatre maintenance article appearing in Better Theatres, published with this issue. In it, the manager will find practical ways of keeping his theatre safe for patrons at all times.

Among other features are theatre lighting for the holidays, and John Eberson's good advice on reconditioning at little cost.

Booth's Benefit Shows Steady Gross Builder

Discovering that his situation is favorable to benefit shows, Manager Billings Booth, Jefferson Theatre, Springfield, Mass., has been putting on a number of theatre parties for local organizations which have helped not inconsiderably in holding up his grosses on slow nights.

Billings has compiled a list of local associations, such as Community Chest, Red Cross, Boy and Girl Scouts, P. T. A. and lodges, from these selecting the ones which seem best suited to his program. The deal is made by offering the organization a two-night benefit giving them 50 per cent of their outside sales.

In most every case, Booth reports that he is able to secure gratis some stage attraction which otherwise would have to be paid for, such as dancing revues, musicians from local studios and concert singers. So far the idea has produced turnaway business with the house netting an increase in the day's receipts, as well as creating many new customers who previously had not attended the theatre.

To avoid selling tickets in front of the theatre, Billings requires returns to be made in the afternoon of the first day of the benefit. He states that his last tiein of this kind held on Wednesday and Thursday trebled his ordinary receipts for these days, in addition to which he was able to present a number of talented amateurs, the entire extra expense to the theatre being an hour overtime for the operators.

Members interested in building up their weak days and nights might consider this idea, and no doubt Booth will be glad to furnish further details to managers desiring more information.

THEATRE CARPET

Theatre carpet gets a thousand times more wear than carpet that goes into the home. Hundreds of shuffling, scuffing, scraping, careless feet day after day, week after week, month after month. Chewing gum, candy, liquids, dirt and dust ground deep into the pile.

Covering a much larger area, the patterns must be larger; colors brighter and richer. Often laid on a sloping surface, more expert knowledge is required to install it.

Unlike carpet for the home, it cannot be bought simply because someone likes it regardless of whether that someone can afford it. It must fit into rigid budgets, often very small.

Doesn't it follow that carpet made by a manufacturer with many years of experience in the theatre field is most apt to give satisfaction? CHRISTMAS DECORATING WITH LIGHT

Various types of festive lighting equipment for decorating the theatre during the Holidays. A—The star of Bethlemen. B—Star and flower-shaped ornaments. C—Series Christmas tree string. D and E—Strings of 10-watt lamps for festooning. These may be easily worked into attractive Christmas designs.

Easy and effective ways for brightening the theatre with the spirit of the Holidays

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

BECAUSE SPARKLING, colorful light is symbolic of the original Christmas, it is logically used during the holiday season to express an old tradition in a modern fashion. It plays a major role in radiating holiday cheer. As a decoration, light is of particular value to the theatre during the Christmas season because of its attracting force and because of its flexibility in the creating of pleasing effects.

Unusual opportunities are offered the theatre this year to dress up for the Christmas season with festive lighting—lighting which instills the Yuletide spirit within everyone. The theatre affords an excellent location for decorative lighting. Positioned as it is on our most heavily-traveled thoroughfares and in our community centers, it can extend the season's greetings in colorful, sparkling light to the thousands of people passing by and attending the performances. The theatre should be the center of community interest during the Christmas season, the most attractive and compelling display in the vicinity.

Because of its attracting power, a planned Christmas display has such unlimited possibilities for improving business that no theatre manager or proprietor should neglect it. Properly handled by the theatre display man, it can make the holiday season yield more than just a seasonal increase at the box office. Such is the drawing power of well-conceived displays.

Since the results are more dependent on artistry and cleverness, rather than on any expense involved, even a limited budget need not be an obstacle in the creation of an effective display. With a little imagination and careful planning, materials available in the storeroom can be used to help a theatre radiate holiday greetings.

VARIETY OF MOTIFS

A large number of different types of Christmas display materials are available from which a good selection may be readily made when planning the decorations. These include many which have been used in past years, as well as some of new design. Some of these familiar decorations which have been used in past years, such as electric candles with colored lamps, electric wreaths with candles in the center, and lighted figures and shapes in the form of animals, bells, flowers, etc., can be used to advantage again this year. Strings of colorful electric lamps evenly spaced, used as festoons, streamers or made up into various decorative shapes, are also of particular value to the theatre display. This simple lighting equipment alone can be used in developing novel ideas in displays to produce an unusually attractive and effective display scene which is of much greater value than if the equipment were arranged haphazardly here and there.

Some of the appropriate motifs from which to choose the decorative display for the Christmas season are Christmas trees (either realistic or conventionalized), wreaths, bells, flowers, Santa Claus and his reindeer, stockings and fireplaces, and snowflakes or stars. Red and green are usually the most effective colors, although silver or gold and black are excellent for modern effects.

DECORATING THE FRONT

THE RUNNING display borders afford an opportunity for a change in decorations during the Christmas season. These may be changed to characteristic Christmas colors, such as rose or green, and may be very effectively accompanied by a border of rose lamps, or a design in rose color beneath the marquee.

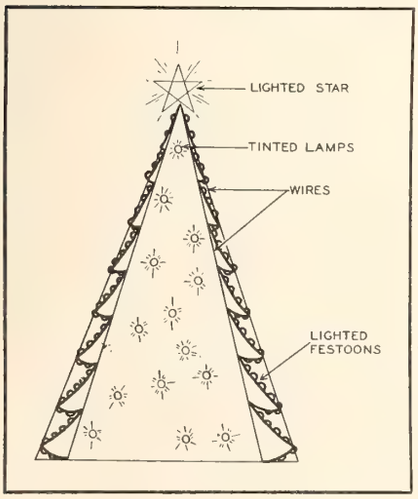
FESTOONS

If festoons are to be used in decorating the theatre front, it should be remembered that these ought not to be used in a haphazard fashion with a variegated color scheme. They are much more effective if attractively arranged in pleasing curves, or definite lines and shapes, with the colors arranged so as to produce predominant color effects over various areas, thus indicating planning and definite design.

Another pleasing effect may be produced by draping the lighted festoons in beautiful curved lines from a central point above the marquee to various points on the marquee, these festoons being interspersed with light-tinted lamps, such as yellow, old rose, or amber-orange installed with the button type twinkling flashers.

MAKING A TREE

A Christmas tree shape may be made above the marquee in a similar fashion. The framework for this tree consists of four pieces of wire fastened to a central point high above the theatre face, which is to be the top of the tree, and pulled taut at four points just above the marquee (as indicated in the accompanying illustration). At six or eight points along each wire, other wire or rings are fastened, to which festoons are draped from the inner and outer wire to produce the desired Christmas tree shape. A simple yet attractive star lighted in yellow or amber-orange color shapes, each smaller than the other, cut out should be located at the top, and green naturally should be the predominating color outlining the Christmas tree shape in the festoons. Lamps of light tints, with or without ornaments, may be scattered throughout the tree. They produce a striking effect, particularly when arranged on twinkling flasher buttons.



A cut-out silhouette Christmas tree made from white beaverboard or wallboard and painted entirely in colored light, showing how a star effect is obtained by scratching the coating from the lamps in thin lines.

The large, temporary, exposed-lamp sign often used at the theatre front to advertise special stars and pictures, may be used to spread the Yuletide spirit by replacement of the regular inside-frosted lamp with rose or green colors.

Real Christmas trees, whether they are large or small, always attract considerable attention both inside and outside the theatre when beautifully lighted by sparkling colorful Christmas tree strings. One method of producing more striking color effects is to light each tree in one predominant color—for example, all green or all blue. This change from the usual scheme of decorations may be varied by using a few warm tinted lamps throughout the tree for the decorative effect, and may be accompanied by light green floodlighting, which adds considerably to the attractiveness of the display.

Other trees besides the regular Christmas trees may be used in a display to produce striking effects. Spruce trees, for example, may be beautifully floodlighted, in contrasting colors, while white trees are available, or real trees may be sprayed with white or silver or aluminum.

A new development for decorative Christmas displays in or outside the theatre is a multiplane conventionalized Christmas tree. This consists of three Christmas tree of white composition board and arranged with the smaler in front of the larger. The lamps in various colors are placed either on the front or on the back of these cut-out boards. The effect of various combinations of colored light flashing on the white surfaces is unusually striking. Such trees may range in size from one 18 inches high, using the eight-lamp series Christmas tree string, to any desired larger size. They may be mounted in any locations where they will prove the most effective and most attractive. Star-like effects may be produced in the smaller trees by scratching the colored coating in straight lines.

KEEPING THEATRES ABSOLUTELY SAFE

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

Where to look for the causes of hazard, and how to remove them—the eighth article of a series on maintenance

A LETTER from Mr. Edward W. Roemer, Building Commissioner of the City of Boston, contained such valuable suggestions for every theatre manager in the country that this effort is made to elaborate upon those thoughts. Addressed to the editor of BETTER THEATRES, it was published in an advertisement in the November 18th issue.

Mr. Roemer operates his department with a most friendly and helpful attitude towards all under his jurisdiction. His understanding of theatre problems is impressive to any theatre man upon the very first contact. In addition to all the courtesy and friendliness one meets when contacting the Building Department of the City of Boston, a theatre man is immediately impressed with the fact that the department expects compliance with the existing laws, and further, that there are additional laws of moral responsibility that must be effective and appreciated by all who are at any time in any way charged with the well-being and safety of a group of people assembled together under one roof.

Laws or regulations can't be written to cover all details of this moral responsibility so necessary in the business of operating theatres. Such moral responsibility can't truly be regulated—it is a process of evolution of thought and proprietary behavior. Such a movement needs leadership and in Mr. Roemer the City of Boston has the necessary guidance and leadership. Consequently this article is dedicated to Mr. Roemer and his thoughts on the responsibility of theatre managers to consider carefully the idea that the general public has the right to expect safe conditions and careful operation of every theatre open to the theatregoers of this country. The following are Mr. Roemer's specific suggestions:

First—Frequent insection of fire escapes.

Second— Prevention of accumulation of unnecessary props on the stage.

Third—The necessity of having aisles and passageways kept clear, especially immediately preceding the change of a picture.

Fourth—The discontinuance of the use of inflammable materials for decorations.

Fifth—To impress upon the theatre managers the fact that while their loyalty to their employer requires careful consideration of their box office figures, their loyalty to the public that supports both manager and employers requires their strict attention to Class One Maintenance Problems.

Before going into the detailed elaboration of each of these suggestions, it is relevant to this subject to quote a paragraph from the article entitled "The Common Sense of Maintenance," which appeared in the June 3rd issue of BETTER THEATRES.

Here is an outline of classifications. Into one or more of such classifications all maintenance problems will fall. This arrangement is in the order of importance. Every effort within good business reason and judgment should be made to take care of those items which fall in the highest classification. It may not be possible to take care of all your desires in connection with your theatre, but be governed by this table and do as much as you can . . .

Class 1—Hazardous conditions.

Class 2—Projection and sound.

Class 3—Stage shows or presentations or spot acts where used.

Class 4—Comfort of audience or patrons.

Class 5—Cleanliness of auditorium, rest rooms, in fact all spaces where your patrons are admitted.

Class 6—Exterior signs, marquees, etc.

Class 7—Physically deteriorated conditions of buildings or equipment that might lead to emergency break-downs at some unexpected time.

Class 8—Improvements such as redecorating, refurnishing or general rehabilitation.

It follows then that the old slogan, Safety First, can well be considered as the first and most important consideration of all managers and other circuit executives charged with the operation of theatres or other places of public assembly.

Consideration will be given hazardous conditions in special groupings. These groups are designated by the possible resulting catastrophes that are likely to be caused by the unsafe and hazardous conditions.

Group 1.—Fires.

Group 2.—Structural defects.

Group 3.—Unexpected conditions, happenings or circumstances.

Group 4.—Panic, the most likely and dangerous resulting development of any of the foregoing.

GROUP 1: FIRE HAZARDS

WITH THE Holiday season at hand there is great responsibility placed upon each manager to remove every possible fire hazard. Decorations at this season of the year present definite fire hazards. In Mr. Roemer's own words, "Discontinue the use of inflammable materials for decorations." The object of holiday decorations is to create an atmosphere of joy and lightheartedness, and by gaining this through the use of inflammable materials a very poor risk is created.

HOLIDAY DECORATIONS

Also during this season, many of the decorations will be illuminated, which many times means that electric light circuits are probably overloaded. This, too, is a fire hazard and constitutes serious negligence on the part of every manager who permits such conditions to exist.

Definitely there is a great responsibility on each and every theatre manager to make the theatre safe for the millions of theatregoers to whom we are going to be host during this coming Holiday season.

SOURCES OF HAZARDS

Some of the principal locations of possible fires in any theatre are:

All-electric switchboards, switch panels, fuse boxes, light and power circuits, projection room with all its equipment, including the sound equipment; also the stage, fly lofts and gridiron, attic spaces, closets, plenum chambers, boiler rooms, coal bunkers and passageways.

It should be perfectly obvious from the foregoing list of places as the possible origin of fires, that detailed inspections of all parts of the theatre at frequent intervals by the manager is most necessary. In spite of the many possible points of origin of fire, the records of theatre fires indicate that most of them start backstage or in the projection booth.

PROJECTION ROOM

Because the projection room is so obviously a fire hazard, many municipal and State regulations have been enacted to control this condition. There is little need for further words of caution here. Regardless of regulations, however, the manager or the circuit executive who permits the use of the earlier type of flammable sound screens is guilty of the worst kind of negligence. Rear shutters should be considered standard equipment on all mechanisms. Finally, there are some projectionists who still smoke once in a while in the projection room. It is to be expected that the union will help you eliminate this habit on the part of the few who still persist in it.

STAGE

In considering the stage, every piece of scenery, whether movable or stationary, and all drops should be thoroughly fireproofed. In the average motion picture theatre there is little excuse for a manager to permit the use of scenery that at least has not been rendered very slow-burning by application

THE CARLTON: MODERNIZED TO SEAT 600

The new lobby, extending 40 feet to entrance to the lounge.

ONE OF A cluster of theatres on uptown Broadway, New York, was the Keystone. It was a good example of the motion picture theatre of another day. Architecturally, it consisted principally in ornate doodads. It had 1,000 seats crowded between two exit courts, in a building which, though only 40 feet wide, was 200 feet long. The entrance was jammed between stores. The lobby was noticeably restricted. Bad acoustic conditions. No air conditioning. Today this property is modern in facilities and architecturally suited to its place, time and purpose, made so at a cost of $40,000 for structural changes, and $10,000 for equipment.

Renamed the Carlton, it now represents one of the new type of theatres devoted to motion pictures—small in capacity but thoroughly modern in arrangement and facilities. To bring the Carlton into this class the seating capacity was reduced to 600. The architect was I. Irrera of New York, who, with Ben Schlanger, designed the Thalia, the first theatre incorporating the Schlanger reversed floor plan.

The theatre is owned and operated by the Keystone Theatre Corporation of New York. The building, overall dimensions of which have been brought to 60x212 feet, also contains a single store. Construction is fireproof of steel and brick, with terra cotta facing. Although located in an important business district, the drawing area is largely the immediately surrounding residential apartment section. The project was carried out under sub-contracts.

SCHEME OF REVISION

In revamping the Keystone into the Carlton (compare accompanying plans), the vestibule and lobby were moved from their original central position to the left side. The new lobby is 40 feet long, increasing in width for a space 15 feet deep at the entrance to the lounge. The lounge, an added element, has been placed under the projection quarters and extends the full width of the auditorium. Its area of about 1,000 square feet replaces that formerly occupied by 400 chairs in the original overly deep auditorium. The manager's office, men's and women's rooms with adjacent toilets, are entered from the far end of the lounge. These latter occupy space formerly devoted to an exit court. Other revisions will be referred to in the course of describing the present theatre.

SEATING

Seating is arranged in two banks of 31 rows each, an equal number of chairs (with the exception of the first few rows) in all rows. Chairs (by Ideal Seating Company) are of spring edge type, with Russeloid seat covering and full-spring backs covered in mohair of wine-red color.

PROJECTION

The existing projection room is retained without structural change except for the addition of toilet facilities. The walls and ceiling are painted gray. Equipment (previously installed but reconditioned) includes Simplex projectors and Western Electric sound system. There is also four-plate dimmer equipment for controlling auditorium lighting. The maximum screen size possible is 13 feet, 4 inches by 18 feet, 6 inches. The distance from the first row of chairs to the screen is 10 feet, 6 inches.

AIR CONDITIONING

The air conditioning equipment incorporates cooling with spray chamber water refrigerated by Freon (F12) gas. The installation (by the York Ice Machinery Company) is one of the earliest employing this type of compressor in a theatre. Heating and cooling are by means of the same system (Aero-fin), with the temperature in the auditorium semi-automatically controlled. The air flow is from grilles at the projection room level and at the proscenium splays, with exhaustion for partial recirculation through grilles along the lowest part of the walls. Fuel for heating is oil. Cooling and ventilating equipment are located in what was formerly an exit court, while the boiler (as is the electrical machinery) is placed in the basement under the lobby. The system also supplies the lounge with conditioned air.

LIGHTING AND ACOUSTICS

Acoustic treatment in the auditorium consists in the application of "Sabinite" plaster on the rear wall and in ceiling slots.

Illuminating incorporates the use of changing colors on a dimmer system in the auditorium. This lighting emanates from ceiling coves, and the colors are red, amber and blue. The proscenium curtain is illuminated by spotlights concealed at the top of the arch, projecting light in the same three colors. Regular house lighting is indicated in the description of the decorative scheme.

DECORATION

The general architectural style of the Carlton is moden, emphasized not only in simple, direct patterns, but in the use of modern materials.

The facade is of plain lines carried out principally in black terra cotta strips against a gray background of the same material. Facing throughout is in a mat-glazed finish. The marquee is of galvanized iron with aluminum trim at the sides and bottom. Lighting is by neon tubes and direct lamps in the soffit, while there are also indirect bowls in ceiling panels.

The vestibule walls, including pilasters, are done in aluminum. The box office is decoratively treated with aluminum strips, a marble base and formica panels in imitation of Verdi marble. The doors leading into the lobby are of aluminum with extruded edges and mouldings and etched stiles and rails.

The lobby has a color scheme of gold, orange and silver, carried out in plaster walls with painted silver and gray strips, and a plaster ceiling stippled in green and silver. The floor is of vari-colored terrazzo set in aluminum strips, with a base of black flowered marble. The lobby is lighted from cornice coves running the full length of the room, and from a ceiling trough of cadmium and glass.

The lounge has plaster walls pointed with painted aluminum strips. On the left, to balance the passages to the auxiliary rooms, is a decorative fireplace. The color scheme is the same as that of the lobby. The floor is carpeted and there is furniture of modern pattern executed in chromium-plated tube frames and coverings in Dupont fabrikoid, the colors varying in red, blue, yellow and brown.

The auditorium treatment is simple, the decorative scheme consisting chiefly in a graduation of painted shades of the plaster walls and the colored illumination previously referred to. The former auditorium had flat brick pilasters, and these have been faced with slightly convex plaster extending from a Keene cement base to ceiling beams. Two large circular pilasters frame the screen platform and terminate the splayed forward wall. Here are pierced plaster grilles for air supply and emission of sound from the organ chamber. The old ceiling beams have been furred into additional

LATE LAW FOR OPERATORS OF THEATRES

By LEO T. PARKER

Selected cases of recent adjudication involving legal questions commonly or occasionally confronting the exhibitor

THE COURTS in some states have held that a contract restraining the use of property or restraining the continuance of an occupation cannot be held valid unless it is ancillary (subordinate) to a lawful contract or transaction in reference to a matter in which the complaining party has a legitimate interest in need of protection. It is also the general rule that contracts which have for their object merely the removal of a rival or competitor in business are unlawful. On the other hand, various other courts have upheld the validity of contracts in which the owner of theatre property agrees to discontinue use of such property for theatre purposes.

Agreement to Close Held Valid

CASE

For example, in the late case of Robey v. Plain City Theatre Company (186 N. E. 1, Plain City, Ohio), it was shown that the owner of a competitive theatre approached the owner of the Princess Theatre in the same town and offered to pay him $1,200 if he would discontinue use of the theatre building for theatre purposes. Soon afterwards the two parties entered into a contract containing the following clause:

"In consideration of said cash, note and stock, the defendant agreed to forever discontinue the use of said Princess theatre as a show house or auditorium for the use of public gatherings of any kind, either by himself or by other persons, partnerships or corporations."

Afterward the owner of the Princess theatre continued to operate it, and the party who had paid the money above mentioned filed suit to prevent use of the Princess theatre for exhibiting motion picture films. In holding the contract valid and thus preventing use of the Princess theatre for theatre purposes, the court said:

DECISION

"The restraint agreed on in this contract is partial only. The building may be used for any other purpose than for the holding of public gatherings. The restraint is limited to this one particular building. Robey can operate a theatre in any building in Plain City other than the Princess theatre. . . . The contract is reasonable, based upon an adequate and valuable consideration, not invalid as being in restraint of trade."

CASE

Also, in another late higher court case, Horany v. Treese (91 Okl. 264), it was shown that the owner of a theatre building contracted with a competitor not to equip the building for use as a motion picture place of exhibition. Later it was contended by the owner of the theatre that the contract was void, and that he was not liable for violating its provisions. However, this higher court also held the contract valid and enforceable, saying:

DECISION

"An oral contract by the terms of which a party agrees not to equip and operate a competing moving picture show house in a particular building, where the other party to the contract owns and operates, in another building, the only show in the town, is not void as contravening public policy, where it is shown that the agreement does not prevent his opening and operating such show in any other building or place in the town."

BREACH OF LEASE CONTRACT

EITHER a landlord or a tenant may be liable to the other for breach of a lease contract. The amount of the liability depends upon the damages suffered by the complaining party.

CASE

For illustration, in Pollock v. Ives Theatres (24 P. [2d] 396, Skagit County, Washington), it was disclosed that the owner of a theatre and a theatre operator entered into a written lease contract by the terms of which the latter agreed to pay a stipulated rental for use of the theatre building for a period of 15 years. After several years had passed the tenant failed to pay the rental due, and the landlord wrote to the theatre operator stating:

"This is to notify you further that in the event you do not make the aforesaid payments within thirty days from and after the date of this service upon you, that the lessor (landlord) will elect and do by this notice elect to declare the lease breached, in default and forfeited, and will bring suit against you for the breach and for damages. . . ."

The theatre operator immediately answered this letter, stating that since the landlord had terminated the lease he would move his property from the theatre building immediately. The landlord filed suit against the theatre operator to recover damages for breach of the lease contract. The counsel for the theatre operator contended that since the landlord had cancelled the lease contract in the above mentioned letter the theatre operator should not be held liable. However, the higher court held the theatre operator liable in damages, saying:

DECISION

"There is a distinct and vital difference between an unqualified surrender or forfeiture of a lease for all purposes and a mere termination of possession under the lease for breach of conditions, followed by a re-entry. In cases of unqualified forfeiture all liability is at once at an end, but a lease in no sense differs from other contracts in that one may claim a breach when a breach occurs and hold the defaulting party for damages arising from his failure to perform if the intention and election so to do be clearly manifested, even though the contract in itself does not specifically so provide. It is true that in the notice, as hereinbefore quoted, the word 'forfeited' is used, but other words are used in connection therewith, and it is immediately followed by the words, 'and will bring suit against you for the breach and for damages,' thus indicating a clear intent to hold appellant for damages for the breach."

DAMAGES FOR INJURY TO PIPE ORGAN

IT IS IMPORTANT to know that the owner of a theatre building is not liable in damages as a result of defective structure, which causes injury to equipment owned by a theatre operator who leases the building, unless the evidence indicates clearly that it was intended, when the parties originally entered into the lease contract, that the owner of the building should keep the building in good repair. This point of the law was decided in the late case of Partlow & Gates v. Monroe (186 N. E. 5, Tippecanoe City, Ohio).

CASE

In this case it was shown that a theatre operator leased a building in which he installed an expensive pipe organ. As a result of a leaking roof water entered the organ and damaged it to a great extent. The theatre operator filed suit against the owner of the building to recover $3,100 damages. However, in view of the fact that in the original lease contract the owner of the building had not agreed to maintain the premises in good repair, the higher court refused to hold the owner of the building liable, and said:

"The owner of real property may lease the same in whatever condition it exists at the time of the lease. If the owner does not agree with the lessee to put the property in good repair, or to keep it in good repair, the lessee cannot recover from the owner damages for an injury sustained by the lessee, due to the defective condition of the property."

LEGALITY OF SIGNED INSTRUMENT

VARIOUS COURTS have held that no person can avoid liability on a contract on the mere excuse that he neglected to read the contract and understand his assumed obligations before signing the instrument. However, if the evidence indicates he was induced by deception or fraud to sign the contract, then under these circumstances he may avoid obligation.

CASE

For instance, in Union Company v. Shaw (59 S. W. [2d] 1021, Hope, Arkansas), it was disclosed that an employe was seriously injured while performing his regular duties. After the injury was sustained a claim agent approached the injured employe and induced him to sign a release from further liability. Afterward the employe was informed of the contents of the instrument that he had signed and filed suit contending that the release was not valid because he had not read it.

However, the court held that he could not be relieved from liability on this ground, but that if he could prove that the claim agent exercised fraud or deception to obtain the signature he would not be bound by the release. This court said:

DECISION

"It has been held that one cannot avoid the effect of a contract of release by stating that he did not read it when he signed it, or know what it contained. . . . Under the circumstances, although he is not allowed to avoid the effect of the release on account of not having it read to him, if he was induced to sign it by the deception, whether it was intentionally fraudulent or not, practiced by the claim agent in making the statement that there was no liability on the part of the company for payment of damages for the injury suffered by him, such would not be the case."

EFFECT OF WRITTEN NOTICE

UNDER ORDINARY circumstances an employer may not be liable for payment of compensation insurance to an injured employe, if the employe fails to give the employer written notice of such injury within the period specified by the state laws. However, if the employer has knowledge that the employe was injured, this is equivalent to receiving the written notification ordinarily required by the state statutes.

CASE

For example, in Cooper v. Independent (19 P. [2d] 1057, Payette County, Idaho), it was disclosed that an employe was seriously injured and the employer had knowledge immediately thereafter of the accident. At a later date the counsel contended that the employer was not liable for payment of compensation insurance for the reason that the employe had failed to give the employer the required statutory written notification of the injury. However, the higher court held the employe entitled to recover compensation, under the compensation laws, and said:

DECISION

"Under the general rule so frequently announced by this court, the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act must be liberally construed with a view to effect its object and promote justice. . . . We have reached the conclusion that there is sufficient uncontradicted competent evidence that the employer had knowledge of the accident and the injury resulting therefrom. This being true, it becomes unnecessary to consider the question of prejudice by delay or want of notice."

NEGLIGENCE OF EMPLOYE

THE LAW is well established that an employer is responsible for negligent acts performed by an employe in the course of its regular employment. This rule of the law is applicable in all litigations involving negligence of an employer.

CASE

For illustration, in the late case of Amberson v. Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation (59 S. W. [2d] 875, San Antonio, Texas), it was shown that the driver of a bus accepted for shipment two boxes

LESSOR'S LIABILITY IN DAMAGES

By M. MARVIN BERGER
MEMBER NEW YORK BAR

IT CANNOT BE TOO OFTEN repeated that the law imposes upon the owner of a place of public amusement, a duty to the public, greater than that placed upon the ordinary business man. As a matter of fact, so great is this responsibility of a theatre owner to the public, that in some instances it continues even after he has parted with control of his theatre by leasing it.

A single example will illustrate this point. John Jones, deciding to retire from active theatre operation, leases his theatre for a period of years to Bill Smith. Jones fails to check up on the condition of his theatre before entering into the lease. Within a few months after the execution of the lease, and while Smith is occupying the premises, a balcony rail gives way and a spectator falls to the auditorium floor.

The injured party sues, not Smith the tenant, but Jones the landlord, claiming that the balcony rail was defective at the time the lease was drawn, and that Jones knew or should have known of this condition before he entered into the lease with Smith. The verdict is for the plaintiff against Jones.

At first sight, the proposition that a man can be held responsible for an injury arising out of a defective condition existing, at the time of a lease, on premises which he no longer controls, seems far-fetched. As a matter of fact, the opposite of this rule is very generally true—that is, the landlord, by making a lease, does not as a matter of law warrant that the premises are safe or fit for the use proposed to be made of them by the lessee.

But the rule is different in the case of a theatre or other place of public amusement. In such a case the care required of the lessor is, on principles of public policy, of a higher degree than when property is let for private purposes.

In making a lease of a theatre, the lessor or owner holds out to the public that the theatre building or structure is reasonably safe for the purpose for which it is leased. Upon the lessor or owner is thus thrown the burden of being reasonably certain that if the public use of the premises is to continue, the premises have not deteriorated and they are still safe for use by the public.

The duty of the owner of a theatre about to part with control by leasing it, is set forth in the language of a leading case as follows:

"This obligation requires affirmative action on his part, and in order that he may be exculpated to one injured by reason of the decay of the place he vouched for, it must appear that he inspected the property or in some other adequate manner fulfilled his obligation to the public before leasing the same."

If such inspection disclosed the defect or on a reasonably thorough examination should have disclosed the defect, he must then proceed to put the premises in repair or discontinue the conditions causing the defect.

By the above, it must not be understood that if the defective condition arises after the tenant is in occupancy of the premises, that the landlord is still liable for injuries arising out of such defective condition.

In other words, where possession has passed to the lesee, the lessor does not owe to the public the duty of keeping the premises in a safe condition or providing against such negligent acts of the lessee as may render the premises unsafe for occupancy as a theatre.

A 700-SEAT THEATRE OF RICH DESIGN

[The new Circle theatre in Toronto—a Canadian contribution to our growing number of small-capacity motion picture theatres of big-theatre beauty and technical facilities—presents one of the most interesting of richly ornamented, yet thoroughly modern designs. It was designed by Messrs. Kaplan and Sprachman, registered architects of Toronto. Following an outline submitted by us, Mr. H. S. Kaplan of that firm has himself prepared the following description.—THE EDITOR.]

LAST YEAR we illustrated in these pages a suburban theatre in Toronto, Canada. We have now completed another theatre in another Toronto neighborhood district. This new theatre is at 2567 North Yonge Street, the main street of that city. At this location Yonge Street passes through a highly restricted residential section.

The problem was to design a theatre for a high class patronage. The local and provincial building codes demand a building of fire-resisting materials, and all laws regarding this were complied with.

The Circle theatre was erected for its owner and operator, Mr. Hyman Freedman of Toronto. The architects were in full charge of the entire construction, contracts for which were awarded under separate trades.

The Circle has 700 seats. The cost, including the site and land for parking space adjoining the building itself, furnishings and all sound and mechanical equipment, was approximately $100,000. The building houses the theatre, associated facilities, and two small stores. The stores are independent units in the building and have no access to the theatre. These stores have their own lavatory and storage accommodation.

The overall dimensions are 47 feet frontage by 150 feet, 6 inches, with an average height of 35 feet. Construction consists of exterior walls of brick backed up with Haydite blocks. There are also steel columns which carry steel trusses for the roof. The roof is of a specially prepared insulated Haydite block.

GENERAL PLAN

The architects began with the understanding that they were to design a small high class theatre with all necessary rest rooms and accommodations, including a stage, but that the area used for this purpose must be in an economical proportion to the seating capacity. The single seating floor type of building was decided upon, and all public rooms are on this floor. The seats are of the box spring type, with Jacquard velour backs and Morrocoline leather seats.

A corner of the vestibule.

Public rooms include a lobby, foyer, women's and men's rest rooms, and toilets. There is a private stair off the foyer which leads to a second level and to the basement. The second floor contains the manager's officer, projection room, rewind and battery room, and a large room to house the air conditioning equipment. There is also a "quiet" room 7x8 feet, 6 inches with special seating.

The proscenium opening is 26 feet, 6 inches wide, and 22 feet high. While stage productions are not contemplated at this time, realizing the fickleness of public taste, the architects provided dressing rooms off the stage. These are over the exists and are reached by steel stairs.

Upon entering through a vestibule the patron is within a lobby. From there he enters the foyer. From the foyer, there is access to the women's and men's rest rooms, the auditorium, and by stairs to the basement and second level.

PROJECTION

The projection room measures 14x20 feet and is plastered with acoustic plaster at walls and ceiling. The walls are painted dark gray.

Two projectors are installed and provision has been made for a third machine. Projectors are Simplex, and the sound system is Northern (Western) Electric. The Circle has a maximum screen size of 14x18 feet. The distance from the first row of seats to the screen is 20 feet.

AIR CONDITIONING

There is complete air conditioning equipment which provides for heating, cooling and de-humidfying. The water temperature in Toronto is consistently low and refrigeration is not required. The conditioned air throughout the year is forced into the auditorium through ducts, to ten outlets in the roof space. The impure air is withdrawn through two large ducts at the rear and near the floor.

All other heating than in the auditorium is by radiators, with coal as the fuel. The boiler is provided with a stoker. The basement contains the boiler room, coal room, basements for both stores, an usher room, an electric equipment room, and general storage space.

DECORATION

The general decorative treatment of these rooms is modern and colorful, but not freakish or upsetting. Stenciled designs are sparingly used. The decorative treatment may be indicated as follows:

Facade: Facing of light gray brick with trim in white stone. The marquee is of unusual design, in that it slopes up and out from the facade. Neon tube and bulb lighting is used. Under the marquee is a horizontal sign with interchangeable letters to advertise any production adequately. The ends of the marquee are used for advertising, but the face is purely decorative.

Stone pilasters in the center of the facade rise to form a small tower crowned with a stone bowl containing three stainless steel tubes, which are to be illuminated by reflectors. This tower serves a dual purpose —as a sign hanger it does away with the necessity of ugly steel framing, and it also serves as an intake shaft for fresh air for the air conditioning system. Vitrolite is used extensively. Strips of black vitrolite form the horizontal lines which give form to the design.

The box office is a special feature of the

What today's methods and market offer for improving the theatre, outlined by an eminent designer of screen theatres

TRYING TO BE honest with myself, and looking back at some of the monstrosities I have designed—and mistakes I have made—I really feel ashamed of myself. But I am ready with a quick alibi! Who could have anticipated motion pictures with sound, their rapid growth, improvements and changes backed by millions in money and millions in talent?

Frankly speaking, there are not many good motion picture theatres in this or any other country—very few. The hundreds of hastily remodeled legitimate and vaudeville theatres do not measure up to what I would today call a practical building and properly adapted sound theatre. It is my notion that the highly developed sound picture of today does not belong into auditoriums and buildings which we have learned to call theatres. This type of entertainment belongs into a well designed room—I wish I could think of a new word for it—which takes nothing into consideration but the utmost eye and ear comfort of the public, plus a certain proper, tasty and restful atmosphere. Over-elaborate architectural interiors and flashy decorative surroundings detract more in a moving picture theatre than they attract.

We are facing a great and extended theatre reconstruction period, and I feel we should devote our energy and experience toward an earnest and intelligent effort to make new theatres out of the old, and to make our present theatres more adaptable to the new trend and type of picture and sound entertainment offered to the public.

Properly designed smaller motion picture auditoriums, scattered through neighborhoods and built on tasteful lines, featuring sight lines and acoustics—in some few instances built anew, but in most instances representing remodeling existing properties—will give the distributor and exhibitor every opportunity to serve the amusement loving public in a successful and profitable manner. The colossal theatres were created during a period of heedless competition, when the motion picture business was influenced more by personal ambition than by sound planning.

An owner's budget should cover all three major branches of theatre reconstruction. First, the replacement and repairs of worn and threadbare equipment and furnishings. Second, the purchase and installation of many recently developed innovations tending to improve quality of projection and sound as well as the general comfort of the patron. Third, the acquisition and creation of additional interesting features covering appearance, of both the exterior and the interior.

The experienced theatre architect is in position to materially help the owner in the preparation of an economical budget. Original and striking ideas, more than lavish money expenditures, are necessary. The application of new materials and new methods on economical lines will do more than anything else to rejuvenate your theatre and give it new interest for your patron and added efficiency from the operating standpoint. I have recently returned from a continental trip and had an opportunity to gather a great deal of information and ideas and giving me new thoughts for the American sound theatre. My recommendations in general run along the following line:

THE STAGE

On the stage, a modern shadow box with drapes running well unto the proscenium arch, more in free-hand fashion than along the lines of typical embellished and formal style.

A new straight up-and-down closing curtain, or a modified three-line contour curtain.

A pair of episode lamps, and a booth-controlled three-color dimmed glow light effect for intermissions and changes.

A concealed electric illuminated clock intermittently announcing the time.

A great many houses need their screen cleaned, painted or replaced.

Remodel the unnecessary footlight trough and orchestra pit and create interesting foreground in cascade fashion.

Check number and direction of horns, and in many cases you will be able to improve your sound considerably.

THE AUDITORIUM

In the auditorium the time-worn architectural treatment can easily be changed by a combination drapery and decorative scheme, arranging color contrasts so as to create an entirely new atmosphere.

Remove and subdue all lights in path of patrons' line of vision. Devise a lighting scheme for general illumination, concealed in rear portion of theatre. The banding of aisle carpets with white tape will in many cases take the place of aisle lighting.

Many of the most renowned general decorators have fallen down in presenting proper color schemes and economical execution of effective theatre auditorium decorating schemes. It is the experienced theatre decorator who realizes that color values must be selected with proper consideration of the complete scheme so that it will be seen under artificial light and attractive in semi-darkness. The average decorator and artist is accustomed to judge colors for daylight exposure or brilliant illumination.

While purchasing new opera chairs or chair parts consider the rearrangement of aisles. You might gain seats or be able to improve sight lines through the stagger system. The addition of automatic seat lifters and self-closing devices will be a welcome innovation for your patron facilitating entry and egress. The re-enameling of aisles standards and striping of seat backs in very light colors will improve the general appearance of the seating installation.

Refurnish lounges and retiring rooms. Shift furniture and bric-a-brac. Where possible, replace worn out wood or metal or tile partitions and wainscoting in toilet rooms with structural glass. Replace, for the sake of creating impression of newness, all glass in your exit and directional signs. Apply modern push and pull bars on your main exit and entrance doors.

Check the acoustical properties of the auditorium in every part. Modern sound apparatus is extremely sensitive, and there is no question in my mind that in most cases average results are only obtained, and there lies a dormant possibility of improved sound condition in almost every auditorium.

FOYERS AND FACADE

In the lobby and vestibule you might embellish your poster frames, replace some of your principal lighting fixtures and acid-treat all polished brass in order to avoid needless cleaning. Every lobby and vestibule should be furnished with perforated or link rubber matting in proper design and shape. This installation will reduce noise and will help to keep the house cleaner.

To give the average-sized lobby and vestibule a new appearance I recommend the application of a new product in the art marble line imitating marble in most perfect fashion giving side walls a stain and dirt proof surface and at the same time elegant appearance. This new type of art marble is very easily applied, reasonable in cost and perfect in appearance, as it imitates genuine marbles through a photographic process. Display frames and doors may be completely rejuvenated by bakelite panels with metal inserts.

Another very interesting development re-

PROJECTION IN THE CODE

[In order to bring conveniently to the attention of projectionists, those portions of the Motion Picture Code pertaining to their hours, wages and other working conditions, the proper sections have been selected for publication here, with comment by F. H. Richardson.—THE EDITOR.]

NOW THAT THE motion picture industry has its Code under the National Recovery Act, to be in effect for the next two years (the period of the Act), projectionists should be familiar with those provisions which pertain to them. The working conditions, hours and wages of labor in the industry is perhaps the chief interest in the Code, and the instrument affects unorganized as well as organized labor. First let us see just what the Code provides with respect to labor, and therefore to projectionists:

Section 6. (a) Employes associated with organization of or performing the duties of billposters, carpenters, electrical workers, engineers, firemen, motion picture machine operators, oilers, painters, theatrical stage employees, theatrical wardrobe attendants, or other skilled mechanics and artisans, who are directly and regularly employed by the Exhibitors, shall receive not less than the minimum wage and work no longer than the maximum number of hours per week which were in force as of August 23, 1933, as the prevailing scale of wages and maximum number of hours of labor by organizations of any of such employees affiliated with the American Federation of Labor with respect to their respective type of work in a particular class of theatre or theatres in a particular location in a particular community, and such scales and hours of labor with respect to any of such employees in such community shall be deemed to be, and hereby are declared to be, the minimum scale of wages and maximum number of hours with respect to all of such employees in such communities in such class of theatre or theatres.

(b) In the event, however, that there exists in the particular community organizations of such employes above mentioned, members of which were directly or regularly employed by the exhibitor or exhibitors on August 23, 1933, and which organizations are affiliated as above set forth, and (1) no prevailing scale of wages and maximum number of hours for such employes exist in such communities with respect to such employes, or (2) any dispute should arise as to what is the minimum scale of wages or the maximum number of hours of labor with respect to any of such employes for a particular class of theatre or theatres in any particular community, then and in either of those events such disputes shall be determined as follows:

(1) If the question at issue arises with an organization of such employes affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, then a representative appointed by the National President of such affiliated organization, together with a representative appointed by the exhibitors, shall examine into the facts and determine the existing minimum scale of wages and maximum number of hours of labor for such class or theatre or theatres in such particular locality, and in the event they cannot agree upon the same, they shall mutually designate an impartial third person who shall be empowered to sit with such representatives, review the facts and finally determine such dispute, with the proviso, however, that in the event such representatives cannot mutually agree upon such third person, then the Administrator shall designate such third person; or

(2) If the question at issue arises with unorganized employes, or with an organization of such employes not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and if in said community there exist members of such affiliated organization directly and regularly employed by an exhibitor or exhibitors, then a representative of such unorganized employees, or, as the case may be, a representative appointed by the President of such unaffiliated organization or both, together with a representative appointed by the National President of such affiliated organization, above referred to, together with a representative appointed by the exhibitors, shall examine into the facts and unanimously determine the existing scale of wages and maximum number of hours of labor for such class of theatre or theatres in such particular community, and in the event they cannot unanimously agree upon the same, they shall mutually designate an impartial person who shall be empowered to sit with such representatives, review the facts, and finally determine such dispute, with the proviso, however, that in the event such representatives cannot mutually agree upon such impartial person, then the Administrator shall designate such impartial person; or

(3) If the question at issue arises with unorganized employes, or with an organization of such employes not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and not, subject to the foregoing provisions of sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) of paragraph (b) hereof, then a representative of such unorganized employes, or, as the case may be, a representative of the President of such unffiliated organization or both together with a representative appointed by the exhibitors, shall examine into the facts and determine the existing minimum scale of wages and maximum hours of labor, for such class of theatre or theatres in such particular locality, and in the event they cannot agree upon the same, they shall mutually designate an impartial person who shall be empowered to sit with such representatives, review the facts and finally determine such dispute, with the proviso, however, that in the event such representatives cannot mutually agree upon such impartial person, then the Administrator shall designate such impartial person.

(c) Pending the determination of any such dispute, the rate of wages then paid by the exhibitor in such theatre or theatres in such community, and the maximum number of hours then in force (if not more than the hours provided for in this code) shall not be changed so as to decrease wages or increase hours.

(d) In order to effectuate the foregoing provisions of this section 6 hereof, and pending the determination of any dispute as above specified, the employes herein embraced and provided for agree they shall not strike, and the exhibitors agree that they shall not lock out such employes.

Section 7. In no event shall the duties of any of the employes hereinabove specified in Section 6 (a) directly and regularly employed by the exhibitors as of August 23, 1933, be increased so as to decrease the number of such employes employed in any theatre or theatres in any community, except by mutual consent.

It will be observed that Section 6 provides that where men are organized, the A. F. of L. minimum wage scale in and for that locality, as well as the A. F. of L. maximum hours, will obtain. I would imagine this might create some misunderstanding and confusion, though let us trust not. It seems in any event only to hold good for men who were organized on or before August 23, 1933. Insofar as wages be concerned, where organized and unorganized men were receiving the same wage from every theatre in the organized territory—in other words all projectionists were on an equal pay basis—no difficulty can come about, at least until the code expires or is altered. Since the Code provision is the minimum pay any employer may offer, regardless of whether the man or men be organized or not. However, let it be clearly understood that no projectionist is permitted to work in excess of 40 hours a week.

Notice, too, in reading the code, that the arbitration board set up can consider two things only; namely, what the minimum wage was, and the maximum hours worked in the class of theatres in that locality as of August 23, 1933.

The question of hours of labor and minimum wage as of August 23, 1933, is to be arbitrated in communities where there was no established wage scale; where there were varying wages in different theatres of like class or where both organized and unorganized men are working.

In cases where the dispute is solely between the exhibitors and the I. A., the employers shall appoint a duly accredited representative who shall be entitled to sit upon the arbitration board. The I. A. also appoints a representative and those two select a third, which same shall constitute an arbitraiton board in that case, with the proviso that if the two cannot agree upon a third person to fill the board, then the National Recovery Administrator shall appoint the third one. In case the trouble to be arbitrated is what was the prevailing scale of wages as of August 23, 1933, and the dispute is between the I. A., the exhibitors and unorganized men, or men organized in some organization not affiliated with the A. F. of L., then the arbitration board shall consist of an I. A. representative, an Exhibitors representative, a representative of the unorganized men or non-affiliated organization, which three shall select a fourth, or in event they fail to do so then the N. R. A. Administrator will appoint him, the four to constitute the board.

In cases where a projectionist in any theatres claims he is not receiving the code requirement in wages or hours neither can the employer discharge the man, nor can the man quit, nor can there be any strike until arbitration as before described has taken place. Until the minimum pay and maximum hours are officially decided by arbitration, the employer can neither reduce the rate of pay, nor increase hours of labor per day, with this exception, hours of labor provided for can in no case exceed 40 per week.

Here is one rather queer thing—until an arbitration board has definitely fixed the minimum wage and maximum hours of labor as of August 23, 1933, strikes are barred. As soon, however, as this has been done, the right to strike or lock men out is automatically reinstated. May be quite all right, but seems a bit odd. After an arbitration board has acted and set the August 23 matter straight, men can strike for higher wages, less hours of labor or what have you, in which event the employer in opposition must pay any man he hires as strike breaker the minimum pay, and is not permitted to work them in excess of the number of hours the board has fixed as of August 23. Take warning, however. Before any strike is called, an honest effort must be made to come to terms with the employers.

Many small town exhibitors and projectionists have written asking information as to the effect of the code upon them. It is a difficult question to answer. So far as I am able to determine, since each local of the I. A. claims jurisdiction over all territory half-way to the next local in every direction, it should naturally follow that the unorganized men and the exhibitors within all that territory must expect the same determination in the matter of wages and hours as the organized territory is accorded. However, it will most certainly not be so applied—in fact, cannot be so applied—or so it seems to me. Just how that phase of the matter will finally be worked out must, it would seem, be left to time to determine. It is very true the unorganized men have the right to go through all the rigamorole of demanding arbitration, etc., but I have a tintype of them doing it when they are scattered through many towns and villages, possibly only one to each place. It is one of those things that sound all right, but just can't be carried out successfully.

And so, these are your working rules. All projectionists should know them well.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

F. H. Richardson

BEING ON THE JOB WHILE ON THE JOB

RECENTLY I talked with a wide-awake theatre manager who said such excellent things that I asked him to reduce them to writing. I think his remarks should be read by every theatre manager and employe.

"First let me say I make it my business to visit other theatres at every possible opportunity. I pay admission, enter unknown, sit through an entire performance, making written notes of anything I may see in either presentation or projection that seems an improvement upon my own methods. Often I wait until the house lights up after the show to note anything in the auditorium decoration I think I might use to advantage later on.

"In my own theatre I require all members of the staff to keep their minds upon their work during working hours. That I conceive to be what they are employed for, and demand they do it under pain of instant dismissal, or if they prefer it, a fine of one day's pay. This rule is fully explained to them, and in the case of projectionists, to the union business agent as well, at time of employment. In the case of projectionists, I explain to the business agent that there is one thing I will not tolerate or arbitrate, and that is absence from the projector while it is projecting film (I have a two-man shift), except when there is an emergency demanding instant attention from both men.

"As for myself, I honor the rule I oblige others to honor. Except when duties call me away, I remain on watch every moment from the time the audience begins to assemble until it has departed. I watch, and watch closely, to check up on any and everything that seems to require attention. Occasionally I visit the projection room. No excuse would be accepted save the single one before cited, for a projector to be in operation without one man beside it, attending strictly to business.

"I have mentioned the projectionist procedure as an example, Mr. Richardson, because you have yourself many times, in print, demanded the presence of one man of a two-man shift constantly at the working projector, in which I hold you to be 100 per cent right. Yet I find managers who do not even speak a word of reprimand when both men are away from the working projector, either engaged in unimportant work or doing nothing at all, as I have at times witnessed many.

"However, I demand exactly the same service of all other employes in the theatre, from janitor up, including myself. Be on the job and keep your mind on your work is my order to all employes, and so far as is humanly possible, I enforce it right up to the handle. To do this consistenly, however, one must follow the same rule himself. One cannot reasonably expect employes to live up to any rule the manager fails or refuses to honor by observance himself.

"Many times I have visited a theatre to consult its manager, only to find the show running and him parked comfortably in his office chair, out of sight and touch with everything, possiby reading a paper. Instead, the manager should be on the floor, watching his men, greeting patrons (which, I find, if rightly done and not over-done, to get business) and seeing to it that every cog in the theatre wheel is working smoothly and with maximum efficiency.

"How many times have I witnessed rank neglect of duty or rank inefficiency by theatre employes with the manager apparently totally unaware that anything was wrong! Ticket office girls wagging jaws on a wad of gum, ticket taker almost snatching tickets from patron's hands, ushers with about as much real courtesy as a broom handle. How many times have I peeked into projection rooms to see neither projectionist of a two-man shift anywhere near the working projector, or perhaps the single man of a one-man shift reading a book or paper, or 'chewing the rag' with a visitor while the motor runs the show. In other words not a man in the entire theatre, including the manager, with his mind really on his work.

"How in Heaven's name can the best results be expected? How can a theatre manager thus be expected to succeed in any large way—or at all, for that matter?

"Mr. Richardson, I honor you for the work you are doing and have done for so many years. I honor the old Moving Picture World and the present MOTION PICTURE HERALD for providing the means for carrying it on. But the old, vigorous verbal club you once used freely seems to have been more or less laid aside, and that is not good. It is badly needed. Get it out. F. H., and polish it up by causing it to connect with the solid ivory of men who are physically present on the job, but mentally miles away twenty-nine thirtieths of the time."

I too well know the type of inefficiency this manager has in mind. I thoroughly agree with his methods, and also that the "club" still has its right place. I propose to have a talk with my superiors upon the advisability and feasibility of rubbing the rust off it a bit. The trouble in that lies in the fact that for psychological reasons, little attention is paid to such things unless the theatre and some of its personnel are named. I don't know why, but my experience through the years proves it to work out that way. I think probably it is that naming names wakes people up, and perhaps makes them wonder who is going to be next!

After all it is the manager himself who is basically at fault. When employes know there is a watchful manager on the job every hour, and, that the penalty of failure to be strictly on the job, both physically, and mentally will result in a prompt reprimand and, if persisted in, dismissal, they will attend strictly to business and give the best service they are capable of.

It is rank nonsense to say, for example, that a projectionist can do his work in the best way and read a paper while the show runs. It is quite true no visible defect may occur at the moment, but viewed as a whole, the man who has his mind on his work constantly, and on nothing else while on duty, will do a far better job than will the man whose mind is on something else.

74 HOURS A WEEK WITHOUT RELIEF

FROM THE GREAT state of Texas comes this letter. While one does not enjoy publishing such communications, it nevertheless seems very necessary. Surely exhibitors, following such a course and seeing the matter in cold print, will realize that they are not doing exactly the right thing. The letter is from a projectionist, whose name and location are not given for obvious reasons. He writes:

"I have just read what your daughter had to say about projection conditions in Baltimore, Maryland. Those men certainly have things nice. It is a sad contrast with the conditions we have imposed upon us here, meaning one other projectionist and myself, this being a town of about 3,000 population. There are two theatres, both owned by the same company. One runs seven and the other five days a week. One opens at 2 p.m., the other at 7, except Saturdays and Sunday. On Saturday we open at 10 a.m., and close around midnight. During all of this time I am on duty without relief. My meals are brought to me. I must eat while working. The other man has to work likewise at the other theatre.

"Mr. Richardson, do you think any one should be obliged to work 14 hours in any one day, without relief. Don't you think it bad for the health and ruinous to the eyes? Of course, this happens only once a week. The other days we work ten hours a day. We do all repair work on both projectors and sound equipment. I don't want to brag, but we certainly do have good projection and sound in both theatres at all times. We must come to work early in the morning in order to get the advertising work done before time to open the show.

"I wonder what city men would say were they compelled to work as we do? The height of my ambition is to be projectionist in some large theatre and to belong to a union. Union men who get good wages, work short hours and have good conditions generally—often two men to a shift—would have their eyes opened were they able to understand what we small-towners have to put up with."

Surely there can be no legitimate excuse for working men 10 and 14 hours a day when great numbers are unable to find any work at all. Were I to express my views concerning those who work men in a projection room 14 hours a day, even though only one day a week, the page upon which this is printed would certainly burn. However, even were 10- and 14-hour days justified, it would be very poor procedure from a business standpoint. A man watching a motion picture for 10 hours—to say nothing of 14—at a stretch, is murdering his eyes. In due time he will have to get out of projection. The strain is too heavy. Aside from the element of eye strain, being cooped up for all those hours beside a hot lamphouse, with the whir of machinery in one's ears continuously, will certainly in due time undermine the health and wreck one's nervous system. I am sure any unbiased doctor will back up that statement.

Men working under such conditions cannot possibly give consistently good results. The statement of the correspondent that they have good results I take with a grain of salt. While the results may be all right, that does not necessarily mean that they might not be better. Certainly two theatres such as these should have three projectionists. The third man could relieve the first one in one of the theatres after he had worked 3⅓ hours. Then he could be relieved by the regular man and relieve the man at the other theatre, again being relieved after 3⅓ hours work by its regular man. This would give each man 6½ hours work a day and somewhat more on the long day. That would be reasonable, and theatres operating 10 hours a day five days, and 14 hours the sixth day, that cannot afford three projectionists between them, had better shut up shop. The exhibitor running them has no moral right to expect his projectionists to contribute to charity in the form of unjust hours.

EXAMINATION PROCEDURE

THE DEPARTMENT of Labor and Industry of one of our great states recently applied to the writer for a list of questions suitable for use in examining projectionists. In response to this request I sent a list of 385 questions, together with correct answers, but with a warning that a fixed list of questions is not good practice, for the reason that if a question be asked many times, very soon it will become expected, whereupon certain "schools" might collect money for supplying answers to the questions without taking the trouble to impart any real information whatsoever—just a learned-by-heart answer (as has happened).

There is but one way really to examine a projectionist, and that is dependent upon an accurate understanding of the subject by the examiner himself. If a question is asked and the one being examined immediately gives a correct answer, one may reasonably assume the subject to be well understood. However, hesitation or an unsatisfactory answer does not necessarily mean lack of knowledge. It may merely indicate embarrassment, nervousness or inability to express the answer properly in words. Therefore, if an unsatisfactory or hesitant answer is returned to any question, it is up to the examiner to ask other questions along the same line, and thus to ascertain just what is wrong—either it is lack of knowledge, or just one of the things named above.

It is nothing short of outrageous for an examiner to be hard-boiled and abrupt. An applicant frequently (for that matter, usually) is under a nervous strain. A hard-boiled examiner may completely upset him and actually cause him to answer questions wrong on matters he understands very well. The examiner should be kindly, but work understandingly.

Incidentally, the list of questions and answers I have compiled was made up for the Society of Motion Picture Engineers some while ago, when it had under consideration the inauguration of a projection department for educational purposes. The matter fell through, hence the questions and answers, which involved a vast amount of work, were not delivered to the Society.

If any union or individual would like a copy of them I might be willing to supply it. Those interested, particularly unions, may address me and we will see

BOUQUETS— AND BRICKBATS

WHEN I SPRUNG that Union Membership article in BETTER THEATRES of September 23, I expected response. It came all right, in the form of a flood of bouquets interspersed liberally with verbal brickbats. Of the many union men who wrote, some more or less objected to some points in my argument, while some (only a few, be it said) were just plain abusive, giving no reasonable reason for being that way, except that I had dared to suggest some line of action to the I. A.!

Many intimated that my argument had points well worthy of very serious consideration. Some even indorsed the plan as a whole, but doubted it could be put through an I. A. convention, for the reason that the many stage employee members now out of work demanded the right to fill projection jobs, or anyhow desired to, regardless of an almost total lack of study or practical experience. A great number of small town men wrote also.

I shall quote three letters, withholding names for the obvious reason that such publication would or might subject the correspondent, if a union man, to attack by some members of his own local, and possibly bar the "sticks" man from membership should he afterward apply. I do not know this would be so, but it nevertheless might be, and I wish no man to get into trouble because of having either approved or opposed my views.

The following comes from a "sticks" man in Canada, and one I happen to have reason to believe to be a competent, live-wire projectionist, who knows his business and delivers the goods in every sense of the word. He says:

"Dear Brother Richardson: I take the liberty of calling you 'brother' for several reasons, though I am not a union man. First, you rose to leadership from a projection room many years ago and never since have failed to remember that fact and stick by what you conceive to be the really best interests of both the men and projection.

"Second, you have done far more than any other man, or half-dozen of them, to cause our bosses to respect us, anyhow to some extent, and to make projection respected. Third, you have never dodged into a hole when rocks were thrown, and I can remember times plenty when they were, too.

"And now as to the union matter: I hold myself to be a competent motion picture-sound projectionist. I study your department and the Bluebook, and helped by them, study my equipment. I work, of course, under the jurisdiction of an I.A.T.S.E. and M.P.M.O. local. I am almost equally close to two of them and am not certain which one. I have applied for membership in them both several times. I have talked with the president of each, but though this has been going on for more than three years, I have been nothing less than ignored. They have nothing against my character, or, so far as I am able to learn, my ability. I am working in their territory, but they won't accept me into membership, which is equally true of some other 'sticks' men whom I know.

"Brother Richardson, I hold such a situation to be wholly wrong. The union men condemn non-union men, then turn around and force us to be just that. The plan you suggest seems to me to be sound and workable—provided the union wants to be fair. If it insists upon being unfair, well, I guess you know what unions call a man who is unfair to them.

"Keep up your work, Brother Richardson. We 'sticks' men most earnestly thank both you and BETTER THEATRES for giving us small towners a "break." No one else seems willing to do it."

Here is another letter—from a union man this time: "It was with some surprise I read your article in September 23 BETTER THEATRES. Must hand it to you, Dad. You haven't lost your nerve with the passing years. I'll bet you get a lot of slams on that article, but just the same, I think you have made some very good points in it, and that the whole thing is well worthy of serious attention by an I. A. convention.

"My own local has never refused admission to any projectionist working in our jurisdiction who could prove himself really competent to handle any theatre equipment within our jurisdiction competently, but I do know some other locals not far from us which will take in no members except those actually working in their own cities. I am forced to agree with you that this is not fair. The basis of their refusal is, as you said, fear that such men would demand that their wages and working conditions be improved, which is not always possible in small towns and villages, or that they be given a job in the home city of the local. You have worked out a plan for protection against this very cleverly, Dad, and I do hope some action will be taken on it."

And now for a sample of those few letters of the abusive class. What do you think of it?

"Dear Sir: Who in hell do you think you are, anyhow, telling the unions what to do? When we want any help from a typewriter operator we'll let you know. Your scheme is crazy. We don't want a lot of them fellows in. They wouldn't do anything but make trouble. Maybe you meant all right, but you're full of suds."

Well, there's nothing like a difference of opinion!

MR. RUBIN DEVISES A PROJECTION NOVELTY

SOME YEARS ago our friend Harry Rubin, chairman of the projection Practice Committee of the S. M. P. E. and chief projectionist of the Paramount theatre in New York City, put into use the "magnascopic" screen. A few days ago I was asked to go to the Paramount theatre and examine a new "stunt" Mr. Rubin had developed.

Complying, I saw something that impressed me as in the nature of a decided novelty, but one that might be used by progressive projectionists in many ways. I found but one objection—as then used it eliminated quite a bit of the film photograph. That, however, could be either partly or wholly overcome with but little trouble. It would merely be a matter of enlarging the blocked-out center and the opening in the slip-in aperture used.

This was the arrangement. Three projectors (one motion picture, one stereopticon, and one effect) are necessary, but it could be done somewhat differently with less. In the motion picture aperture a slip-in brass aperture was used, in which an opening of suitable size had been cut. This supplied the motion picture projection.

In the stereo a very clever device was placed, invented by Rubin, which produced upon the screen the optical illusion of a rotating globe on which was a map of the world. This illusion was perfect in its effect. It was really a very simple device.

In the upper effect slide carrier was placed a block-out center which must coincide exactly in screen dimensions with the aforesaid motion picture projected through the special slip-in aperture. In the lower effect carrier was placed some suitable colored magnascope design slide. In the lower stereo slide carrier was placed a moving cloud effect. In addition there were word titles.

The thing worked out thus as applied to a newsreel. First came a rotating globe of the world, surrounded by a floating cloud effect. On this globe appeared the title, which faded into a colored magnascope, in the center of which was the blocked-out upright oval carrying the newsreel scene. Sound, of course, was in no way affected. As a novelty the thing is very distinctly a hit, though as I said, the m. p. aperture and blocked-out area might well have some added dimensions.

However, with the actual stunt itself I am not so much concerned as with what it points out. Mr. Rubin has given us two projection novelties. I took pains to ascertain the fact that Rubin himself worked out this last one, as he did the first. He tells me its perfection required months of thought and experimentation. Now gentlemen, how many of you attempt to think out a projection improvement or novelty in the form of "something different"? How many of you pride yourselves on being a "good projectionist," but call it a day and stop right there?

WHAT IS A SPOT? HOW TO FIND OUT

THERE SEEMS to be a general misunderstanding as to just what the spot on the projector mechanism cooling plate really is. William N. Sanderson of St. Louis, writes:

"I had a rather heated argument with a St. Louis projectionist today and ask that you straighten the matter out. He tells me the spot is just a big beam of light and that is all there is to it. Perhaps he is right. He is a projectionist in one of our deluxe theatres and ought to know, but just the same if he is, why can we not cut off all the light on the cooling plate and stop wasting it? I wish, Mr. Richardson, you would please explain this to me. Somehow what he says doesn't make good sense—to me, at least."

It does not make good sense, Friend Sanderson, for the simple reason that it is not good sense. The "spot" is nothing more or less than many thousands of images of the light source superimposed, or partly so, on each other. If you are yourself a projectionist you may very easily clear the whole matter up in your own mind by doing as follows:

Wash a converging element (mirror or condenser converging lens, as the case may be) in soap and water. Polish it thoroughly and then coat with black water color. Lampblack mixed in turpentine will do. Install the lens or mirror in place, and in the coating—at the center if a lens, and near the center if a mirror—make a pin-hole. Turn on the light and you will find at the aperture a more or less enlarged, centrally located image of the light source. Make another pin-hole at the very edge of the free diameter of the converging element and you will find another similar image, but not centrally located. Probably the first one will all pass through the aperture. The other, however, will partly fall upon the cooling plate, probably only a small portion being available to the aperture.

If you now make a series of tiny holes from the center to the edge of the lens or mirror, you will find a series of images, each one of them located a bit differently with regard to the aperture opening. Now think that over. It means that each pin point of the converging element is projecting to the spot an image of the light source, since with the lens washed clean again the action will be in no degree altered, except that all images will be projected simultaneously.

You cannot cut the light off the cooling plate for the simple reason that only those images projected by the central zone of the converging element entirely pass through the aperture, hence to cut all light off the cooling plate you could use only the above named central zone, and you would not have very much light left. Instead of "one big beam of light" the condenser or mirror beam is really thousands upon thousands of cone-shaped beams having their apex at a pin point of the converging element surface. Unless that be understood one cannot of course understand why the outer zone of the beam which falls upon the cooling plate cannot be cut off by reducing the converging element diameter. The converging element light beam is something deserving of real study by projectionists, since from it the meaning of many things may be grasped and made practical use of.

Another thing I may mention here is what I have just given the designation "effective beam." It, and its effect, also should be well understood. This came up prominently in connection with the rear shutter in preparing the sixth edition of the Bluebook, now well under way. Save for some illustrations this edition will be wholly a new work.

One may decide the rear shutter has nothing whatsoever to do with any light not actually passing through the aperture. Since light travels only in absolutely straight lines, it then follows that what I have dubbed the "effective beam" is that light contained within straight lines drawn from all points of the outer diameter of the converging element to corresponding points of the aperture outline. With light falling outside those lines the shutter has nothing to do.

Of what importance is that, do you ask? Well, in the first place it enables one, merely by the aid of a sheet of paper, a ruler and pencil, to lay out the exact light beam of his own condenser or mirror and know what depth of beam the shutter must cut through according to its distance from the film plane. Knowledge of this has value to projectionists who take enough interest in their profession to make comparisons of the performance of different professional projectors. Then, too, it enables the projectionist to lay out the effective light beam for any type of light source, considering the diameter of the converging element and the distance from the aperture. The difference in shutter master blade width requirements is involved in economy of operation. And there are other reasons why such things should be understood.

DO YOUR ROLLERS ROLL?

L. VAN BUSKIRK, projectionist at the Malta theatre in Alpena, Mich., asks "How often does the average projectionist check up on fire valve and sprocket idler rollers? I have myself seen magazine fire trap rollers worn flat to such an extent that it was a certainty they had not rolled for months.

"Certainly it should not be necessary to remind projectionists that fire trap rollers form a potential fire risk, and not a small one either. Idler rollers that do not roll also are responsible for much damage to sprocket holes, which makes for both unsteadiness of screen image and fire danger.

"In the sound heads there is a stabilizing roller between the sound sprocket and magazine. If this does not roll constantly the film may be scratched from end to end.

"Projectionists who are careless in the matter of inspecting their idler rollers do not deserve the title of projectionist. They belong back in the machine operator class. If a roller has a flat spot, no time should be lost in replacing it with a new one. Flat spots should not be permitted to develop, though, and will not if the projectionist is 'on the job.'

"Certainly if a flat roller is permitted to develop, friend manager will get a new one if the matter be properly explained to him. Tell him such a roller-that-don't-roll is not only useless for the purpose intended, but is dangerous as well. It may cause him to accumulate a nice big bill for damaged film. Don't have the idea that merely because you may have used such a roller for some time without trouble, it won't bring

Mr. Trouble around finally. Remember that if or when trouble does come, that sort of alibi won't be worth Adam. It won't do your manager any good either."

Correct! Projectionists won't have trouble of that sort, for they won't permit any roller to accumulate a flat spot. The man who does so automatically sinks to the machine operator class, as Brother Van Buskirk says. If his union makes periodic inspections of projection equipment, as it should, and a flat roller is discovered, then that man should be reported to the theatre manager.

FOLLOWS RULES OF GOOD PROJECTION

A. B. JEFFERIES of the New Piedmont theatre in Piedmont, Mo., writes most interestingly as follows:

"Dear Brother Richardson: Although I have followed your writings since 1912, this is the first time I have written to you. I have not been employed as a projectionist in the past, though it has always been my hobby. I have at last realized my—or perhaps I may better say we have realized our—ambition, for Mrs. Jefferies and her husband (myself) have opened a small theatre (seats 222) here in Piedmont, population about 1,000. Nearest theatre is 40 miles away, and we have a number of small towns to draw from. I have every edition of your handbooks (the Bluebook) from first to last, and right here want to say that we small town fellows would be just plain lost without such a lifesaver to fall back on.

"I am my own projectionist and try hard to live up to the title. Have designed my projection room in accordance with your teachings, with one exception, namely dimensions. We remodeled a building and the space just wasn't there. However, we made it 7x9 feet, with dark walls and large observation ports. Have two Powers 6B projectors with Mellaphone soundheads and a Webster amplifier. The sound equipment is giving excellent satisfaction. Our light source is G. E. Mazda equipment, 30 volts, 30 amperes, lined up according to specifications. The light is good. Projection distance 58 feet. Screen is a Walker sound screen. In building the theatre we kept one eye on the Bluebook all the time. I do not claim to be a real projectionist, but this I can say honestly: Our sound and picture will compare favorably with any I have yet seen and heard."

Friend Jefferies sent a photograph of his projection room, but, as he says, it is small and all that can be seen in the picture is the rear end of the projectors.

I am interested in this letter for the reason that it comes from a man who loves his work, has real pride in it and tries hard to produce the best possible results. It is that sort of man who finally succeeds. I would like to sit down and watch one of Mr. and Mrs. Jefferies' shows. I'll bet both sound and picture are good. Believe you me, it most emphatically is not the city men who put on all the good shows. I have sat through many and many a small town show and enjoyed it thoroughly.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.

The Question:

WE ARE planning on reconditioning our theatre and would appreciate any advice or plans your architect might furnish. Our theatre seats 730, lower floor 580, balcony 150. We wish to change the color scheme throughout. Our walls are built in blocks of concrete 10 feet high, then 18 feet of plastered brick. Ceiling is of Celotex with beams across the width 12x18 inches. The arrangement of the theatre is very good for a town of 7,500 population. Any suggestions you might make will be appreciated.—R. L. B.

The Answer:

ACCORDING TO the description of your theatre I am afraid that you are experiencing quite a little trouble with the acoustical qualities in your house. If that is one of your troubles I believe that you will have to fur out the lower parts of the walls before you start decorating. The beams in the ceiling are not good for perfect sound. I am simply presuming this, but if I am right and the sound is bad, fur down the ceiling to the bottom of the beams and apply suitable acoustic treatment. You can then arrange for concealed light effects, which will give you a complete transformation of the interior.

Let me suggest a rather plain treatment for the walls. If you can arrange for some concealed light boxes along the walls, provide them with cutout tops. The design of the cutouts could be reflected against the walls and give quite an unusual effect and is very inexpensive. Of course it all depends on how the walls are treated. The color scheme could be changed by simply installing different colored gelatins in the cutouts. [See article, "Modernizing the Interior With Light," November 18 issue. — THE EDITOR.]

The Question:

YOUR BETTER THEATRES has been of great assistance and exceedingly inspiring. The writer, who is owner and manager of the Tosa theatre at the above mentioned address, has experienced considerable trouble with regard to heating and ventilating. Merely another case of "crying over spilt milk."

This theatre is two years old and was built without the supervision of an architect. We are sending under separate cover a set of plans covering the construction and details of the theatre in hope that you may turn this over to somebody who can give us recommendations for the most efficient and economical corrections to be made under supervision of a good architect.

As you will note, the floor plan is not a favorable one and it is the writer's thought that a ramp be constructed in the rear of the theatre so we may lower that part of the theatre where the screen is, giving us a gradual slope from the front of the theatre, or entrance, to the rear.

We have a blower type of system that is delivering approximately 8,000 cubic feet per minute. The fan itself, it is claimed, will give 12,000, but we are quite positive that we are not getting this delivery. Therefore, in the summer we receive complaints about the excessive heat, and in winter the floor is cold and drafty at all times, from the seat down.

Now, this, in a nutshell, is our grief, and any kind of information we may receive from you that we can depend on as being something to work on to solve this problem, will be more than appreciated. Kindly return our plans after necessary information has been obtained therefrom. —R. J. B.

The Answer:

I TRUST you will take this criticism in the spirit in which it is intended—that of helpfulness for the benefit of any confronted with problems of theatre planning—and not as a personal matter. After studying your plans very carefully, I find that they can be improved a great deal, and I hope that you have not started actual construction.

To begin with the ground plan: It seems to me that you are giving entirely too much prominence to the store area, and are sacrificing the entrance to the theatre. In my experience I have found that the revenue obtained from such stores is very small and under no conditions worth sacrificing the theatre itself.

I suggest that you remove the masonry around the box office. It will improve the looks and also give the box office more prominence by having it exposed on three sides. Place the entrance doors back flush with the back of the box office so the doors will not project beyond the face of the building when open.

I notice that both the lot lines are parallel, but you place one side wall on a slant, presumably to provide for an exit court. I take it you planned for 589 seats. By making the building walls parallel you will not only get a better looking interior, but you will also obtain more space on each side of the stage to increase the width of the exit doors and by taking enough space from the store, or to add one exit door to the entrance doors you will have plenty of exits to comply with your State or local building code. By doing this you can increase the seating capacity or widen the foyer and stage apron.

As to your air conditioning system, I am afraid that the fan room under the apron will not give you very good results. The hot air will be blown directly into the faces of the people in the front part of the house. These outlets should be about 8 feet above the lower part of the auditorium floor, and on each side of the proscenium, and be properly diffused. Why not combine these with the cooling registers you have provided, as the cooling system is used only in warm weather?

I advise you to eliminate the ramps on each side of the stage. This can be easily done by placing steps in the exit spaces. The slope in the auditorium floor is very bad, as it creates a pit in the center of the auditorium, and I have been wondering if any of your patrons sitting in that part of the house can see anything of the lower part of the screen. By all means change this floor incline, making the slope continuous toward the stage. The first 25 feet in front of the screen may be on a level plane. Lower the platform floor to about 3 feet, 4 inches above the low part of the auditorium floor. Above all, do away with the pit in the center of the auditorium, for this eliminating will be a great factor in getting rid of some of the troubles you are having with the heating.

Install separate heating and ventilating unit in foyer as indicated in plans. This will stop the cold air coming in through the doors between the lobby and auditorium near the floor level, as it is otherwise impossible to force the warm air down to the floor level when the doors are opened at intervals. Place this unit at the floor line and make an opening in the wall between the auditorium and lobby with inlet on the auditorium side and outlet on the lobby side. Any cold air that comes through the front doors will thus be heated.

Remodeling With Modern Materials

cently brought on the market is a new opaque glass tile construction which may be used on the entire side wall or ceiling surface of the lobby and vestibule, executed in soft and artistic colors and back-lighted with neon tubes or bulb lamps. With this glowing glass background, lobby side walls will lend themselves to most interesting and effective exploitation work, using cut-outs and silhouettes.

These glass tiles are very artistic and practical. They are by virtue of their peculiar patented construction practically shatter-proof, and broken tile, if any, are easily replaced. The same type of glass construction offers a very effective method of completely changing the front elevation of any theatre. The entire front of a theatre, including the marquee, could be covered with these glass tiles.

And now your electric signs. The vertical sign is in most cases a bulb sign, and the attraction board is equipped with glass bottle letters. Neon adapters permit you to change your present bulb sign into a tube sign without destroying or wrecking or taking down your present sign structure. The change is made while you are using your sign.

A new ripple glass has just been introduced which may be used on your changeable letter sign in connection with cast aluminum cut-out letters. This scientifically designed glass is mirrored and forms the background of the stencil letters, giving a brilliant effect in daytime, and also permitting positive and effective back-lighting at night.

Any marquee and any of the existing vertical signs can be economically treated with single or double-neon tube borders so as to change completely the old shape and appearance without reconstruction.

Don't take these general and specific remarks having to do with proper theatre remodeling lightly. More money has been wasted through unorganized remodeling efforts than can be counted.

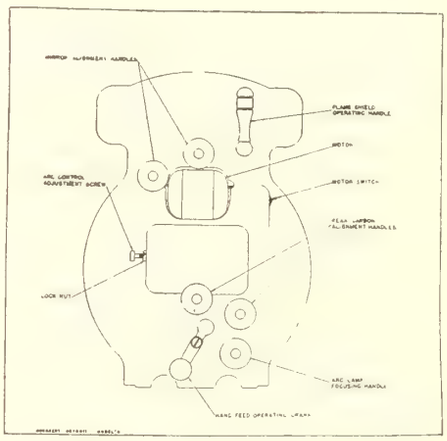
LAMPS FOR A. C. CARBON

● During the summer and fall projection lamp manufacturers have been rushing designs to bring forth equipment capable of handling the new alternating current carbon introduced last spring by the National Carbon Company. Lamp manufacturers have been asked to submit specifications, and below they are presented for two of the most recently developed representatives of this new and somewhat revolutionary product. The new a. c. carbons are already in use in many theatres formerly using low intensity equipment.

The Brenkert lamp, brought out by the Brenkert Light Projection Company and known as its Model K, operates on from 70 to 80 amperes arc current, and from 24 to 29 arc volts. A regulating transformer is also manufactured for use with this lamp, operating on a line voltage of from 100 to 140, or 200 to 260 volts. A screw adjustment permits regulating the arc current within a fraction of an ampere under this wide voltage range. The regulator, which is designed without moving parts, is built to standard electrical specifications.

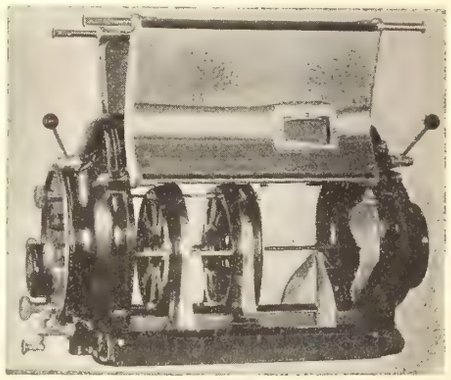
The Brenkert lamp is equipped with a pyrex reflector designed to intercept a large angle of the light emitted from the arc. The arc control is built along the lines of a dynamometer, and the contacting means is a mercury switch. The manufacturer claims a variation of less than 2% in the arc current. No setting is required to compensate for temperature changes.



Brenkert mechanism. See text.

The accompanying diagram shows the method of striking the arc with the Brenkert mechanism. The main switch on the projector base is closed, and the arc is struck by turning the hand feed crank to the left until the carbons touch, then quickly back off until the carbons are separated the correct distance as shown on the arc reflector screen at the top of lamphouse. The hand feed crank maintains the carbons at the right distance. An ammeter on the rear lamphouse plate shows when the correct arc current is acquired.

The Strong Electric Corporation calls its lamp the A. C. Mogul Automatic Reflector Arc Lamp. The lamp-house doors and top are of natural blued rust-resisting steel, double walled and lined with asbestos. The ends are of cast aluminum, finished in dull black heat resisting enamel. The base is of welded steel channels that form a rigid support for the burner mechanism.



Strong A.C. Mogul lamp.

The optical system comprises an optically corrected elliptical reflector 10¼ inches in diameter. The reflector is protected from damage while striking the arc by an auxiliary dowser, which is automatically lifted when the changeover dowser is opened.

Moving parts are sealed everywhere against the dust and dirt from the arc. Unit construction permits complete dismantling or assembling of the lamp in a few minutes. The Mogul lamp is provided with six ball bearings and a dozen manganese bronze sleeve bearings. The lamp also has an inside inter-connected mirror dowser and changeover dowser system, carbon setter, ammeter, arc imager, ash receiver, spot pre-aligner, automatic pilot and framing light, safety clutch and the Strong electrically balanced arc control system.

The arc control is a separate and independent unit, which is built to appear as an integral part of the lamphouse but may be removed as a complete unit assembly.

An "Inductor," which is an adjustable transformer, is the only equipment required in addition to the lamps. It is used to step the 220-volt line current down to 25 volts for use direct into the arc.

Friend Bob:-

Well it's been better than two months ago that you installed the new A C amplifier on our Largen heads, and having just come from the Electric prompted me to write this letter. I just want to say a few words that the money I spent for this new amplifier is the cheapest money I have ever spent around any show for the returns that it is bringing me, the way business has picked up since the installation it won't be long till I will be doing again as much as I used to in this house. AIN'T THAT SUMPIN?

You know what we have here in the Rivoli so it takes damn good sound to compare, which it does.

Thanks again for selling me this amplifier, I would say you're the loser and I the winner.

Come down and see me sometime.

Yours very truly,

Keeping the Theatre Safe

of some one of the more or less standard fireproofing solutions. Surplus drops, legs and borders should not be left flying above the stage but should be removed. Briefly, permit on the stage only those drops, scenery and props necessary for the current show.

All stage cables should be carefully examined at frequent intervals to detect conditions of excessive wear which might at some time cause a short-circuit. This is especially true of cables extending up to light bridges, light towers, border lights and proscenium side strips or spots.

FIRE EQUIPMENT

Fire fighting equipment, including extinguishers, water buckets and barrels, pike poles, hose, stand pipes, sprinkler equipment and axes, should be examined frequently to insure their proper condition. Be sure that all such equipment is easily accessible at all times, and not covered up by props or scenery.

The stage vent is an important item in the control of any fire backstage. The stage vent should be actually operated at least once each week. One cannot tell whether the vent will work properly by just looking at it.

Every theatre should have an asbestos curtain or some other approved type of fire curtain. All fire curtains should be operated at least twice each day.

Some consideration should be given to fire doors. Fire doors are installed to close up an opening in what otherwise is a fire partition. Therefore, when fire doors are propped open the purpose for which they were installed is being defeated. When fire doors must remain open steps should be taken to install a counterweight system connected to the door by some approved fusible link.

CLEANLINESS

The final and one of the most important precautions against fire backstage is to insist that all accumulations of scenery, props, drapes and other "junk" be removed from the stage proper, gridiron, property rooms, electricians' rooms, space under the stage, and dressing rooms. No accumulation of any such nature should be permitted in any room or space that is not separated from the stage area by a fire wall or other approved type of fire partition.

The stage switchboard should be regularly cleaned and defective parts replaced. The board should be "dead" during the period of such cleaning. The space behind, and the space immediately above, the switchboard should not be obstructed or used for storage, and to be perfectly safe, should be partitioned with wire netting so that nothing can fall behind the board and cause a short-circuit.

A clean stage containing only the necessary equipment for the current show is the greatest protection against possible fire.

GROUP 2: STRUCTURAL DEFECTS

UNDER THE heading of structural defects consideration must be given not only to deteriorated conditions, but to those details which were considered standard practice at the time the theatre was built, and which time and experience have proved unsafe or hazardous in the light of present-day progressive theatre operation.

REPAIRS

Exit doors, panic bolts, exit lights, and fire escapes should be in good repair and should meet present-day requirements. Fire escapes should be carefully inspected at frequent intervals to determine their safe condition. Fire escapes that have become rusty should be brushed with a steel brush and scraped to remove all loose rust, then painted, first with a coat of red lead, and then with a coat of good metal preservative paint of a darker color. During the scraping and painting process careful inspection should be made of all bolts and wall anchors and brackets. Defective conditions discovered should be immediately remedied.

TRAFFIC LANES

Halls, corridors, foyers and passageways should be kept free and clear of all obstacles that tend to block them or that reduce the free exit space below the requirements for the particular locality of the theatre. This applies definitely to foyers. The arrangement of furniture must be considered from the standpoint of permitting free and rapid exit from the auditorium. Any piece of furniture which prevents this should be removed, regardless of its attractive appeal in that location. The placing of furniture such as chairs, small console tables, floor lamps or flower baskets on the landings of stairways creates definite hazard in case of an emergency exodus, and such conditions should not be tolerated by the manager.

GROUPS 3 AND 4: PREVENTING FRIGHT

Fights, the firing of a shot, drawing in smoke from the outside through the ventilating system, fire in adjoining property, or personal articles of patrons falling over the balcony are some of the conditions which fall in Group 3, as unexpected conditions, happenings or circumstances. The only real precaution against such occurrences is a well-trained, observant service staff.

EMPLOYE TRAINING

In order to guard against conditions which might cause patrons fright, remove or minimize all possible causes, through employes trained in what to say, where to go, what duties to perform and to do all these things quickly should any emergency arise that would necessitate emptying the house or that might create a high state of excitement in the audience, is the best protection.

Such training cannot be haphazard and without a definite plan. The drills for fire which should be conducted at least once each month should certainly include instructions to the staff on what to do and how to do it in case of possible panic. Such drills and training are of the utmost importance and should always be supervised by the theatre manager personally. This is entirely too important a function to delegate to an assistant or the chief usher, and any manager who does so delegate this duty is grossly negligent in his responsibility to his employer and to the public.

WRITTEN REPORTS

A careful and accurate record or report should be made to cover each of these monthly training periods, such reports to list by name the employes who were present and also all absent employes. The report should contain (1) notes of the subject discussed, (2) the specific instructions given, and (3) the situations assumed and solved. To some managers this is going to appear as unnecessary detail—that a theatre staff can't be trained to handle a panic. Those theatre managers are reminded that the United States Army trains in peace time for war and up to date the system has proved successful. So the training to handle panic conditions must take place before the panic. Such training is essential, whether the staff of the theatre consists of three or thirty employes, if the manager is to do all in his power to protect and safeguard the patrons of the theatre of which he is responsible.

It is excellent practice for the manager to take a copy of his emergency drill report to the captain of the fire precinct in which the theatre is located and to discuss it in detail with him. From time to time it has been found that a representative of the Fire Department is very willing to attend some of these drills and to talk to the employes about their duties and responsibilities in case of emergency. The advice these fire officials have to give is expert and is in the interests of the theatre itself.

From actual experience it has been learned that such emergency drills should be held on Sunday mornings before opening. The second Sunday of each month, for instance, is established as emergency drill day, then no employe has any excuse for not being present.

After the drill is over is an excellent time for the manager to make the monthly inspection for fire hazards and unsafe conditions.

BOX OFFICE VALUE OF SAFETY

The fifth point in Mr. Roemer's letter is "to impress on the theatre manager the fact that while their loyalty to their employers requires careful consideration of their box office figures, their loyalty to the public, that supports both manager and employers, requires their strict attention to Class One [hazardous conditions] maintenance problems."

This is certainly good advice. When faith is kept with the theatre-going public it usually is reflected in the box office. This statement applies in its broadest sense and its most liberal interpretation. It holds good in planning the show, in the advertising, the service, and in providing a safe theatre where the public can enjoy the entertainment for which they have paid at the box office.

One serious mishandling of an emergency, the loss of a life, or bodily injury of a person in a theatre will react adversely on every theatre, every manager and every owner in the country.

Let's make it smart to operate safe theatres and turn thumbs down on the manager who through laziness, irresponsibility or indifference thinks it's smart to get conditions "fixed" instead of having them properly corrected!

IN THE NEXT ISSUE

Continuing the series, "Constructing Theatre Advertising," the issue of January 13, 1934, will contain five pages of actual examples of layouts, showing the steps in their preparation, how to instruct the newspaper compositor, the adaptation of press book cuts and so on. . . . That issue, the next one of Better Theatres, will also present itemized costs for the construction and equipping of the small modern motion picture theatre.

Christmas Decorating With Light

produced in any other desired shapes, such as flowers, birds, Santa Claus and his reindeers, fireplaces, or other symbolic Christmas figures.

TRANSLUCENT DESIGNS

The appearance of the theatre marquee may be changed to produce a Christmas atmosphere by removing the opal glass attraction letters from the marquee face, and placing over this cardboard with cutout letters and Christmas symbols, covered with lacquered muslin or other appropriate diffusing material to form an attractive translucency, and lighted from behind with colored lamps. Or, if desired, the entire box may be covered with lacquered muslin which has been appropriately decorated. Such translucencies in smaller boxes are particularly appropriate for the interior of the theatre and the lobby.

DECORATING THE INTERIOR

INTERIOR CHRISTMAS displays are generally much more effective if the lighting is made a component part of the display. Such effects are more striking than if the displays are floodlighted, inasmuch as the contrasts created are greater. And less wattage is usually required.

Silhouette effects with lamps concealed behind cutouts are particularly pleasing, and easily obtained. Lamps may be concealed in panels, with cutouts suspended from these. Also, silhouette effects with two or three planes are particularly appropriate for the interior. These have the value of giving the impression of greater depth or of translucency. Although pigment may be applied in poster fashion, it is not essential inasmuch as white surfaces or those of neutral tone provide complete flexibility of light coloration.

Projecting colored shadows on a translucent screen produces a highly desirable effect. This is obtained by concealing light sources, either bare lamps or lamps in reflectors, a few feet behind the screen in such a position as to cast shadows upon it of objects placed in front of the lamps. The arrangement of different colors in the light sources will produce unusual patterns.

The effect of motion may be created by suspending the objects on strings so that they are free to move and thus produce ever-changing silhouette colored shapes.

facade and is entirely in vitrolite and stainless steel, with three circular windows, one of which is for ticket selling. Another window in the lobby serves for selling during inclement weather.

Lobby: The floor is of terrazzo in four colors, laid in broad pattern, with a circle motif in the center. The walls and ceiling are painted and glazed. Lighting is rather unusual and is accomplished by means of a circular plaster cove, which is silver-leafed and illuminated by a chromium-plated trough supported by chromium-plated rings.

Foyer: This room is fully carpeted, the predominating color being red. Lighting here is by means of a plaster trough at each end only, and a chandelier in the ceiling. The walls are painted in four tones of gray; yellow to blue gray; and in irregular horizontal strips of varying widths and tones, but generally darker toward the floor. A circular motif finished in gold and silver leaf and black vitrolite is the center motif upon entering from lobby, and plate glass windows on each side afford a view for "standees" if necessary. An interesting feature is a vitrolite drinking fountain and stainless steel figures on the rest room doors. These cut-outs represent a girl powdering her nose, and a man relaxing in an easy chair.

Auditorium: This is the result of an attempt to design an auditorium for sound, with physical demands and limitations of lighting and acoustics influencing the design to produce a pleasing straightforward solution. The walls are completely covered with two coats of acoustic plaster, except for the base, which is painted a deep red over cement stucco.

The acoustic plaster is colored in three tones of red, becoming lighter toward the ceiling. These bands of color are separated, and the wall is relieved by wood strips painted gold and picked out in black and gold. All wood work is painted in red and gold. The wall curves around to the stage where a reverse circle in painted plaster is separated from the main wall by a vertical light trough. This trough was designed to carry concealed reflectors up from stage to ceiling. This reverse circle is painted with whimsical figures from life in a bright color on a blue ground.

The ceiling consists of five drop (steps), each drop carrying a continuous reflector trough containing 90 colored bulbs in each drop. These drops follow the bottom of the roof truss in a slight curve down to the walls. The front drop, of course, is semi-oval. These drops are painted in a conventional representation of clouds in a golden orange, with brown cloud outlines, and gold and silver stars. At the edge of each drop is a band of triangles.

The walls have two sets of fixtures. Near the ceiling are semi-circular ones with six color changes, and the lower emergency ones have two changes and are 2 feet in diameter, with alternate designs of comedy and tragedy etched on their opal glass faces.

The name Circle is derived from the design, in which circle motifs are used extensively. For example, auditorium fixtures, terrazzo floor, ornament for sign and marquee, etc., all have the circle as their basis. The underside of the marquee is a series of circular troughs for bulbs.

Late Law for Operators of Theatres

of films. At the time the films were delivered to the bus driver he observed that one of the boxes had a defective look thereon which prevented him from securely closing the box. While the films were being transported from one theatre to another the films caught fire and exploded. In deciding the suit the court said:

DECISION

"It appears that the bus driver had actual knowledge of the condition which caused the explosion and fire and with this knowledge accepted the shipment."

WHEN INJUNCTION MAY BE REFUSED

IT IS well known that a preliminary injunction will not be granted by the court to prevent any person or company from performing an intended act, unless it is reasonably certain that the complaining party has no adequate remedy at law.

For instance, in Fraxam Amusement Corporation v. Skouras Theatre Corporation (167 Atl. 672, Newark, N. J.), it was shown that a certain theatre owner filed suit to restrain another motion picture theatre owner from purchasing more films than he could normally display. The complaining theatre operator also requested the court to grant an injunction against the film distributor from selling more films than could be shown. The court said:

"The object of a preliminary injunction is to preserve the subject-matter in controversy, without determining the question of right, and 'it cannot be used for the purpose of taking property out of the possession of one party and putting it into the possession of another.' "

MOUNTAIN HIGHWAYS

THROUGH the highland wildernesses of the southern Appalachians and across the rock-ribbed terrain of the Tennessee Valley, government money and re-employment projects are slicing great vistas of road ribbons, felling their way through the green pines and carving narrow canyons into the red clay crests of the hills in the way. The Machine is eating up the mountain trails ahead and leaving in its wake the speedway of the motor car, invading, and destroying thereby, the last relic of the individualistic frontier life of colonial America.

A hundred horsepower motor comes hissing through the hills with its chimed Klaxons blaring aside wandering mountain cattle, sending a saddle mule and its cursing rider shying off the right-o'-way as a swirl of autumn leaves caught in the speed-draught flutters into the road behind.

This suction of the speeding Machine is pulling the mountain people down the new roads, too, like leaves in the vortex. The cross-roads villages are fading while the mill towns grow, and even the farmers who hold to their side-hill acres are buying second-hand cars with which to commute to their field labors from homes in the towns. The invasion of the highways has thus set tides of movement in motion to urbanize the southern highlanders.

The process is not at all new to America, but it is new to the region. The result is being reflected sharply on the motion picture map of this region, vast in miles even if not in box-office grosses. The tiny store shows of the mountain hamlets are closing, while the theatres of the towns are finding Saturday—"farmers' day"—the most profitable of the week, with an audience which demands only cheaper thrillers, melodramas and "westerns." Here is an audience to which Miss Marie Dressler is just an old lady, Miss Jean Harlow just another blonde and to which the finished performance of a Barrymore would be an annoyance.

The tremendous road-making projects of the NRA and related Administration schemes will in this big section of the country tend to reduce the number of exhibitors and theatres and the while will add to the business of others. It will tend to lower the level of box-office taste and increasingly chain the art of the screen to the proletariat to which the Blue Eagle is delivering the nation.

SINCE the New York Sun has expressed itself on "the rubber or self-cocking dollar," and Mr. Al Smith has discussed "the baloney dollar," may we not suggest "the screen dollar" based on the value of a loge seat with a stipulated content of belly laughs, thrills and wisecracks. Probably it can be worked out by Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, Mr. Eddie Cantor and Professor Moley.

A SPORTING OPPORTUNITY

SOME comment by Mr. Vernon Van Ness in the New York Times reminds us that about 10,000,000 licenses for fishing and hunting were issued in the United States in 1931. It seems that in Iowa, for instance, a license to hunt or fish, or both, is issued to one person in every ten. Here is indicated a field of acute special and enthusiastic interest which receives practically no attention from the motion picture. It seems that when the camera goes afield it sees only Bali, Africa and exotic native sex. The expeditionary picture theme has become "seduction in many lands."

The rod-and-gun audience is a big one and restricted to no region or social stratum. It is still to be sold.

The motion picture industry always essays the exploitation of such fields by spurts. About three years ago Pathé hit on the very successful notion of a football series with the late Mr. Knute Rockne and his Notre Dame braves. The next season saw a flood of "football shorts," mostly of indifferent quality. This season there have been none—but football is still with us and the market is still here.

ASSIGNMENT FOR MR. ROCKEFELLER

NOW that Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has permitted us to hear, in serial installments to the daily press, what he thinks and finds about the liquor problem and prohibition, may we not suggest, having had our interest stirred by recent expressions from and about his great Chase National Bank, that he also favor the American public with an equivalent treatise on what is to be done about bankers and banking. Mr. Rockefeller, one would fairly assume, should know even more about money than he does about liquor, at first hand.

WE permit ourselves an editorial grin over the bleats of the mighty who complain of the paucity of star material, when for the moment we regard for instance the effulgent rise on the screen of Miss Katharine Hepburn. Also the acclaim for Miss Margaret Sullavan is a citation. As this page has so often contended, pictures make stars. It began with Biograph so long ago as the advent of Mr. David Wark Griffith about 1909, and still it is supposed to be a mystery.

AT the current rate of progress in national political and economic affairs there is a prospect that the title "professor" will acquire with the public about the same status that the term "banker" enjoys now in the motion picture industry.

ASKS NEW STUDIES

From Richard H. Paynter, psychologist who recently testified at the Senate racketeering inquiry, comes a suggestion as a result of the controversy over Motion Picture Research Council's charge of film influence on children, at the same inquiry. The suggestion: permit a new group of psychologists to examine the question, the results, in effect to settle the matter. . .

CHAMBERS PASSES

Most important of Robert William Chambers' contributions to the motion picture was "The Common Law," which, one of the innumerable popular novels he turned out in a prolific writing career of 35 years, starred Clara Kimball Young, was highly successful. Last week, in New York, at the age of 68, Robert W. Chambers died. . . .

NEW DIRECTOR

To the board of United Artists Theatre Circuit last week was added Willard V. King, director in several large corporations, at the annual meeting. Officers re-elected for one year: Joseph M. Schenck, chairman and president; Lee Shubert, Dennis F. O'Brien, vice presidents; Harry D. Buckley, vice president and general manager. . . .

THEATRE VICTORY

Canton, Ohio, theatre men scored last week as a two-men-in-a-booth ordinance, sponsored by local projectionists, was tabled indefinitely by the city council. To George Kraska, Loew manager, goes credit for opposition leadership. . .

HERALD DE-CODES THE CODE; CODE AUTHORITY MEETS, PICKS COMMITTEES

Code Authority Starts Duties

The first meeting of the motion picture industry's Code Authority got under way Wednesday afternoon in New York.

The Wednesday meeting was largely routine, according to an official statement released to the trade press immediately upon its close. It dealt specifically with such matters as the creation of various committees and the decision to operate the body under a rotation chairmanship. At each future meeting the group will meet under the chairmanship of a different individual.

Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator, was chairman of Wednesday's meeting, with Harold S. Bareford, counsel to Warner Brothers, acting as temporary secretary.

The first business of the day was the correction of an error in the code: on page 247, in Section IV, the words "Section one" were changed to read "Section two."

Committees' personnel was decided upon as follows:

Permanent Headquarters Committee:

Charles L. O'Reilly, Harry M. Warner and Robert H. Cochrane.

Permanent Secretaryship:

Nicholas M. Schenck, Nathan Yamins and George J. Schaefer.

Committee on Code Authority Rules:

W. Ray Johnston, M. H. Aylesworth and Ed Kuykendall.

Financing Methods for Code Authority:

Sidney R. Kent, Harry M. Warner, Charles L. O'Reilly and Nathan Yamins.

Committee to Acquire Signatures of Assent to Code:

Ed Kuykendall, J. Robert Rubin and Nathan Yamins.

Committee on Recommendations for Appointments to Clearance, Zoning and Grievance Boards:

Sidney R. Kent, W. Ray Jonhston, Charles L. O'Reilly and Nathan Yamins.

A resolution was adopted that the chairman of the next meeting, which will be held January 4, be elected at the end of the pre-

A translation of the complex legal phraseology of the motion picture code into the working language of the industry is being made by Motion Picture Herald. The first article appears in this issue, starting on page 23.

The machinery of the NRA motion picture code finally started to function this week within the industry, with the first meeting of the governing Code Authority held in the Bar Association Building in New York, and the mailing to each company and corporation, firm and association, exhibitor, distributor and producer, of an official blank upon which they will individually signify their assent of compliance, as prescribed by the law. Latest news developments in connection with the Code Authority meeting, and with respect to code activity elsewhere about the country, are reported in the adjoining column.

Even though the motion picture Code Authority and the National Recovery Administration commenced officially to present the code itself to the industry as an instrument for effecting nationwide compliance, conclusive evidence was in hand that there were many phrases moulded from the 14,000 words mentioned in the code, which still were not clearly understood by thousands of exhibitors (and by some distributors and producers and other companies), who do not have at their immediate disposal the knowledge of extensive legal talent to aid them in transferring the complete significance of the code's clauses and provisions from the legal artistry of the code's authors.

And so, in these articles, the code is being written down to a language which will be clear, workable and so organized that all related subjects, regardless of their position in the official draft, will be treated together. A concentration of similar subjects will be the plan, insofar as is practicable.

The translation will be just that. In no way will it attempt to interpret the meaning of any clause of the code, or the meaning of any of its provisions. The Code Authority and the NRA will be the code interpreters, no one else.

For practical purposes, the code will be separated for translation into two distinct parts:

(1) Distribution and Exhibition.
(2) Production.

Distribution and exhibition, being more intimately connected with retailer and consumer, are being discussed first, with the translation in this connection intended to show:

(a) The relation of the motion picture code distributors and exhibitors.

(b) The relation of the code among distributors and among exhibitors.

(c) The significance of the code, and its effect on the actual practices of merchandising.

(d) What the exhibitor and distributor must do to effectuate the labor provisions and the fair competitive provisions of the code.

Specifically, the distribution and exhibition parts of the code, joint discussion of which appears necessary because of their close relation, will be treated in three separate articles, as follows:

(1) Preamble—Being a Translation of the General Application of the Code.
Definitions of the Technical Terms Used in the Code.
Administration of the Code Within the Industry:
(a) Code Authority.
(b) Local Grievance Boards.
(c) Local Clearance and Zoning Boards.
(d) Contract Arbitration Boards.
(e) Labor Arbitration Boards.
(f) General Arbitration Boards.

The subjects of this article are treated in this issue.

(2) Labor:
(a) Exhibition.
(b) Distribution.

These subjects will be taken up in a second article in a subsequent issue.

(3) Trade Practices
Contracts
Clearance and Zoning
General and Miscellaneous.

The subjects of this article will be treated in a latter issue.

The application of the code to production will be taken up in subsequent issues.

BOARDS EXPECTED TO START SOON

ceding meeting. Sidney R. Kent was named. It was not definitely designated where the Code Authority will meet next.

Mr. Rosenblatt refused to comment on the position of Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, a Government representative, with respect to the Code Authority. Dr. Lowell, who did not attend the meeting, has been rumored as considering his resignation from the body. Mr. Rosenblatt declared the matter was "now in the hands of General Hugh S. Johnson."

Those who attended Wednesday's session were: Messrs. O'Reilly, Schenck, Rubin, Cochrane, Warner, Rosenblatt, Johnston, Aylesworth, Schaefer, W. C. Michel alternating for Mr. Kent, and Yamins, Kuykendall, Bareford and Eddie Cantor.

Mr. Rosenblatt left for Washington following the meeting and Mr. Kuykendall returned to Columbus, Miss..

Labor and Consumer Advisors Seen

Possibility that Government representation on Code Authority might consist of one Recovery Administration representative and two "advisors" representing, respectively, labor and consumers, were seen in proposals laid this week before President Roosevelt by General Hugh S. Johnson, Administrator. Under the Johnson plan, while preserving the powers of the administration representatives, the proposed labor and consumers advisors could make recommendations.

The administration's members of approved codes are appointed for six months to one year, the terms overlapping. At least one member is to have a background of experience in the industry but no present interest. These members, "carefully avoiding the fact or appearance of dictation or coercion," will function as "co-workers in an undertaking of public interest, concerned only in the faithful administration of the codes."

Summarized, their chief duties are:

1. Refer with recommendations subject to review and/or the approval of the Administrator.
2. Recommend other matters important to the welfare of the industry, or to the public interest, or to the consumers or employees.
3. Through the Code Authority obtain complete assent to and compliance with all provisions of the code by each unit.
4. Assist the Code Authority in preparation of recommendations for necessary interpretations, modifications, and additions to the code.
5. Warn and guard against threatened deviations from the code and see that it does not permit or promote monopolies nor tend to eliminate or oppress small enterprises.
6. Advise the Code Authority in seeing that its affairs are handled in a cooperative and fair manner with respect to all units.
7. Assure that the industrial members of the Code Authority are representative of the entire industry and elected fairly.

A federal system to assist trade boards in adjusting complaints of code violations is being organized; 26 district compliance directors already have been named and these will be supplemented by at least 48 state directors. Each state will have an adjustment board working with the director.

In the motion picture industry such complaints could originate only where local grievance or clearance and zoning boards are not in operation at the time of the alleged violation, or in localities where the headquarters of the state or district boards are more convenient to the complainant.

It was anticipated in New York this week that immediately following the Code Authority's first meeting steps would be taken to fill the 64 boards and the committees under them. Many nominations already have been received for the more than 400 positions.

It was reported that major company representatives proposed to the meeting Wednesday a rigid personal inspection of all persons proposed for the personnel of all such boards.

If reports concerning the resignation of Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, one of the Government's two representatives already appointed, are borne out, it is expected the administration will have to make two choices instead of one. If Dr. Lowell resigns and the third appointee is not named—and report had it that this appointee might be a woman prominently identified with government affairs—Sol A. Rosenblatt would be the only Government agent serving on the Code Authority.

Representing the industry on the body, each with one vote, are Sidney R. Kent, who was unable to return to New York from Hollywood in time for the meeting Wednesday; Nicholas M. Schenck, M. H. Aylesworth, Robert H. Cochrane, Harry M. Warner, George J. Schaefer, Ed Kuykendall, Nathan Yamins, W. Ray Johnston and Charles L. O'Reilly. The Government representatives have no voting power.

New Division Established

A new division was established this week to deal with amusement codes and Mr. Rosenblatt was named as division administrator. Under this change, it is expected that William P. Farnsworth, now assistant deputy administrator, will be advanced to deputy administrator.

The post of secretary of the Code Authority—a governmental post—also was up for unofficial discussion. Reports indicated that John C. Flinn, who is handling special exploitation for Paramount, was favored by large major companies.

Public hearings on the theatrical poster code will be held January 3, under A. D. Whiteside, division administrator. The code provides for a maximum week of 40 hours and an eight-hour day, with minimum wages of $14.50 to $15 a week for general employees and 40 cents an hour for mechanical workers.

Poli Circuit Reorganized; Blumenthal Is President

Poli-New England Theatres last week announced the completion of its reorganization plans, and with A. C. Blumenthal as president, Sylvester Z. Poli, treasurer, and Louis M. Sagal as assistant treasurer and executive assistant, the company is now in full charge of Mr. Poli, who is operating the 22 houses with Mr. Sagal.

Mr. Blumenthal has participated in various financial enterprises connected with motion picture theatres and is equally well known in New York as a legitimate producer.

The current policy of the Poli-New England group will be continued for about a month, after which localized operation will be set up.

Exhibitors Meet on Accepting Code

While the industry was awaiting developments from the first meeting of the Code Authority, exhibitors and others were meeting on the code, as follows:

BALTIMORE:—The MPTO of Maryland approved the code.

CHICAGO:—Eighty-three Illinois independents organized a downstate division of Allied to "fight the evils of unfair practice."

CLEVELAND:—Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association invited all independents to a code discussion Thursday.

DENVER:—Rocky Mountain Theatre Owners elected committee including President Harry Huffman to recommend changes to the Code Authority.

GRAND RAPIDS:—National Managing Committee of Allied outlined an "entirely different policy to govern future action" as Abram F. Myers hinted Allied will test code's validity in the courts.

HOLLYWOOD:—Pat Casey, chairman of the producers' labor committee, explainted the code to studio managers. Independent Producers' Association plans code protest this week.

KANSAS CITY:—Independent exhibitors hope for a court test of NRA powers in the film code.

MINNEAPOLIS:—W. A. Steffes announced at Allied meeting he personally will sign code under protest. He advised exhibitors to make liberal use of cancellation rights to cut off high-priced pictures from blocks.

NEW ORLEANS:—Independent exhibitors declare that if present clearance and downtown prices are maintained they must be permitted to continue giving premiums.

NEW YORK:—Exchange personnel met with Louis Nizer to hear his analysis. Federation of the Motion Picture Industry expected to sign.

PORTLAND, ORE.:—Oregon Motion Picture Club voted to accept.

ST. LOUIS:—MPTO of Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois approved code.

TRENTON, N. J.:—Abram Myers analyzed code for Allied of New Jersey members.

WILMINGTON:—Code was expected to be signed Thursday, individually or collectively, by Independent MPTO of Delaware and Eastern Shore of Maryland.

Texas Rolls Her Own; That Goes In the Theatre Too, Says Ramsaye

All it wants is some film in the can and it will do the rest

BY TERRY RAMSAYE

Written at Dallas in Texas

TEXAS, once an independent republic, is still considerably that sort of a country, if one were to map it in a motion picture atlas.

All that Texas wants out of New York and Hollywood is some film in the can. After that the rest of the business will be done down here. The attitude of the Texas exhibitor is a magnificent and forceful reiteration of the "States' Rights" doctrine of the old South.

Texas, land of cattle, cotton and oil, will listen with courtesy, but if you are looking for the capital of the country, if you want to do something about anything in Texas you will have to come down here and do it, probably at Dallas. Where McTavish sits is the head of the table in this country.

As all the motion picture world knows, there was the typical chain theatre invasion of Texas along with the wave of distributor ownership of theatres that swept the nation. Now what we have euphemistically called "decentralization" in New York has largely turned the amusement business of Texas back to Texas. We are rather used to the fact that the land west of the Rockies is another nation, and that New York is a world city which merely sits on the edge of a continent, but presently we must come to know that Texas is neither "South" nor "West." It is just Texas, so magnificently extensive and so rich in its own tradition that it can and does afford to be a world unto itself.

As the dust of readjustment settles, one discovers Texas motion picture business rather well classified, organized, regimented and ticketed. Three major groups of interests controlling and operating some five circuits are substantially the amusement business of the state. Outside of these circuits there is of course a considerable array of exhibitors in lesser towns, and all of them are most exceedingly independent,

EAST TEXAS AND JEFFERSON HAVE 14 TOWNS, 30 THEATRES

With Mr. Joe Clemmons as president and Mr. Sol Gordon as the very articulate chairman of the board, East Texas Theatres and the Jefferson Amusement Company, with offices in both Beaumont and Dallas, control some fourteen towns and about thirty theatres. Of approximately equal weight are the Robb & Rowley theatres, with Mr. H. B. Robb and Mr. E. H. Rowley.

Conspicuous in the Texas scene stands the tall, slender, white-haired Karl Hoblitzelle, and at his right hand, R. J. O'Donnell, sharp featured, firm and familiar with the vernacular and personnel of Broadway.

When the editor of Motion Picture Herald left Memphis-on-the-Mississippi a week ago, he set the sights on his road maps for the great Southwest, on his explorations westward toward Hollywood and various other points Pacific-coastward. Now we find him at Dallas in Texas, whence the observations herewith.

A while back Mr. Hoblitzelle sold his theatres, built up from a start in the nickelodeon dawn of 1905, to RKO, and Mr. O'Donnell meanwhile spent two years with Publix. Now they are busy sorting out the fruits of "decentralization" and the turnback into two divisions, both of them Hoblitzelle organizations under a single management. Now shaping up is the Interstate Circuit which will presently be found to include the Hoblitzelle theatres of Dallas, the onetime RKO theatres of Fort Worth, and the Paramount-Publix theatres of San Antonio, Galveston and Austin. Then their Texas Consolidated Theatres, Inc., will take in the one-time Dent theatres, later known as the Paschall-Dent theatres. This means a total of some ninety-six houses.

"We are having a decentralization movement of our own," Mr. Hoblitzelle observed in a discussion of the new alignments. "While our central office is in Dallas and we do the booking here, no manager is being expected to accept a booking or a schedule that he does not want. The manager is supposed and expected to know his town better than we do and to operate his show as a local enterprise.

"The motion picture theatre can properly be and should be quite as much of a local institution as the local newspaper. The theatre should be just as closely knit into the community. The newspaper is put on your doorstep every morning or evening, but the people come to the theatre and in that sense it is just that much more intimate."

Mr. Hoblitzelle has strong feelings with respect to the social and moral status of the motion picture. He recalled some of the earlier days of the screen theatre when he found to his dismay that political bosses classified the motion picture with the saloon, in their requests for contributions.

"I asked then what there was about our business and what we were doing that put us in that category," Mr. Hoblitzelle observed. "It is never good business, if we must put it on that basis, to be in a position of offering defense and alibis.

"Just now, in the face of the current trend, one can hardly measure the value to the business of such a picture as 'Little Women.' It would of course be a mistake to let it keynote a flood of similar product, but it serves to show to the producers something about the public taste that should be instructively valuable."

Mr. Hoblitzelle is very much a home-ruler for the amusement business in Texas. In this connection, Mr. O'Donnell took occasion to remark that their ninety-and-odd managers are to be assembled in convention in Dallas January 10 to 15th, to hear about the season's forthcoming product.

PREPARED TO DO MORE THAN EXPERIMENT WITH VAUDEVILLE

No final declaration of policy concerning vaudeville is to be had from the Hoblitzelle headquarters just now but there is evidence enough that they are prepared to do more than casual experimentation with it. In this phase of the enterprise Mr. O'Donnell is likely to be found more especially active.

It may be remarked in passing that with the code and the stage hand requirements of the roadshow situation it looks very much at this time as though the speaking stage presentations in this region are likely to be largely chargeable to good will and public service.

The most immediate effect of the NRA program in Dallas has been to excite the used motor car market. The negro population, raised to pay scales beyond dreams and hopes, is now going in for motoring in a big way. The streets are boiling alive with roaring antiques and poor indeed is the cook who is not delivered to the job in a vintaged Packard.

The motion picture community of Dallas meets at "Pete's place" at Hardwood and Jackson for luncheon, and an hour spent there at mid-day is likely to overtake most of the personalities of film row. I have to set down in the record a pleasant session there with Mr. W. E. Calloway, so long with First National, Pathe and RKO hereabout as district manager, and Mr. Claud Ezell, who, now operating an independent exchange, is verily a personage of motion picture history, having started his career of the screen with the Miles Brothers, the inventors of the exchange system.

FILM DELIVERY FIRMS LAUNCH ASSOCIATION

Committee Taking Steps to Ask for Own Code; Companies Serving 6,500 Theatres Represented; J. P. Clark, President

Film delivery service representatives from all key cities met in New York this week in an effort to obtain unity in this industry branch. As a first step they organized the National Film Carriers, Inc., naming James P. Clark of the Horlacher Delivery Service, Philadelphia, as president and treasurer.

The film delivery truck services in all key cities constitute one of the most important branches in the industry, in that the responsibility for transportation of the bulk of screened film rests in their hands. Practically 75 per cent of all film deliveries in the country are handled by these services, the remainder being by railway express and air services.

Companies Serve 6,500 Theatres

At the New York meetings the companies represented serve 6,500 theatres and own and operate 575 trucks. Permanent headquarters are to be maintained in New York, at the office of Clinton Weyer, 110 William street.

Announcement that the film truck services of the country had decided upon a united front was made Tuesday following a series of conferences behind closed doors. It was also announced that the group plans to petition the National Recovery Administration for a separate code of fair competition for the film delivery business. At present they come under the trucking code.

"The trucking code," said Clinton Weyer, film insurance man who was chosen as secretary of the new organization, "is not applicable to this specialized line. We intend to take immediate action in an attempt to obtain recognition under a code of our own." A committee of three was appointed.

Officers Elected

Officers of the organization were named as follows:

JAMES P. CLARK, Horlacher Delivery Service, Philadelphia, president and treasurer; H. O. ROBINSON, Film Truck Service, Detroit and Chicago, vice-president; CLINTON WEYER, widely known in the film insurance business, secretary.

The board of managers will consist of E. E. JAMIESON, Exhibitors' Film Delivery and Service Co., Kansas City; T. W. GILBOY, Gilboy Co., San Francisco; L. M. MILLER, Electric Delivery System, New Orleans; M. H. BRANDON, Inter-Carolina Delivery Service, Charlotte, N. C.; CHARLES E. MCCARTHY, Film Transfer Co., Minneapolis; F. E. SMITH, Smith Film Service, Inc., Syracuse; R. C. JONES, Chicago, and H. DECKER, Film Exchange Transfer Co., Boston.

An executive committee consisting of the following was chosen: L. C. GROSS, Gross and Johnson, Cleveland; JOHN VICKERS, Carolina Delivery Service Co., Charlotte; GEORGE F. CALLAHAN, Exhibitors' Service Co., Pittsburgh, and H. O. ROBINSON, Film Truck Service, Detroit and Chicago.

Others at the meeting were E. S. JOHNSON, Gross and Johnson, Cleveland; J. BRADLEY, Film Pick-Up Service, Minneapolis; P. F. TALCOTT, Theatre Service Co., Minneapolis; S. B. BONELLO, Film Express Service, Minneapolis; C. W. TRAMPE, Film Service, Inc., Milwaukee; BEN KOENIG, Milwaukee; ALFRED SICKLES, Milwaukee; H. H. HOWELL Trucking Service, Inc., Rochester; G. C. BLACKMAN, Syracuse; A. P. SIEGEL, Siegel Trucking Co., Inc., Albany; Northwest Film Delivery Co., Seattle; P. L. TANNER, Film Transit Co., Cleveland; I. ALBRIGHT, Theatre Transport Co., Toledo; H. B. SOLOMON, Cleveland; L. WALZ, Interstate Film Service, Minneapolis; C. W. JENSEN, Middle West Film Express, Minneapolis; HARRY KAHAN, Kahn Delivery Service, St. Louis, and M. ADELMAN, New Jersey Messenger Service, Philadelphia.

The purpose of the National Film Carriers, Inc., according to Mr. Weyer, is to permit an exchange of ideas between members of the industry and make possible a uniform standard of operation.

Cleveland Group Hits Local Circuits

Charges that a group of independent circuits in Cleveland has brought about an "unbearable situation" which, unless immediately remedied, might be responsible for the closing of numerous independent suburban theatres, were revealed at meetings of independent exhibitors held last Thursday and Friday in Cleveland. A complaint, addressed to Sol A. Rosenblatt, deputy administrator for amusements, was prepared for consideration by the local grievance board.

Blame for the Cleveland situation by the complainant exhibitors was placed at the door of local independent circuits despite the fact that all of the theatres, as well as the independent circuits, are members of the Cleveland Exhibitors Association.

"The records of the Cleveland Association will show that a resolution was adopted which provided that the independent circuit members of this organization would clear sufficient product for the use of our group, provided we would raise our admission prices, which we did," said D. L. Schumann at the meeting last week. "The local independent circuits not only failed to clear any product, as resolved, but reduced their admission prices in the nearest competitive theatre."

Mr. Schumann further declared that he and his fellow independents "now understand why certain interests were so determined in their stand against the code," and that his group was equally determined to "get a square deal" for their theatres in the future.

Kentucky Club Women Plan Better Films Group

Club women of Kentucky, from Louisville, as a center, are undertaking a Better Films movement, which is said to have no bearing on censorship. The movement is designed to be wholly educational, bringing the public, especially parents, to take more interest in the types of films children and young people see.

ROUND TABLE HAS YULE PARTY

Some 300 or 400 members of the Managers' Round Table Club of Motion Picture Herald will gather Thursday night at the Brass Rail in New York for the regular Christmas "get-together" of the club's members in New York and vicinity.

Chairman A-Mike Vogel promised the lads some real entertainment, with Eddie Cantor heading an imposing list of stage and radio stars who have promised to attend. Lew Preston, chairman of the entertainment committee, has arranged for the appearance of his Academy of Music orchestra. In addition to members and their friends, invitations were sent to Will White and George Skouras; W. R. Ferguson, Mort Blumenstock, Sam Rinzler, Lou Frisch, S. Charles Einfeld and R. M. Gillham.

Round Tablers in and around Washington, D. C., are scheduled to gather in the Capital City on January 20 for their own local party.

Court Overrules Maryland Censors

The Maryland State Censorship Board received a severe set-back when, in Baltimore city court, Chief Justice Samuel K. Dennis upset the censors' rejection of "Blood Money," a Twentieth Century Productions feature, by saying that, in his opinion, the censors had a complete misconception of the purpose of the picture as well as possible effects. The board had proposed a comlete ban on the film throughout the state on the grounds that it tended to "incite to crime."

"I believe the censor board has totally mistaken the object and effect of the picture," Judge Dennis said last week. "On the other hand, if the picture had been let alone, it would soon have censored itself and passed out of circulation by way of box office receipts. From the standpoint of public morals, there appears to be no objection to the picture on salacious grounds. It is a typical blood-tears-and-thunder melodrama, and that's about all."

Unable to appeal to a higher court the censors abandoned all action against "Blood Money" and announced the picture could be exhibited without a change.

"We would appeal if we could but we cannot," said Bernard B. Gough, chairman of the board, this week.

The complaint was that the film, with its story of a racketeer who controlled the administration of justice in the city in which he operated, tended to implant criminal ideas.

Word also came last week that the Maryland censors had instituted a similar action against the Columbia Pictures news film, "What Price Speed?" made up from newsreel clips.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

RETURNS TO FORMER "BOSS." Mary Pickford, as she called on Adolph Zukor, who starred her in an earlier day. Now Miss Pickford renews the association, with a personal appearance at the New York Paramount, on the current bill with "Alice in Wonderland." Incidentally she is in search of play or film material.

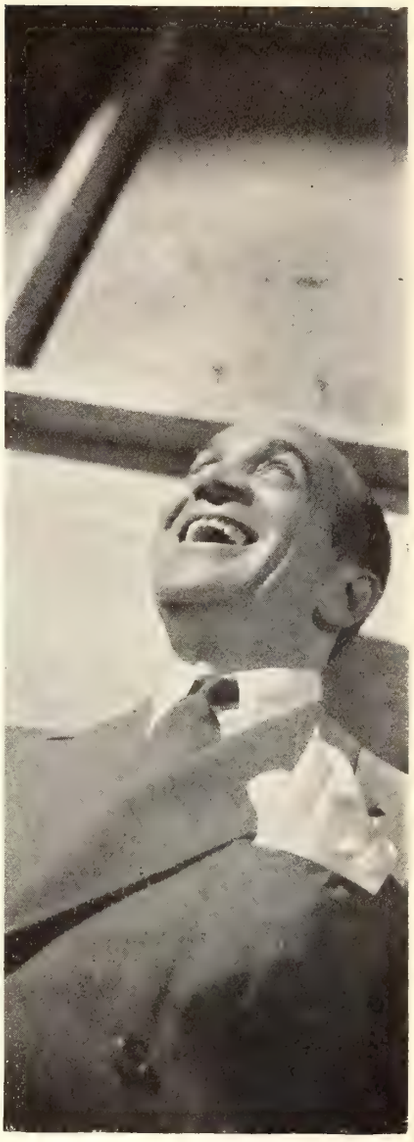
THROUGH A GRILLE. At Palm Springs, where the camera thus found Richard Barthelmess, Warner-First National star, during his vacationing there after "Massacre," his latest.

FROM ENGLAND. But American-born is Ann Robinson. And after a number of years on the British stage and in pictures she has returned for the purpose of appearing in films of her native country.

PREPARING FOR FILM EDITION OF THE "SCANDALS." George White, originator, producer and proprietor, as it were, of the "Scandals," trying out candidates for the chorus of the Fox production which is to bring that revue, once an annual stage festival, to the screen. A total of 150 girls are reported to have been given try-outs for parts.

IN MUSICAL. (Above) Contributing a dash of Latin color and temperament to a former stage success, Dolores Del Rio will appear thus in First National's "Wonder Bar."

SCHEDULED FOR AMERICA. Madeleine Carroll, Gaumont-British star, who is expected at Movietone City under an agreement recently arranged between G-B and Fox. She is the star of "I Was a Spy," which is to be released soon by Fox.



HUMOROUS ANGLE. From which we observe Al Jolson in an enthusiastic moment at the Warner-First National studio, where he is starring in "Wonder Bar," former stage play.

VERSATILE. (Below) Chico Marx, currently in Paramount's "Duck Soup," shown in New York bridge tournament, with Mel Alexander, Lee Langdon and Harry Raffel.

IN CROONER ROLE. And well adapted for it, since he is Russ Columbo himself. For him Universal is now preparing "The Love Life of a Crooner."

UNIONIZING OF THEATRE WORKERS UNDERWAY; LOCALS IN FIVE KEYS

Movement Includes Janitors, Ushers, Ticket Takers, Doormen, Scrubwomen and Many Others; Would Boost Pay

Organizing of motion picture theatre employees in the lesser classifications to form union locals for their "protection" is proceeding rapidly throughout the country, and exhibitors generally are facing the prospect of increased overhead.

The Building Service Employees Union, now operating locals in five key cities, is drafting a program for complete unification and systematization of every classification of theatre labor not already organized. This includes janitors, ushers, ticket takers, doormen, scrubwomen and ticket sellers. Already the union has made appreciable headway in Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis and Seattle. In New York its local 118 has set a membership quota of 20,000, which, a spokesman said this week, it hopes to accomplish within the next six weeks.

In some situations janitors are receiving, under the new union regulations, as much as $40 weekly. In New York ushers in some instances are receiving $4 and $5 daily.

What the Code Says

Under motion picture code specifications pertaining to theatre labor under Part 1, Sections 3, 4 and 5 of Article IV, the following provisions are made:

Sec. 3: With respect to employees regularly employed as ticket sellers, doormen, ushers, cleaners, matrons, watchmen, attendants, porters and office help, such employees shall not receive less than a twenty per cent (20%) increase over the wage paid to them as of August 1, 1933, in cities and places having a population of less than 15,000, provided this shall not require a wage for these employees in excess of twenty-five (25) cents per hour.

Sec. 4: With respect to employees regularly employed as ticket sellers, doormen, cleaners, matrons, watchmen, attendants, porters and office help, such employees shall not receive less than thirty (30) cents per hour in cities and places having a population of more than 15,000 and less than 500,000, and not less than thirty-five (35) cents per hour in cities and towns having a population of more than 500,000.

Sec. 5: With respect to employees regularly employed as ushers, in cities and places having a population over 15,000, such employees shall receive a wage of not less than twenty-five (25) cents per hour.

Seek Higher Scales

On the basis of a 40-hour week, the aforementioned minimum wage scales provide for a high salary from any one of these classifications of $14 weekly—a far cry from $40.

It is said that the application of the code's minimum wage and maximum hour provisions to non-union theatre employees may present the first arbitration problem under the code in many situations, inasmuch as the code provides that any theatre employees not provided for in other sections of the labor provisions must be paid a minimum of 40 cents per hour.

Some unorganized classes of employees, however, have petitioned for higher scales, more nearly corresponding to organized labor scales in effect last August. Most exhibitors in such situations are maintaining the 40-cent minimum until formal complaints have been made and a ruling results from an arbitration board.

In Chicago, theatres already are said to be feeling the pressure of unionization of these theatre classifications. Present indications in Chicago are that unionization in every branch of exhibition will be accomplished 100 per cent before many weeks have passed. The Chicago local of the BSEU is understood to be demanding not only wage increase for ushers, but one usher on every aisle, regardless of the capacity of a theatre. Theatres operating matinees will be required to use two shifts, according to code specifications.

When the question of ushers' salaries came up at the public code hearing at Washington last September, several Southern exhibitors appeared more than slightly perturbed over the prospect of increasing the pay of these groups, and suggested they might "get around" this by "paying them in passes."

Late in November Jack Miller, chairman of the National Code Committee on Theatre Labor, issued a warning to employers when he said:

"There is only one way to beat this labor thing and that is for employers to organize as strongly as employees. If you don't want to pay ushers $25 a week, doormen $35, and cashiers $25, you'd better wake up, and if you don't, that's what you're going to get!"

Mr. Miller declared the drift toward unionization of these hitherto unorganized employees was indicated by the fact that 1,700 new unions, of which BSEU is one, had joined the American Federation of Labor since establishment of the NRA.

Thus far it has been impossible to obtain any accurate data in respect to the BSEU's proposed wage scales for lower bracket theatre employees. While it follows that janitors, because of their responsibilities, may be expected to receive the highest wages of all, the other classifications undoubtedly will benefit by unprecedented wage increases.

Jerry Horan, international president, could not be reached for a statement this week, but Charles C. Levy, secretary and treasurer of the New York local, said the aim was to unionize all theatre employees in every classification of motion picture theatre throughout the country, including neighborhood houses and subsequent runs.

At the present time, he said, the organization is directing its efforts toward de luxe and first run houses, and cited the New York situation, where the Music Hall, Roxy, Paramount and Capitol theatre employees have been unionized 100 per cent.

"It is not feasible at this time to make public any proposed wage schedules for these employees," Mr. Levy said. "As a matter of fact we are leaving that largely in the hands of local bodies. Our chief concern will be the enforcement of these scales."

Circuits Hint Replacements

Circuit executives and theatre operators in New York last week evidenced little concern over the existence of the new union. Their attitude appeared to be that the BSEU's membership embraces unskilled labor only, and that with millions still unemployed all over the country, no difficulty would be encountered in replacing the union's membership.

In connection with this situation, in New York circuit court recently Judge Ben Terte ruled that an exhibitor has "a perfect right to carry on his business without hiring employees for duties which he can perform himself." Judge Terte's decisive comment came as the result of a hearing on an order to restrain an operators' union from molesting a neighborhood theatre because the exhibitor had refused to hire union men.

In St. Louis the union's announcement that ushers had formed a local and would demand recognition from managers of first and subsequent run theatres was received with perfect equanimity. One report was circulated that a strike was to be called at two first runs because ushers were alleged to have been discharged for joining the union but no action occurred. The theatres there have not decided what course they will pursue relative to the new organization. Ushers are considered more or less a necessity at first run theatres, but if too steep demands are made by the local, it is considered probable that many neighborhood houses will decide to drop ushers entirely. Thomas W. Allen is president of the St. Louis local, and other officers include Rolla Denness, vice-president; William Roch, treasurer; Edward J. Burke, secretary.

The BSEU is busy in San Francisco unionizing theatre employees. Among reported demands to be made will be an eight-hour day, a minimum $21 wage and one day off in seven.

Seattle was one of the first large cities in the country to organize non-union theatre labor, acting several weeks ago to accomplish this. Reports from the international's New York headquarters indicated that unionization in Seattle is now completed.

UNION STATUS IN FIVE KEY CITIES

CHICAGO: Unionizing is growing rapidly. Local demands not only higher pay for ushers but also one usher in each aisle.

NEW YORK: Local sets goal of 20,000 members in five weeks.

ST. LOUIS: Local is fully organized as to officers. Threatened strike at two first-runs on report that ushers were discharged for joining union.

SAN FRANCISCO: Reported demands of San Francisco local are eight-hour day, minimum $21 pay and one day off each week, in all classifications.

SEATTLE: Unionizing is completed.

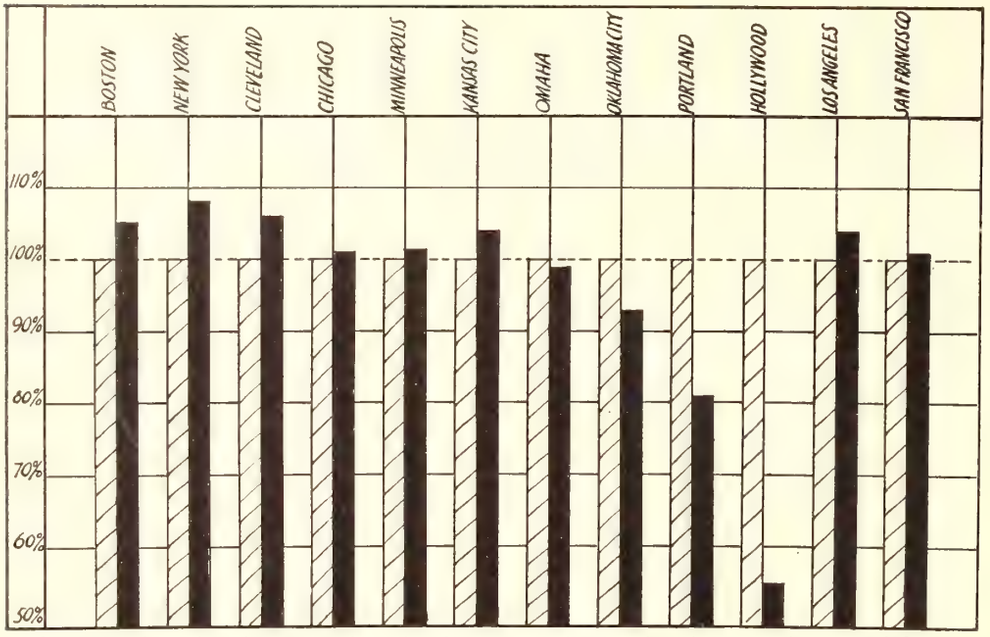
Headway Noted in Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, Seattle; New York Local Sets Goal of 20,00 Members in 5 Weeks



Business done by theatres of twelve key cities during the three-weeks period from November 25 to December 9, 1933, is compared with the gross receipts for the previous three weeks, November 4 to November 18, in the graph, based upon Motion Picture Herald's weekly compilation of theatre intake. The black column represents the gross for the more recent period, while the white column indicates the gross for the earlier three weeks. The cities are Boston, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Omaha, Oklahoma City, Portland, Ore., Hollywood, Los Angeles, San Francisco.

SHEEHAN AGAIN HEAD OF FOX PRODUCTION

Kent's Instructions Vesting Complete Power of Story Selection in Sheehan Construed to Mean Return to Full Authority

S. R. Kent, Fox Film president, before leaving Hollywood Wednesday night to spend the Christmas holidays in the East with his family, is understood to have informed all producers on the lot that complete power of story selection from this point on will be vested in Winfield Sheehan. The order is construed as indicating Mr. Sheehan is again back in the saddle as the head of production at the Fox plant.

Mr. Sheehan's return to his former status, it is learned, will not affect the right of associate producers to determine what vehicles they want to produce, but his position as last word on what shall or shall not be made definitely indicates complete production activity will clear over his desk once again.

The centralization of authority in Mr. Sheehan may have a bearing on the three important musicals which currently are on the Fox schedule in view of general Hollywood opinoin that this cycle already has been well covered and exploited. The proposed musicals are "Fox Movietone Follies," "George White's Scandals" and "Bottoms Up," which Buddy DeSylva is slated to produce. Of late Mr. Sheehan has been confining his activities to production of a limited number of the more important releases on the studio schedule.

A return to "clean stories with wholesome humor" is on the way, Mr. Sheehan declared this week.

"I believe we are going to return to an era of honest stories dealing with human emotions and interests," said the Fox production executive. "Above all, clean stories with wholesome humor will find favor with the public. The cynical, sophisticated screen play, whose characters are unreal, synthetic sinners, is passe. The public's taste turns to the real problems and actual struggles of regular people who live clean lives."

Mr. Sheehan declared that "it is the great mission of motion pictures to take the lead in this campaign," and added: "Literature and the stage have given themselves over to decadence; the screen must begin the renaissance in clean entertainment for the whole family.

"Optimism, comedy and wit is called for because of the world's political unrest."

Union Members Win Writ Against Empire State

Justice Isidor Wasservogel, of the New York supreme court, last week signed an order temporarily enjoining the Empire State Motion Picture Operators' Union from interfering with Charles Danzinger and 11 other union members in their present employment, pending an action now before the court.

Mr. Danzinger said in his petition that the union was insolvent and complained that assessments levied on members to give the union the appearance of good financial standing were illegal.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

FORTY-eight hours before Edwin C. Hill mentioned it on the radio the other night, we learned from Al (Eagle-Eye) Finestone, of Kansas City, that Charles Kalstrup, a farmer living near Clyde, Missouri, holds the unusual record in these United States of having attended more funerals of celebrities than any other person in the country, excepting, of course, the undertakers, who are professionals.

Following his strange, even morbid, hobby for some 37 years, Mr. Kalstrup has left his farm 300 times to attend the last rites of the great, near great and would-be great, from California to Maine, from border to border.

He was at the funerals of Presidents Wilson, Harding and Coolidge, and attended those of everyone rating front-page space.

"One of the most interesting of the funerals I have traveled far to attend was that of Rudolph Valentino," said Mr. Kalstrup. "A lover of art couldn't help but appreciate it."

The funeral of the Sheik Valentino, at Campbell's, on Broadway at Lincoln Square in New York, was our first assignment from the late Editor Joseph (Danny) Dannenberg, when we were on the staff of Wid's Daily, some thirteen years ago. Our observation at that time was that a lover of mob (not art) rule couldn't help but appreciate it.

When Mr. Joseph (U. A.) Just before the fillies trot to the turf, a chariot race will be staged, even as there is one in the picture. What's more, the very chariots used in the picture will be in the Agua Caliente race, in the best Roman tradition. The winnah is to be crowned with garlands. The loser will be crowned, too.

Mr. Schenck has set the closing date of Agua Caliente as March 28, when he will run a special $25,000 handicap.

MR. W. RAY JOHNSTON, president of Monogram Pictures, raises a technical point in connection with Section 3 of the production labor provisions of the new NRA motion picture code. This part relates to "extra" players, and says that each one is to receive $7.50 per day, except when such extra player is requested to play a bit with some essential dialogue, and then, he shall not be deemed an extra, but shall automatically become a "bit" player, and the minimum compensation for bit players shall not be less than $25 per day.

"Why," asks Mr. Johnston, "can't we substitute deaf and dumb signs for minor dialogue ordinarily spoken by extras?"

A knowing wink of the right eye should be sufficient to tell that Sergeant Burke, of the Mounties, heard the command: "Bring him in, men, dead or alive." Extras might salute to indicate that they understand, so no dialogue is needed. This would help keep production costs down, saving $17.50. A mere nod of the head, replacing the verbal "yes," would save another $17.50. Imagine the savings on nods on a DeMille production alone.

They tell us that since Pearl faded from the screen and the "Perils of Pauline," her life has been predominantly continental, traveling with the creme de la creme from Paris to Deauville, to Biarritz, to the Riviera.

The mind staggers when it recalls all the precipices she was hurled from, all the forest fires and burning buildings in which she was trapped, all the oceans into which she plunged, all the villains from whose dastardly embrace she was extricated. FILM TRUST MOVE BY GOVERNMENT IS SEEN

Proposal for Federal Regulated Monopoly of Communications Would Be Extended If Successful, Washington Believes

By FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Bureau

Revolutionary changes in the motion picture and other industries within the next few years are forecast as the eventual outcome of plans now before President Roosevelt suggesting establishment of monopolies in the radio and wire communication fields under the strictest kind of Government regulation, as an alternative for Government ownership or the present lack of a permanent Government policy.

Although the suggestions now before the President provide only for the cartelization of the communications industry, observers in Washington see in them and in other recent developments a leaning on the part of the Administration toward the formation of "trusts" throughout all American industry.

Definite Program Seen Soon

Within the next week or ten days it is expected that a definite program will be developed, including such legislation as may be required from Congress in the session which begins January 3.

Coming almost on the heels of the Administration's plan for coordination of railroads and in view of statements by Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson that eventually the codification program will demand control of production, it is pointed out that the interdepartmental committee report on communications, submitted to the President by Secretary of Commerce Roper, chairman ex officio, outlines as an alternative for the present lack of definite policy the formation of monopolies under strict Government regulation or the creation of Government monopolies.

Any program undertaken by the Government with respect to communications will be confined to that field alone and will not extend into the field of motion pictures or broadcasting. To this extent, the communication operations of the Radio Corporation of America and the American Telephone and Telegraph Company—both of which have broad interests in the film and broadcasting industries—will be segregated from all other activities.

However, it is generally conceded successful development of monopolies in the communications industry would be followed by the building up of cartels in other industries.

If any program of this nature is contemplated, it is pointed out, one important step already has been taken through the adoption of codes, under which the separate units of each industry have been regimented. Another step is seen in the announced intention of the Recovery Administration to proceed next year with a plan to reduce the number of codes by placing all branches of each industry under a "master" code, with such supplemental provisions as might be required to meet the individual conditions of a particular branch.

This, is is said, might mean the merging of the motion picture and theatrical industries under one code, with, possibly, other amusements.

Inasmuch as any plans for the establishment of the monopolies can be put through only with legislation by Congress, the adoption of proposals for the improvement of the communications industry depends upon the attitude of that body and the extent to which it still is willing to follow the suggestions of the President without opposition.

Big Factors in Film Industry

The Radio Corporation of America is somewhat of an important producer-distributor and exhibitor of motion pictures through its various Radio-Keith-Orpheum subsidiaries.

The American Telephone and Telegraph Company is interested in the operations of some thousands of the most important theatres through its Western Electric Sound System installed in these theatres and for which exhibitors pay to Western Electric, or A. T. & T., weekly service charges. Also, Western Electric has its producer recording licences in practically all of Hollywood's studios and frequently finances production.

In view of these facts the motion picture industry would be considerably involved as a result of any proposed nationwide merger and government supervised monopolization of the telegraph, telephone and radio interests.

If the effort toward cartelization is taken, it is pointed out, the groundwork already has been laid through the codes which make all units in an industry operate practically along the same lines, with a second step toward this end seen in the reported determination of the Recovery Administration next year to combine all branches under a master code.

And the film industry is one of the very few—some say the only—in which all branches are covered in a single agreement.

Dembow Protests Trailer Censoring

Protesting the proposal of the Ohio board of censors to rigidly censor and "morally cleanse" trailer service, George Dembow, of National Screen Service, went to Columbus last week to confer with B. O. Skinner, director of the Ohio body, and to advise him that the trailer companies "would not tolerate censorship."

According to reports the Ohio censors stated last week they had notified trailer service companies that they emphatically object to the use of any scene, word or action which previously has been eliminated by the board in the trailers. They are also said to have made the statement that this practice is resorted to by numerous trailer services.

Mr. Dembow said in Columbus he informed the censor board that he was aware the idea of censoring trailers and collecting fees for the state of Ohio was to replace the many thousands of dollars lost in that state through the recent exemption of the newsreel. Inasmuch as trailers are advertising reels, said Mr. Dembow, they are not subject to censorship, nor obligated to pay censorship fees. Rather than submit to such a plan the trailer companies would cease to do business in Ohio, in which event, he pointed out, a severe hardship would be imposed on the state's theatres.

DE-CODING THE FILM CODE

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

PREAMBLE

The National Recovery Administration's "Code of Fair Competition" for the motion picture industry was approved and signed by the President on November 27th, and became a law ten days later, on December 7th, at midnight. From that date on, failure to abide by any and all code provisions is a violation of the law, regardless of whether the individual, firm, company, theatre, exchange or corporation signs an acceptance of the code.

The fine for each wilful violation is $500. Each day's offense is a separate violation. However, it has been the general rule of the Administration and the various Code Authorities operating under it, to pursue a rather liberal policy in this connection, especially on unintentional violations, during the first few weeks of the code, and until the Code Authority and the various boards and committees appointed by it, start to function.

Industry Code Supersedes Earlier Reemployment Code

Each person, firm, exhibitor, exchange, distributor, producer, firm, association, company or corporation is legally bound under the general provisions of the code and under any specific clauses relating to a particular class or branch of the industry.

The fact that an exhibitor or distributor in the field, or any company, firm or corporation had signed the President's blanket reemployment code earlier in the year does not remove the necessity for signing the new film code, which now supersedes the Presidential reemployment code. The President's reemployment agreement was a temporary and emergency medium to aid recovery, and specified that among other things signers thereby agreed to aid in drafting a code for their own industry and to accept that instrument and abide by it when it was approved.

The law does not give the industry's Code Authority, or any of the boards appointed thereunder, any powers to prosecute violators of the code. Such powers remain in the hands of regular governmental agencies of prosecution, to be initiated by the Compliance Boards of the National Recovery Administration. The NRA could take away the violator's Blue Eagle, secure an injunction in the courts, or cite a violator to the Federal Trade Commission. The Department of Justice is available, too.

It should be remembered that public opinion might easily be an exerting influence to keep an industry, or theatre, in line with code provisions, especially in the motion picture business where the opinion of the masses has always been an important factor.

Deadline Is January 11 For Signing The Code

Although the effective date of the code as a law was December 7th, the code gives exhibitors and distributors forty-five days after the affixing of the Presidential signature on November 27th, to sign and accept the new code. That would place the deadline at January 11th.

No exhibitor or distributor, or company, shall be entitled to protection against unfair competition under the trade practice provisions unless he signs the code on or before January 11th, nor shall he be entitled to file any complaint with the local Grievance Boards, local Clearance Boards, Code Authority, local Labor Boards or the General Arbitration Boards, unless he shall have agreed to comply with all the requirements of the code and the National Recovery Act, by affixing his signature to the code acceptance blank prescribed by the NRA and the Code Authority. Copies of these blanks are now being sent out in the mails, to some 15,000 exhibitors throughout the country, and to each independent exchange, to the executive heads of all companies, firms or corporations and to circuits, large and small producers, distributors and others.

In this first article of Motion Picture Herald's series translating the motion picture code into the working language of the industry, the subjects treated are:

Preamble.—General application of the code.

Definitions.—What the technical terms in the code mean.

Administration of the code within the industry.

Other subjects will be taken up in succeeding issues.

New companies, firms, theatres or corporations engaging in the motion picture business must sign the code within forty-five days after they start functioning, otherwise they shall not be entitled to the protection and benefits of the code, or can they file complaints or grievances with any of the various boards.

All in the industry are bound under the code to pay such levy or assessment as ordered by the Code Authority for expenses in administering the code. Although this clause definitely and specifically names all persons, firms, theatres, exchanges, companies and corporations, the Code Authority must decide whether the assessment shall be levied on employees, as was the case in the Retail Code, where employees were assessed twenty-five cents. However, it is not expected that such assessment will be levied on motion picture employees.

Any person or theatre or exchange or company which shall fail to pay promptly any assessment or levy made by the Code Authority for code expenses, shall not be entitled to file any complaint or grievance, or receive any protection against unfair competition.

Law Binding On All; Must Pay Assessment

Because the law is binding on all in the industry, failure to pay the assessment, or failure to sign the code by January 11th, does not remove any person or company in the business from liability to prosecution under the code, or from being made a defendant in any complaint or grievance filed by another person or company who has signed, or who has paid the assessment, but such offending party shall not have the right to appeal or any redress.

The Code Authority shortly will determine the total amount necessary to defray the expenses of the administration of the code for the first year, and shortly shall determine the manner and means of collection and the amount to be collected from each of the three branches of the industry.

Exchanges in the field, and their managers, which are a part of a distribution system belonging to and operated by a national distributor as branch offices of such national distributor, do not sign the code individually. These exchanges and their managers are automatically committed to the code when the corporate signatures are affixed by their executives in New York. The same holds true for circuit theatre affiliations in the field, and their managers, unless incorporated separately.

However, each independent exchange, or regional distributor, and each independent theatre must sign the code to receive its benefits.

Binding On Each Theatre If Corporation Signs

One corporate signature for an unaffiliated circuit would also bind each theatre belonging to that circuit, in the same manner as the one corporate signature for an affiliated circuit.

Affiliated circuit partnerships are taken care of in the code, under definitions of code terms, which explains that an affiliated theatre is one in which a producer or distributor owns, controls or manages the property, or in which a producer or distributor has a financial interest in the ownership, control, or management of the property. The mere ownership of any theatre premises by a producer or distributor of any theatre which is leased to an exhibitor shall not constitute any such exhibitor or theatre as affiliated.

Individual company, exhibitor, producer or distributor members of any associations or organizations, such as MPTOA units, Allied units, the Hays organization, and others, must sign the code individually, even though their association or organization has signed the document. The signatures of such associations do not bind the members, except in instances of labor unions. When the executives of any labor union sign the code, the employees belonging to such labor unions are automatically included.

All Must Comply Even If Not Signed

In any event, no individual or company may disregard the provisions of the code, even though they have not signed. The signature of acceptance is merely a guarantee to receive the benefits of the code and the benefits of submitting complaints or grievances for determination by the boards.

Although the Administrator says in the code that, "It is believed that this code as now revised presents a great advance in dealing effectively with the problems of this industry," the code and all the provisions thereof are expressly made subject to the right of the President, in accordance with the National Recovery Act passed by Congress, to cancel or modify from time to time any order, approval, license, rule, regulation of the code or any condition of it or any conditions imposed on the President upon his approval of the code.

The code basically is intended to promote fair competition in the industry and to eliminate unfair competition and to provide minimum wages and maximum hours for all classes of labor.

Population, for the purposes of the code, shall be determined by reference to the 1930 census.

Nothing in the code shall be deemed to apply to the production, distribution or exhibition of 9mm or 16mm films, or to slide films, or to non-theatrical films which are designed primarily for educational, scientific, industrial, commercial, advertising, selling or other non-theatrical purposes, or to television of motion pictures, provided that the production, distribution or exhibition of such non-theatrical or television films shall be subject to investigation by the Code Authority to determine whether such production, distribution or exhibition is unfair competition to an established motion picture theatre or theatres. And, if found to be unfair competition, the Code Authority shall promulgate rules and regulations governing such unfair competition and these rules and regulations shall be a part of the code.

Code Authority to Interpret and Administer the Code

The Code Authority has three general functions, judicial, legislative and administrative. In effect it is a national board of appeals to review the decisions and findings of the local boards after the complaint has been considered, heard, investigated and determined by the local board, if an appeal is provided for in the Code. The Code Authority, on request and after hearings, may prescribe additional rules of conduct, which, when approved by the President, become a part of the Code. In this manner the Code of Fair Competition may be corrected, amplified and amended. The Code Authority is charged with the general administration of the Code, is to appoint and establish the local Zoning Boards and the local Grievance Boards and may appoint other Committees to effectuate the purposes of the Code and delegate power and authority to such other Committees.

Unfair trade practices will be heard locally by Grievance Boards and a decision may be appealed to the Code Authority. The Grievance Boards are intended primarily to care for complaints of unfair overbuying, unfair cut-rate competition, and will also act as local industrial forums for the settling of disputes over certain relations between exchanges and theatres, and between competing theatres.

Local Clearance and Zoning Boards will provide against clearance of unreasonable length or area in each exchange territory. Its schedules and decisions may be appealed to the Code Authority.

Contract Arbitration Boards are set up to arbitrate disputes based on exhibition contracts where the exhibitor signs and accepts the optional arbitration clause of the Optional Standard License Agreement.

Labor Arbitration Boards are created to determine minimum wage scales and maximum working hours for skilled labor in theatres. All other labor disputes for all other theatre labor classes will be arbitrated by a general Arbitration Board, which may be created locally when needed to arbitrate, also, any other matters of arbitration which are not specifically provided for under the Grievance, Clearance, Labor or other boards.

ARTICLES SHOULD BE FILED FOR REFERENCE

Exhibitors and distributors in the field, production folk in Hollywood, and others, are urged to save for future reference the entire series of articles, beginning in this issue, in which the whole motion picture code will be translated from the complex legal phraseology into a clear working language. They should also file and refer to the introductory article, which appears in this issue on page 9, and explains the manner and method of making the translation, its purposes and its application to those in the industry.

Any individual request to MOTION PICTURE HERALD for further information of an explanatory, but not of a legal interpretative nature, will be answered immediately. The Code Authority, and no one else, will interpret the meaning of the clauses and provisions of the code.

The translation in MOTION PICTURE HERALD will be only a translation, and not a legal interpretation of the meaning of the clauses.

DEFINITIONS OF TERMS

In order that each member of distribution and each member of exhibition shall have a thorough knowledge of the application of the code to individuals, firms, companies, corporations or interests, in connection with the technical terms used in the code, a study of the following definitions in the code as applicable to distribution and exhibition, should be made:

1. "MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY" shall be deemed to include, without limitation, the production, distribution, or exhibition of motion pictures and all activities normally related thereto, except as specifically excepted from the operation of the code, as in the cases of uncompetitive non-theatrical and 16mm films, television and the like.

2. "DISTRIBUTOR" shall be deemed to include, without limitation, all persons, partnerships, associations and corporations who shall engage or contract to engage in the distribution of motion pictures.

3. "EXHIBITOR" shall include, without limitation, all persons, partnerships, associations and corporations engaged in the ownership or operation of theatres for the exhibition of motion pictures.

4. "EMPLOYEE" as used in the code shall be deemed to refer to and include every person employed by any producer, distributor, or exhibitor as defined above.

5. "CLEARANCE" shall be deemed to refer to that interval of time between the conclusion of the exhibition of a motion picture at a theatre licensed to exhibit such motion picture prior in time to its exhibition at another theatre or theatres, and the commencement of exhibition at such other theatre or theatres.

6. "ZONE" as used in the code shall be deemed to refer to any defined area embraced within the operations of a local clearance and zoning board.

7. "AFFILIATED EXHIBITOR" shall be deemed to refer to an exhibitor engaged in the business of operating a motion picture theatre which business is owned, controlled, or managed by a producer or distributor, or in which a producer or a distributor has a financial interest in the ownership, control, or management thereof. The mere ownership, however, by a producer or distributor of any theatre premises leased to an exhibitor shall not constitute any such theatre or exhibitor an "affiliated exhibitor," or "affiliated theatre."

8. "UNAFFILIATED EXHIBITOR" shall be deemed to refer to any exhibitor engaged in the business of operating a motion picture theatre which business is not owned, controlled, or managed by any producer or distributor, or in which no producer or distributor has an interest in the ownership, management or control thereof.

9. "ADMINISTRATOR" as used in the code shall be deemed to mean the National Recovery Administrator (General Hugh S. Johnson).

10. "NON-THEATRICAL" shall be deemed to refer to churches, schools, and other places where motion pictures are exhibited, but which are not operated in the usual and ordinary course of the business of operating a theatre for the exhibition of motion pictures.

ADMINISTRATION IN THE INDUSTRY

1. CODE AUTHORITY

(The President's Executive Order accompanying the approved code which subjected the work and decisions of the Code Authority to review by the NRA Administrator, for his approval or disapproval, has since been waived Also, the Executive Order gave the Administrator the right to remove a member of the Code Authority at will, but this was officially changed by the NRA Administrator to read, "in accordance with the recommendations of at least a majority" of the ten voting industry-members of the entire Code Authority.)

A. PURPOSES

1. General administrative agency of the code.
2. Judicial: A supreme court of appeals for code matters; interpretation of the motion picture code law.
3. Legislative: To legislate changes, modifications or additional provisions to prevent unfair competition and other unfair and destructive practices.

B. PERSONNEL

Merlin H. Aylesworth, RKO.
Sidney R. Kent, Fox.
George J. Schaeffer, Paramount.
Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew's-MGM.
Harry M. Warner, Warners-1st National.

2. Representing unaffiliated producers, distributors and exhibitors, with a right to vote:

Robert H. Cochrane, Universal.
W. Ray Johnston, Monogram.
Ed Kuydendall, MPTOA.
Charles L. O'Reilly, New York TOCC.
Nathan Yamins, Allied.

3. Representing the Administration as "impartial" members, non-voting:

A. Lawrence Lowell, president-emeritus of Harvard University.
Sol. A. Rosenblatt, NRA deputy administrator in charge of amusement codes.
Unnamed member to be appointed.

4. Representing certain classes of employees (creative talent in Hollywood), non-voting:

Marie Dressler.
Eddie Cantor.

When any question affecting any class of employees in the industry is to be considered by the Code Authority, such class will be entitled to have one representative sit on the Code Authority, but only for such purpose as involves that particular class of employees. Such representative shall have a right to vote on the specific question and shall be selected by the Administrator from a list of nominees submitted by the particular class of employees involved.

The Administrator has the right to add members to the Code Authority from any employer class in the industry, if, in the administration of the code, it shall be recommended by a majority of the voting members of the Code Authority that there is not sufficient representation on the Code Authority of such employer class.

The code recognizes six distinct employer groups in the industry as being entitled to representation on the Code Authority, as follows: Affiliated producers, affiliated distributors, affiliated exhibitors; unaffiliated producers, unaffiliated distributors, unaffiliated exhibitors.

Although the affiliated and the unaffiliated employer classes each have five votes, the whole ten votes are broken down as follows: unaffiliated producer-distributor-exhibitors, five votes; unaffiliated producer-distributors, two votes; unaffiliated exhibitors, three votes.

In case of the absence, resignation, ineligibility, or incapacity of any producer-distributor-exhibitor member of the Code Authority to act on the Code Authority, an alternate of the same general class of employers shall be designated by the absent member to act for him. The alternate must be a bona fide executive or a bona fide exhibitor, and the absent member must certify him as such to the Code Authority, but the Code Authority has the power to reject such alternate and require the absent member to designate another.

Any producer-distributor-exhibitor member of the Code Authority may name a permanent alternate, but such permanent alternate must be approved both by the Code Authority and by the Administrator.

Neither Marie Dressler nor Eddie Cantor, nor any one of the three direct government representatives may have an alternate on the Code Authority.

If a member of the Code Authority is unable, for any reason, to designate his alternate, such alternate shall be selected by the Code Authority, subject to the Administrator's approval, and he must be from the same general employer class as the absent member.

Employer Must Be Bona Fide Executive Or Distributor

A member of the employer class of the Code Authority shall automatically become ineligible to continue as a member when he ceases to be a bona fide executive or a bona fide exhibitor, as the case may be, and his successor will be named, from the same general employer class, by the Code Authority. The selection shall be subject to the Administrator's approval.

No individual production, distribution or exhibition company, corporation or unit may have more than one voting representative on the Code Authority at the same time.

No member of the Code Authority shall sit on any matter which directly involves his own company or his own interests, and which does not involve his company or interests as a class or in a group. When matters come up which directly involve a member's own company or interests, the Code Authority shall designate an alternate of the same general class, but the alternate shall not be connected with the company or theatre of the ineligible member.

The Code Authority may at any time or for any reason appoint committees or sub-committees, and vest in such committees any power and authority within the scope of the powers granted to the Code Authority under the code. Appointment of such committees or sub-committees shall not relieve the Code Authority of any of its responsibilities or basic duties under the code. Any action taken by such committees shall be subject to review by the Code Authority for approval.

Much of the actual detail work of the Code Authority will be done by committees and sub-committees, members of which may either be members of the Code Authority or others. The Code Authority at any time may remove from any committee any member thereof. The Code Authority shall coordinate the duties of the various committees which it appoints with a view to promoting joint and harmonious action upon matters of common reason.

The broad general powers of the Code Authority to appoint committees are given to it to further effectuate the purposes of the code.

Non-Voting NRA Representatives Shall Not Have Direct Interest

The three non-voting members of the Code Authority who represent the NRA and, therefore, the government, shall not have any direct, personal interest in the motion picture industry, nor represent any interest adverse to the interests of those engaged in the industry, and are to be the official contacts on the Code Authority of the National Recovery Administration. There may not be more than three such government representatives on the Code Authority, and they must "carefully avoid the fact or appearance of dictation or coercion" and shall function as "co-workers in an undertaking of public interest, concerned only in the faithful administration of the code." Specifically, their duties may be summarized as follows:

1. Refer with recommendation to the Administrator those matters mentioned in the code as being subject to review and/or approval of the Administrator.
2. Recommend to the NRA division administrator such other matters as in his judgment are important to the welfare of the industry, or to the public interest, or to the consumers or employees affected by the provisions of the code. Code violations may be included in such recommendations.
3. Through the Code Authority secure complete assent to and compliance with all provisions of the code by each individual unit of the industry.
4. Assist the Code Authority in connection with the preparation of recommendations for necessary interpretations, modifications, and additions to the code.
5. Warn and guard the Code Authority, and through it, the industry and any units in the industry, against threatened deviations from the code or non-observance of its terms or action contrary to the principle of the National Recovery Act.
6. Constantly scrutinize the operation of the code and see that it does not permit or promote monopolies nor tend to eliminate or oppress small enterprises.
7. Advise with the Code Authority in seeing that its affairs are handled in a cooperative and fair manner with respect to all units under the code, making sure that the provisions of the code are strictly adhered to with an equitable and fair settlement of all matters covered by the code pertaining to the interests of the general public, consumers or employees.

Members of the Code Authority do not receive any salaries, nor do the committees or sub-committees, but the code gives to the Code Authority the right to appoint, remove and fix

PROVISIONS ON LABOR TO BE EXPLAINED NEXT

The compulsory labor provisions of the code in distribution and exhibition will be explained to exchanges and to theatre owners in the second of a series of articles in which the legal phraseology of the code will be translated into a working language.

These labor provisions probably are more important at the moment to theatres and exchanges than the trade practice clauses and the contract provisions in the code which are intended to create fair competitive relations between buyer and seller and among both.

In this article, the first of the series, there is explained the general significance of the code to distribution and exhibition; the definitions of the technical and industry terms used in the code and the manner and means of administering the code and of effecting its compliance in the industry.

The third article will explain trade practices and contract clauses.

Production will be treated separately in subsequent issues.

MAY ALTER TRADE PRACTICE CLAUSES

the compensation of any number of persons whom it may employ to assist it in any capacity whatsoever in the administration of the code.

The Code Authority may elect its own chairman to preside at its own meetings.

C. PROCEDURE-JURISDICTION-DUTIES

The Code Authority may make at any time such rules and regulations as to meetings and other procedural matters as it may determine.

In administering the code, the Code Authority shall, to such extent and in such manner as may seem most useful, utilize the facilities of the various national, regional and local trade associations, groups, institutes, boards and organizations in the industry. Typical of the associations referred to are the local and regional trade associations of theatre owners, or exhibitor associations, the national associations of exhibitors (MPTOA and Allied), Film Boards of Trade, the trade associations of national producers and distributors (MPPDA), and of various regional or independent producers and distributors and the like.

Directly, or through any committee which it may appoint the Code Authority shall be engaged in the basic activities of effectuating the purposes of the code. It shall assist the Administrator in administering the provisions of the code, regardless of what they may be, in making investigations as to the functioning or observance of any of the provisions of the code either at its own instance or on the complaint of any person engaged in the industry, and shall report to the Administrator on such matters.

The Code Authority shall have the right to make independent investigations, either itself or through a committee, of violations or alleged violations of the code by any branch of the industry or by any person, employer, employee, firm, theatre, exchange or corporation engaged in any branch of the business.

Empowered to Collect Data From Members

The Code Authority is empowered to collect at any time from members of the industry any and all data and statistics required by the President, or reasonably pertinent to the effectuation of the National Recovery Act. The Code Authority has the right to compile such data and statistics, but it may disseminate among the members of the industry only summaries of the information compiled. In no instance may the Code Authority make any individual identification of any person or firm to whom the information relates, nor may the Code Authority disclose individual parts of the information collected, and no such statistics, data and information of any one member of the industry shall be revealed to any other member, except in the form of summaries.

The Code Authority may also be asked to gather statistical information for, and to be turned over to any government agency.

The Code Authority may initiate and consider any recommendations for regulations and interpretations of any code clauses, including those pertaining to trade practices and may change trade practice clauses in the code, with the approval of the Administrator and the President.

After due notice to the industry and a hearing, the Code Authority may prescribe such additional rules and regulations governing the conduct of producers, distributors and exhibitors among themselves and with each other and with their employees.

Such new rules and regulations must be submitted to the Administrator and to the President, and, if approved, shall constitute additional rules of fair practice under the code, for the industry, and any violation of them shall constitute a violation of the code.

It is not necessary that these new rules and regulations be required to be included in the code by the National Recovery Act. They are intended to take form as changes in circumstances or experience may indicate the necessity for further preventing unfair competition and other unfair and destructive practices.

Industry's Medium For Interpreting Code Clauses

In its capacity as a judicial branch of motion picture code administration under the NRA, the Code Authority shall be the industry's medium for interpreting the motion picture code law, either on its own initiative, or when asked to do so for specific cases, or upon appeal of complaining or defendant party in a case decided by one of the local boards set up under the code.

The Code Authority shall appoint a local Grievance Board for each distribution center and these Grievance Boards shall determine certain grievances and unfair practices and provide relief, therefrom, with both complaining party and defendant having a right to appeal to the Code Authority from any decision of the Grievance Board.

The Code Authority shall appoint a local Clearance and Zoning board for each distribution center and these Clearance and Zoning Boards shall establish a schedule which will be binding upon all distributors and exhibitors in each exchange territory regulating the number of days which must elapse between theatres in their showing of the same motion pictures in such territory. Any party aggrieved by any decision of the local Clearance and Zoning Board shall have the right of appeal therefrom to the Code Authority.

The code provides for the arbitration of labor disputes between theatre owners and employees; for the arbitration of contractual disputes between distributor and exhibitor and for the arbitration of any other dispute between distributor and exhibitor or among distributors or among exhibitors. The Code Authority enters into these situations only after the arbitration decision has been rendered and when either party refuses to abide by such decision. In such cases the Code Authority shall report such refusal to the Administrator as a violation of the code.

Actual "policing" under the code in connection with violations or refusals to abide by the code is a matter for the NRA and federal branches. The Code Authority shall report violations either to the Administrator or to the NRA Compliance Boards, locally, or at Washington, and they, in turn, shall report such violations to the Attorney General if these Compliance Boards are unable to settle the dispute or stop the violation.

CODE AUTHORITY AND THE NRA

The motion picture industry's Code Authority is the administrative and interpretative governing board of the code in the industry, and, in addition, is charged with effecting compliance of all those in the industry with the code's provisions.

It has no police powers, but shall report wilful code violations to the NRA Compliance Boards, and these Compliance Boards will then attempt to end the violations, and, in case they are unsuccessful in this connection, the Compliance Boards have the power to bring the matter to the courts for settlement.

D. HEADQUARTERS-SUB-BRANCHES

The Code Authority will establish permanent headquarters in New York, at a place to be determined, and in charge of a paid secretary. A sub-division of the Code Authority possibly will be established in Hollywood.

E. GENERAL

The Code Authority shall, at a very early date, describe to the industry the manner and means for collecting funds necessary to pay the expenses of the Code Authority in administering the code. Although no official figure has been mentioned, it was said that between $300,000 and $400,000 will be needed for 1934.

This sum shall be budgeted by the Code Authority and fairly allocated among the three divisions of the industry and assessed against all of the members of production, distribution and exhibition. The Code Authority has not yet decided on the manner of allocation, but the law definitely says that any person who shall fail to promptly pay any assessment or levy made by the Code Authority in this connection, shall not be entitled to file any complaint under any ARTICLE or PART of the code.

Whether non-signers of the code shall be compelled to contribute to these expenses was still a matter for the Code Authority to decide, although every one in the industry is bound to the law of the code, regardless of whether they sign or not. Nor has it yet been decided whether the various employee groups shall be assessed. However, each individual firm, corporation, company and theatre will be. Each unit will be notified accordingly, in due time, by the Code Authority.

Each and every independent and national exchange in each city shall abide by the regulations promulgated by the Code Authority for the prevention of fire, for the holding of fire drills, and for rigid monthly inspection, the inspection of prints, the storing of inflammable material, the maintenance and testing of sprinkler systems and fire extinguishers, the avoidance of smoking and other cautions, methods and devices to protect the lives of employees and the public, and to insure safety against fire hazards.

Although not specifically mentioned in the code, the Administration started this week to effect a federal NRA system to aid Code Authorities generally to adjust complaints of code violations by providing for supplementary code cooperation of the National Recovery Administration in the 48 states with the Code Authorities and their boards and sub-committees.

The plan provides complaint adjustment machinery for any industry while such industry is organizing its own machinery and Code Authority and boards, or wherever the Code Authority finds complaint machinery too costly to maintain, or wherever it needs government aid in enforcement.

The new system is not equipped with prosecution powers, but it will institute proceedings by proper government agencies against wilful non-compliance with codes.

Twenty-six district NRA compliance directors already have been named in the field and these will be augmented by 22 more in order to make available a director for each state. Branch offices will be established in some of the larger cities.

2. LOCAL GRIEVANCE BOARDS

A. PURPOSES

1. To act as an industrial forum before which exhibitors and distributors locally in the field may take for determination not only grievances and unfair trade practices as specified in the code, but also grievances which are not specifically mentioned in the code.

2. To assure to the greatest degree possible a sufficiency of motion picture product with which exhibitors may operate their theatres, being intended particularly to care for the exhibitors' buying problems as they may be unfairly influenced by another exhibitor in the following manner:

(a) The licensing of more motion pictures than are reasonably required.

(b) The adoption of an unfairly competing operating policy of unnecessary and too frequent changes of motion pictures.

(c) The exaction, without just cause, of an agreement from any distributor as a condition for buying motion pictures that the distributor refrain from selling its product to the complaining exhibitor.

(d) The commission of any other act of similar or of another nature, with the intent and effect of depriving, without just cause, the complaining exhibitor of a sufficient number of pictures with which to operate.

3. Determine when non-theatrical motion picture places are competing with theatres.

4. To hear and determine exhibitors' complaints on rebates, cut-rate competition and the like.

B. PERSONNEL

Selection of names for the local Grievance Boards which will be set up by the Code Authority in each of the 32 distribution centers has not yet been completed, and they probably will not start functioning until January.

The code specifically commands the Code Authority to establish a local Grievance Board in each exchange territory, and says that the personnel of each board shall consist of two representatives of distributors, one representing a national distributor with theatre affiliations, and one representing a distributor without circuit theatre affiliations; and two representatives of exhibitors, one representing affiliated circuit interests and the other to be independent, or unaffiliated. The Code Authority shall also appoint a fifth person to the Grievance Board in each territory, such person to be approved by the Administrator. Such appointee shall have no direct or indirect affiliation with any branch of the industry. He shall be regarded as the impartial representative on each board of the Code Authority, and shall vote only when the board is deadlocked, and, in such cases, his vote shall decide the question.

A chairman for each Grievance Board shall be selected by the majority vote of members of the Board, and any vacancy in the Board shall be filled by the Code Authority, but only from the class of members in which the vacancy occurred.

No member of any local Grievance Board shall sit on any matter involving his own or his company's interest, and no Grievance Board shall contain in its membership more than one representative of any one distributor or exhibitor. If any member of any Grievance Board ceases to belong to the distribution or exhibition class which he represents on the Board, he shall no longer be eligible to continue as a member of the Board, and the Code Authority shall designate another member from the same class in which the ineligibility occurs.

The code says that, in order to serve on the Grievance Boards, all members shall be persons of good repute and of good standing in the industry, and shall, upon accepting the appointment, subscribe and file with the Administrator an oath to fairly and impartially determine whatever issue is presented to the Board.

The code does not provide for alternates for Grievance Boards, but it is expected that the Code Authority will make such provision when the Boards start functioning.

C. PROCEDURE-JURISDICTION-DUTIES

Rules and regulations and the mechanics of operations of the Grievance Boards, other than those mentioned below, will be determined shortly by the Code Authority, and shall bind each Grievance Board.

Each complaint from an exhibitor that a competing exhibitor has contracted for more pictures than he reasonably requires for the operation of his theatre, with the intention and effect of depriving, without just cause, the complaining exhibitor's theatre of a sufficient number of motion pictures, must be filed with the Grievance Board, in writing, immediately after the complaining exhibitor learns of the commission of the act or acts. In cases where such an act is threatened, he must file his complaint in writing immediately when such threatened act comes to his notice.

In addition to a fair and impartial consideration of all the facts submitted by the complaining exhibitor in writing, the local Grievance Board shall, after giving due notice to the parties involved, hold a full, expeditious and complete hearing, at which all parties concerned will be heard, including the exhibitor or exhibitors directly involved, the exchange or exchanges having contracts with the exhibitor complained against, and also those exhibitors having contracts for runs subsequent to each of the exhibitors directly involved. If the local Grievance Board deems it necessary, it may conduct an independent investigation of the facts which are presented by the plaintiff.

In every case, the local Grievance Board is ordered by the code to make a prompt determination of the complaint submitted to it.

Upon finding the commission of any of the following specific acts: (a) the licensing of more motion pictures than are reasonably required; (b) the adoption of an unfairly competing operating policy of unnecessary and too frequent changes of motion pictures; (c) the exaction, without just cause, of an agreement from any distributor or exchange as a condition for entering into a contract for motion pictures that the distributor or exchange refrain from selling its product to the complaining exhibitor; and (d) the commission of any other act of similar nature with the intent and effect of depriving, without just cause, the complaining exhibitor of a sufficient number of pictures with which to operate; then the local Grievance Board shall make an award, (1) dismissing the complaint, or (2) granting such relief as the Board may deem appropriate and necessary to the complaining exhibitor.

Grievance Board Cannot Award Monetary Damage

The local Grievance Board can not award monetary damages to the complaining exhibitor, but they can grant relief from the situation complained of, by ordering a reallocation of product between the theatres. If the defendant exhibitor or the exchange refuses to grant relief to the complaining exhibitor as specified by the Grievance Board, the Board shall report such refusal to the Code Authority as a violation of the code.

The local Grievance Board shall not make any decision in favor of a complaining exhibitor unless the Board establishes the fact that the complaining exhibitor is able, ready and willing to carry out fully and comply with all of the terms and conditions which may be fixed by the Board for the licensing by the complaining exhibitor of sufficient product, and which may be fixed by the Board as a condition for making the award to the complaining exhibitor.

However, such terms and conditions for the licensing of product to the complaining exhibitor must be as favorable to the exchange concerned as those which are contained in the contract of the exhibitor complained of. Also, the complaining exhibitor must agree to pay for the distributor's loss of revenue, if any, resulting from the elimination of or reduction of revenue from any subsequent run or runs made necessary by such award, which award would give him the right to buy the product in dispute.

No local Grievance Board has the right to hear or determine any complaint of any exhibitor which involves product of a distributor who licenses such product to theatres which are affiliated with such distributor. The distributor has the right to license all or any number of its own pictures for showing at theatres affiliated with that distributor.

Contract disputes will be arbitrated for exhibitors and exchanges by a Contract Arbitration Board when the exhibitor agrees to arbitration under the Optional Standard License Agreement. Otherwise, contract disputes will be matters for Grievance Board settlement. In addition, the code says that certain other specific trade practices when in dispute must be brought before the Grievance Boards locally for determination. Principal clauses in this trade practice group are:

(a) Unfair non-theatrical competition.

(b) Adjustment of rentals on films not delivered.

(c) Designated playdates.

(d) Transferring the ownership or possession of a theatre to avoid uncompleted contracts.

ALL KEY CITIES TO HAVE BOARDS

(e) Prior advertising rights.

(f) Refusal of exhibitor to abide by local and voluntary decision of other exhibitors to eliminate rebates, premiums and the like.

In connection with the last named clause (f), where 75 per cent of the exhibitors locally agree to discontinue in that territory the giving away of rebates, premiums, gifts, two-for-one admissions and other similar awards to the public when purchasing tickets, then all exhibitors are bound by the majority decision, and where any exhibitor refuses to abide by the majority decision, the local Grievance Board has the power to direct all local exchanges to refuse to enter into any contracts with the offending exhibitor and to refuse to make further deliveries of motion pictures unless the exhibitor ceases and desists from such violation.

Majority Vote To Decide Grievance Board Cases

The decision of each local Grievance Board in all matters and upon any question submitted to it shall be determined by a majority vote—or three votes of the four members; but, in case the Board is evenly divided, the question shall be submitted for determination to the impartial representative on the Board of the Code Authority, and his vote shall decide the question.

Each decision of the Board and/or the impartial Code Authority representative, as the case may be, must be in writing, and all decisions of the local Boards must be rendered within fifteen days from the filing of the protest, grievance or complaint, or within three business days after all the parties involved shall have been fully heard, whichever date is earlier.

Any party involved in the dispute shall have the absolute right of appeal from the local Board's decision, such appeal to be made to the Code Authority, provided the appeal be filed or mailed by registered mail, or delivered in writing, not later than five days after the local Grievance Board has made its decision. In appeal cases, the grievance or complaint, together with all the evidence taken before the local Board, shall be referred to the Code Authority by the local Board, and, pending the determination of such appeal, the determination order, award or other action originally made by the local Grievance Board shall be held in abeyance.

Any party involved in the dispute which is appealed shall have the right to appear before the Code Authority and present additional evidence at, or before the hearing on such appeal.

The Code Authority shall render its decision on the appeal not later than fifteen days from and after the date when the parties involved shall have been fully heard on the appeal. The Code Authority shall independently investigate the complaint or grievance and review the evidence gathered from such an investigation and consider the additional evidence, if any, before the hearing on the appeal.

Grievance Board Acts As Authority's Clearing House

All general complaints and grievances of exhibitors or distributors concerning provisions of the code, and which complaints or grievances are not under the specific jurisdiction of the Code Authority, the local Clearance and Zoning Boards and/or labor arbitration boards, contract arbitration boards or otherwise specifically subject to general arbitration, shall be heard by the local Grievance Boards. This also includes complaints and grievances of exhibitors or distributors locally on matter which are not otherwise specifically mentioned in the code. In handling these general and miscellaneous complaints and grievances, the local Grievance Board will serve as somewhat of a clearing house for the Code Authority, and if the local Grievance Board believes that any of these general, miscellaneous complaints should be brought to the attention of the Code Authority, it shall certify the complain or grievance to the Code Authority for determination, and the Code Authority shall consider and determine the same. Otherwise, such miscellaneous complaints and grievances shall be determined locally by the Grievance Board, with the parties involved having the right to appeal such decision to the Code Authority.

Such miscellaneous complaints or grievances shall be determined by the local Board within fifteen days from the filing of the complaint, or, in case of appeal, the Code Authority shall make a decision on the appeal within fifteen days from and after the date when a hearing shall have been held on the appeal.

FILM CODE RAISES BUDGETS $12,000,000

Adoption of the motion picture code this week by the 14 large studios in Hollywood increased the estimated annual production budget of $135,000,000 to $147,555,000, or an additional $12,555,000.

The basic reason ascribed for the increase is an approximate increase of fifteen per cent in wages, supply costs and general operations. Labor, however, was the cause for most of the additional expense.

D. HEADQUARTERS-BRANCH LOCATIONS

The Grievance Boards will have headquarters, and will actually operate in the following exchange cities, in offices still to be selected:

Albany	Memphis
Atlanta	Milwaukee
Boston	Minneapolis
Buffalo	New Haven
Charlotte	New Orleans
Chicago	New York
Cincinnati	Oklahoma city
Cleveland	Omaha
Dallas	Philadelphia
Denver	Pittsburgh

E. GENERAL

No exhibitor or distributor shall be entitled to file any complaint or grievance with the local Grievance Board, under any Article of the code, unless such exhibitor or distributor shall have affixed his signature to the code in its entirety within forty-five days after it was signed by the President, or Thursday, January 11, 1934. The exhibitor, in signing the code, shall also thereby have agreed to comply with all of the requirements of the National Recovery Act. A conditional or partial agreement to comply with the code cannot be accepted and such conditional and partial agrement would be meaningless and of no effect. Evidence of such signature, duly executed by each separate exhibitor and distributor, shall be filed on a duly prescribed form with the Code Authority. The Code Authority this week mailed to every exhibitor and exchange, distributor, producer or other corporation, firm or company, a copy of the official form for duly executing the code and signature on this form binds the firm, corporation or individual to comply with the code in its entirety and all the requirements of the National Recovery Act.

New companies engaging in the motion picture business, or new theatre ventures must sign the code within forty-five days after commencing operations.

Also, any person, firm, theatre, exchange or corporation who shall fail to promptly pay any assessment or levy made by the Code Authority for code administration expenses, shall not be entitled to file any complaint, grievance or protest with the local Grievance Boards or with the local Clearing and Zoning Boards or with the Code Authority under any Article or Part of the code.

They may, however, be made defendants in disputes, complaints or grievances filed by another. The code is a law, binding every person or company in the industry, regardless of whether they sign or pay their assessed share of code administration expenses.

3. LOCAL CLEARANCE AND ZONING BOARDS

A. PURPOSES

1. To provide against clearance of unreasonable length and/or area in any exchange territory.

2. To establish a schedule in each exchange territory of fair, just, reasonable and equitable clearance and zoning regulating the number of days which must elapse between theatres in their showing of the same motion pictures in such territory, and which shall be binding upon all distributors and exhibitors in that territory.

B. PERSONNEL

Selection of the names for the local Clearance and Zoning Boards which will be set up by the Code Authority in each of the 32 key exchange territories has not yet been completed and the boards probably will not start functioning until January.

The code specifies that each of the local Clearance and Zoning Boards shall be appointed by the Code Authority and shall consist of two representatives of distributors, one of whom shall be a representative of a national distributor with theatre affiliations and the other a distributor without circuit affiliations; and two representatives of first-run theatres located in the territory, one of whom shall be an affiliated exhibitor or manager, if there be one, and the other an unaffiliated exhibitor; and two representatives of subsequent-run unaffiliated theatres operating within the territory.

A seventh member of the Board shall be appointed by the Code Authority and approved by the Administrator and he shall be regarded as the impartial representative of the Code Authority and he shall have no direct or indirect affiliation with any branch of the motion picture industry. sentative shall vote on any question only when the Board is deadlocked, and his vote shall determine the question.

The local Clearance and Zoning Board will select its own chairman by a majority vote of its members, and any vacancy in the Board shall be filled by the Code Authority, but only from the class of members in which the vacancy occurred.

All members appointed to the Board by the Code Authority shall be persons of good repute and of good standing in the industry, and shall, upon accepting the appointment, subscribe and file with the Administrator an oath to fairly and impartially determine whatever issue is presented to the Board.

No Board shall contain in its membership more than one representative of any one distributor or exhibitor, and if a member of any Board ceases to belong to the class which he represents on the Board, the Code Authority shall declare him ineligible to continue on the Board and shall fill the vacancy by designating a representative of the same class.

C. PROCEDURE-JURISDICTION-DUTIES

The jurisdiction of the local Clearance and Zoning Boards shall be limited to matters of clearance and zoning and such Boards shall hear no questions other than those pertaining to clearance and zoning matters.

Although the code says that each local Clearance and Zoning Board shall promptly after its creation, and prior to January 1, 1934, and prior to January 1st of each year thereafter, formulate, prescribe and publish for its territory, schedules of clearance for the season next ensuing, the schedules for the season 1934-35 cannot possibly be ready until long after January 1, 1934, because the Boards, which have not yet been named, will not have had sufficient time to complete such schedules by January 1, 1934.

However, the schedules cannot affect existing 1933-34 exhibition contracts on clearance and zoning, and few, if any, new contracts will be negotiated after January 1st until the new schedules are prescribed by the Boards in each territory.

The Boards will individually set up schedules according to the requirements and conditions which are peculiar to the particular territory. The schedules may classify theatres by geographical zones or other classifications best suited to local conditions, but each schedule shall be intended for the sole purpose of fixing the maximum clearance in length of time and area after the conclusion of the prior runs of such theatres.

Each Board may, after fair and reasonable notice and hearing to interested exhibitors, change, modify, or vary any part of the schedule set up by it, provided that any such change or modification shall not in any wise apply to, affect, or modify any exhibition contract made subject to, or in reliance upon, or pursuant to any such schedule, without the prior written consent of the parties to such contract.

The decision of each Board shall be determined by a majority vote, and in case the Board is evenly divided, such question shall be submitted for determination to the impartial representative of the Code Authority, whose vote shall determine the question.

The decision of the Board and/or the Code Authority's representative shall be in writing.

FILM INFLUENCE— AND A TRUE STORY

Without benefit of theory, psychology and social experimentation, straight from the experience of a man and a boy, comes a letter from R. W. Goodall, of Versailles, Ohio, where he operates a theatre and a drug store. His preamble is brief but pointed: "Newspapers and magazines are making quite a noise about what the films are doing to our young people. Well, I want to offer my testimony to all this controversy." Briefly, Mr. Goodall recounts the story of a boy, at a reform farm five times, whom he has employed in his store, his theatre, and about his home for two years, without a single regret. Seeing three changes of film weekly, the boy came to hate crime, says Mr. Goodall and "I simply showed this boy I had confidence in him." Significant is Mr. Goodall's indication that the boy had never seen a film before he was sent to the reformatory.

Each Board shall promptly publish the clearance and zoning schedules formulated by it, and file a copy of such schedules immediately with the Code Authority.

Within thirty days of publication, under specific code law, any group of exhibitors, or any individual theatre owner involved locally by the schedules, may file a protest in writing with the Board issuing them. Such Board shall then promptly convene and give reasonable notice of hearing to all those who are concerned, or who have an interest in the proceeding, and the Board shall hear them and accept from them all relative papers and evidence.

The Board shall have the power to make reasonable rules pertaining to the time, place and manner of hearing.

The Board shall make its decision on the protest within fifteen days from the filing of the protest, or within three business days after the parties involved shall have been fully heard, whichever date is sooner.

Any party aggrieved by the decision of the Board shall have absolute right of appeal to the Code Authority, provided such appeal is filed or mailed by registered mail, or delivered in writing not later than five days after the decision on the protest by the local Board. The local Board will then turn over all evidence taken before it to the Code Authority.

All persons interested in the decision on the appeal shall have the right to appear before the Code Authority and present additional evidence, and the Code Authority shall make a decision within fifteen days from and after the date of the hearing. The Code Authority shall, however, first investigate the protest, review the evidence gathered in its investigation and consider the additional evidence, if any.

The code says that the requirements as to these various steps hereinbefore prescribed shall be mandatory in order to give full relief before the buying season commences.

Each and every distributor and exchange and exhibitor in each territory shall be bound by the schedules drafted and/or decisions made by any local Clearance and Zoning Board, and/or decisions of the Code Authority upon any appeal to it.

Pending the final determination of any dispute or controversy over clearance and zoning, all existing exhibition contracts between the disputants shall continue to be performed in every respect.

Factors To Be Considered In Clearance Board Action

Each local Clearance and Zoning Board when making any classification of theatres for purposes of drawing a clearance schedule, or when fixing the maximum period or area of clearance in respect of any theatre, shall, among other things peculiar to the requirements locally, consider and give due regard to the following factors:

(a) That clearance to a very considerable extent determines the rental value of motion pictures;

(b) That exhibitions, or showings of the same motion picture within the same competitive area at too short an interval after the conclusion of a preceding run or runs, depreciates the rental value of motion pictures; and

(c) That all such depreciations of the rental values of motion pictures tend to reduce the number of motion pictures produced, discourage the production of motion pictures of quality involving large investments of capital, labor, skill and enterprise and thereby tend to reduce employment.

(d) That unreasonable clearance to a considerable extent affects the value of motion pictures for subsequent-run theatres.

(e) That unreasonable clearance depreciates the potential return from motion pictures to subsequent-run theatres.

(f) That unreasonable clearance as to time and area diminishes the potential revenue to the distributor from the subsequent-run exhibitor.

E. GENERAL

No exhibitor or distributor shall be entitled to file any complaint or grievance or protest under the clearance and zoning provisions of the code, or under any other article of the code unless such exhibitor or distributor shall have signed the code in its entirety within forty-five days from and after the date it was signed by the President, or by Thursday, January 11,

THE CONTRACT ARBITRATION BOARDS

1934. Evidence of such signature, duly executed, shall be filed on a duly prescribed form with the Code Authority. The Code Authority this week mailed to every exhibitor and exchange, distributor, producer or other corporation, firm or company, a copy of the official form for execution by each separate exhibitor and distributor, and the signature on this form binds the firm, corporation or individual to agree to comply with the code in its entirety and with all the requirements of the National Recovery Act.

New companies or individuals engaging in the motion picture business, or new theatre ventures must sign the code within forty-five days after commencing operations.

Change of ownership does not change the clearance and zoning previously specified by the Board for a particular theatre.

Also, any person, firm, theatre, exchange or corporation who shall fail to pay promptly any assessment or levy made by the Code Authority for code administration expenses, shall not be entitled to file any complaint, grievance or protest with the local Clearance and Zoning Boards, or with the Code Authority under any article or part of the code. They may, however, be made defendants in disputes, complaints or grievances filed by another. The code is a law binding every person or company in the industry, regardless of whether they sign it or pay their assessed share of code administration expenses as prescribed by the Code Authority.

4. CONTRACT ARBITRATION BOARDS

A. PURPOSES

(1) To arbitrate all contractual disputes between distributor and exhibitor when the exhibitor accepts and signs the optional arbitration clause of the Optional Standard License Agreement.

B. PERSONNEL

There are to be four members, two to be appointed by the distributor and two by the exhibitor, and to sit only on the particular case for which they are appointed. By stipulation of both parties, however, the board may be reduced to one representative for each, with power in the two thus appointed, if they cannot agree upon an award, to appoint an umpire as provided in the arbitration clause of the Optional Standard License Agreement.

C. PROCEDURE-JURISDICTION-DUTIES

The code says that the socalled Optional Standard License Agreement, negotiated by exhibitors and distributors in the winter of 1932, shall be offered to exhibitors by each and every distributor as an alternate form of exhibition contract in place of whatever form of exhibition contract the distributor may be using, unless both the distributor and the exhibitor mutually agree that a different form of contract be used. Any condition or provision of the optional standard license agreement that is in conflict with or is inconsistent with any provision of the code shall be deemed amended to conform to such similar provisions of the code, it being the intention of the Administration that the provisions of the code shall govern when and where they conflict with the Optional Agreement.

One such point of conflict between the code and the Optional Standard License Agreement is in connection with the rejection privilege on group purchases, the code providing for a flat ten per cent cancellation privilege for any group of feature pictures when the average rental of such group is less than $250 per picture.

The provisions of the Optional Arbitration Clause of the Optional Standard License Agreement, when accepted by the exhibitor shall prevail as the arbitration medium for the settlement of contract disputes.

Individual distributor's sales policy provisions may be inserted in the "Schedule" of the Optional Agreement, but the code says they shall not be contradictory of, or inconsistent with any of the standard clauses of the Optional Agreement.

When an exhibitor does not sign the arbitration clause of the Optional Agreement, or when the exhibitor and distributor do not agree to an arbitration clause under any contract, then the code provides local General Arbitration Boards to determine contract disputes, for the use of the exhibitor or distributor by voluntary agreement, or if the dispute is not over a contract and is specifically under the jurisdiction of the local Grievance Board or the Clearance Board, such dispute would automatically be referred to either of the last named boards.

When the exhibitor and distributor agree to arbitration under any contract other than the Optional Agreement, the code says that such arbitration shall be in accordance with the optional arbitration clause of the socalled Optional Standard License Agreement.

The procedure for arbitration under the Optional Agreement, together with the method of naming the arbitrators and the means for arriving at settlements, is printed on each copy of the Optional Agreement now being offered to exhibitors by the various exchanges. It is known as Clause Twentieth in that Agreement.

D. HEADQUARTERS

Contract Arbitration Boards are created privately by the distributor and exhibitor when, as and if a contractual dispute arises, and then only for that particular dispute for which they are appointed.

E. GENERAL

Contracts on 1933-34 product now in effect remain unaltered regardless of the code unless, upon signing, the exhibitor had inserted a clause specifying that the contract would be altered when the code became effective (December 7th) to include any code provisions or benefiting code clauses not appearing in the 1933-34 contract at the time it was negotiated earlier in the year.

The various code provisions affecting contractual relations between exhibitors and distributors will be discussed in a subsequent issue.

A CONCENTRATED TRANSLATION

The translation of the motion picture code by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, from the legal phraseology into a working language, is being done in such a manner that all related subjects, regardless of their position in the official draft, will be treated together.

For example, to effect a practicable concentration of all related subjects, all angles in the code pertaining to administration, labor, trade practices, contracts, and the like, will be treated together, and where they have a relation to each other, they will also be mentioned in the discussion of such other subject.

5. LABOR ARBITRATION BOARDS

A. PURPOSES

1. To establish a prevailing scale of wages and maximum number of hours, where no scales or number of hours are specified, for skilled labor directly and regularly employed by exhibitors, including: projectionists, billposters, carpenters, electrical workers, engineers, firemen, oilers, painters, theatrical stage employees, theatrical wardrobe attendants and the like.

2. To settle disputes between exhibitors and any one or all of the classes of skilled labor mentioned in the foregoing paragraph, regarding a minimum scale of wages and maximum number of hours of labor.

B. PERSONNEL

In questions arising with an organization of any socalled skilled mechanics or artisans affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, then the personnel of such local Labor Arbitration Board is to consist of a representative appointed by the national president of such affiliated union, together with a representative appointed by the exhibitors, and in case of a deadlock, both are mutually to appoint a third person, or if they cannot mutually agree on a third person, then the Administrator shall designate such third person.

In questions arising with unorganized skilled employees, or with an organization of such skilled employees which is not affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, then the board shall consist of a representative of such unorganized employees, or, as the case may be, a representative appointed by the president of such unaffiliated union organization or both, together with a representative appointed by the national president of a similar organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, provided, however, that members of such AFL affiliated union are regularly employed in said community by other exhibitors. Also, the exhibitor, or exhibitors shall appoint a representative, and if the various parties cannot agree they shall mutually designate an impartial person to determine the issue, or, if they cannot agree to the designation of an impartial person, such person shall be appointed by the Administrator.

C. PROCEDURE-JURISDICTION-DUTIES

The code specifically provides that employees associated with organizations of or performing the duties of billposters, projectionists, firemen, theatrical stage employees, theatrical wardrobe attendants, carpenters, electrical workers, engineers, oilers, painters, or other skilled mechanics and artisans, who are directly and regularly employed by exhibitors, shall receive not less than the minimum wage and work no longer than the maximum number of hours per week which were in force as of August 23, 1933, as the prevailing scale of wages and maximum hours for organizations of any such employees affiliated with American Federation of Labor unions. This, of course, is applicable to the respective type of work in a particular class of theatres in a particular location in a particular community, and such scales and hours shall be deemed by the code to be the minimum wage scale and maximum number of hours with respect to all of such employees in such communities, in such class of theatres.

However, where no prevailing scale of wages and maximum number of hours exist with respect to such classes of employees; or when any dispute should arise as to what is a minimum scale of wages or maximum hours, then the code provides that the matter be arbitrated locally by the Labor Arbitration Board provided for in this part of the code.

Meanwhile, pending the determination of any such dispute, the rate of wages then paid by the exhibitor and the maximum number of hours in force at that time shall not be changed so as to decrease wages or increase hours.

Pending the determination of the dispute by the arbitrators, the employees shall agree not to strike and the employers shall agree not to lockout such employees.

D. HEADQUARTERS

Labor Arbitration Boards will have no headquarters, being appointed locally by employees and exhibitors as the necessity arises, and only to arbitrate such dispute for which they were appointed.

E. GENERAL

With respect to all other disputes arising between employees and employers in exhibition, the parties pledge themselves in the code to attempt to arbitrate all such disputes, for which purpose a general arbitration system is provided elsewhere in the code.

The various code provisions on labor in both the exhibition and distribution fields will be discussed in a subsequent issue.

6. GENERAL ARBITRATION BOARDS

A. PURPOSES

1. Wherever in the code arbitration of any matter is required, but such arbitration is not specifically provided for, such matter shall be submitted for determination to a General Arbitration Board.

B. PERSONNEL

Each of the groups involved in the dispute shall appoint two representatives and each group shall state the arbitrators' business address and business or business connections.

If each group fails or refuses to name the arbitrators, or if any arbitrator so named shall fail or refuse to act, or be unable to serve, or shall be challenged, another arbitrator or arbitrators may be appointed by the other group.

If the arbitrators or a majority of them are unable to reach a decision, the arbitrators or a majority of them shall immediately select an umpire who shall not be engaged in the motion picture industry, and if the arbitrators or a majority of them are unable to agree upon the selection of an umpire, the Administrator shall, but only upon request, make such selection.

C. PROCEDURE-JURISDICTION-DUTIES

The code specifically says that wherever in the code, arbitration of any matter is provided for, other than arbitration under the Optional Standard License Agreement, or as may be otherwise specifically provided for, such matter shall be submitted for determination to a general Arbitration Board.

In these cases of arbitration for which the code does not specifically provide, upon the written request of either group to the dispute or controversy, the group making such request shall name therein two arbitrators and shall designate therein the date, time and place of the hearing of such controversy, but the date of such hearing shall not be earlier than seven days from the date of sending of such notice, unless it shall be claimed in such notice that irreparable injury will result unless there is a speedy determination, in which case such hearing may be designated to be held earlier than the said seven-day period.

Within five days from the mailing of such request for arbitration, or within twenty-four hours if the date of such hearing shall be earlier than seven days, the group upon whom such request is made shall name two arbitrators in a written notice mailed or delivered to the other (requesting) party.

Specifically mentioned in the code as matters for arbitration under this system are any and all labor disputes between employees and employers in exhibition, other than the wage scale disputes between skilled theatre labor and exhibitors previously mentioned as being subject to adjustment by special Labor Arbitration Boards.

No member of an Arbitration Board shall hear or determine any controversy in which he has an interest, direct or indirect, and any member having such interest shall be disqualified to act.

In cases where the arbitrators resort to an umpire, the hearing before the umpire shall be at such time and place as the umpire shall designate and shall be had before the umpire alone, the arbitrators not to be permitted to attend the hearing before the umpire.

D. HEADQUARTERS

Arbitration Boards of this classification, like local arbitration boards for special labor disputes and local contract disputes, will have no special headquarters, being appointed locally by disputants as the necessity arises, and only to arbitrate such dispute for which they were appointed.

E. GENERAL

The Arbitration Boards as provided in this classification are obviously intended for broad, general arbitration requirements on matters not specifically provided for arbitration under the code.

Al Rosenberg Is Elected to Head Northwest Allied

Al Rosenberg, of Seattle, was elected president of Allied Amusements of the Northwest, exhibitor organization, at its annual convention in the New Washington Hotel, Seattle, last week. There were 94 members present in what was described as a highly constructive meeting.

Other officers elected included: A. Bishell, Spokane, first vice president; William Ripley, Longview, second vice president; LeRoy Johnson, third vice president; James A. Hone, reelected secretary-treasurer. Three new trustees were named: J. W. Mercy, Jr., C. L. Gwinn and L. O. Lukan.

The association asked that all members immediately contact state legislators in an effort to kill the highly competitive dog races and to end daylight saving. It was further agreed not to accept any national advertising reels unless they are endorsed by the organization. A committee, composed of J. O. Lukan, Harry Black and Ned Edris, was appointed to check wage conditions under the code and make them immediately effective.

A Bowery Ball at the Eagles auditorium was unanimously proclaimed a huge success, and promises to become an annual feature. The event was sponsored by virtually every theatre in the state. Credit for its success was pinned on Mr. Hone, Robert Murray, L. J. McGinley and their staffs. Mayor Dore of Seattle, the principal speaker at the banquet, pledged continued aid for the industry and promised that theatre bombings will be eliminated.

Levy's Indication of ITOA Settlement Denied by Brandt

Groups Asked to Name Academy Awards Committee

Facing possible elimination of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences annual awards because of turbulent conditions in Hollywood, Howard Estabrook suggested this week that the Actors' and Writers' Guilds, the American Society of Cinematographers and the remainder of the Academy group get together and appoint committees from each group to work out a combination on the awards.

J. Theodore Reed, Academy president, is said to be in sympathy with the plan as are other prominent members of the body.

CHASE AND OTHERS BUY 660,900 LOEW SHARES

$18,604,335 Purchase Price by Holders of Defaulted Film Securities Corp. Notes Represents Face Value Plus Interest

The Chase National Bank of New York and other holders of $18,300,000 of defaulted Film Securities Corporation notes, on Tuesday purchased the 660,900 shares of Loew's, Inc., common stock at public auction for $18,604,335. This sum represents the face value of the notes in addition to interest from April 1, 1933, on which date the notes were defaulted.

The purchasers' bid — the only one received—was made for the entire block of stock by John R. Dillon of Hayden, Stone & Co., who represented the holders of the defaulted notes on which the stock was posted as collateral.

Of the defaulted notes Chase National held $4,000,000; American Telephone and Telegraph, $8,000,000; Hayden, Stone & Co., $2,000,000; Dillon, Read & Co., $2,000,000, with the remaining $2,300,000 held by various other accounts.

The bidders' price Tuesday amounted to $28.15 per share, while the market closing price for Loew stock was $30, or $19,827,000 as compared with the $18,604,335 paid at auction for the block. In contrast to these two prices, $76,000,000 was paid for the same stock in 1927 by William Fox.

The auction sale of this stock has caused considerable controversy over a period of weeks. Charges by attorneys that sale of the stock would give Chase National the same control of Loew's that it now has of Fox Film, last week led U. S. District Judge John Knox to issue an injunction restraining purchasers from violating anti-trust laws in acquiring the stock. Judge Knox on Monday, however, decided to allow the sale provided all purchasers were made familiar with his injunction and with the 1931 anti-trust decree which separated control of Loew's from Fox Film by setting up Film Securities Corporation to take over the Fox interest in Loew's.

The action of Judge Knox in holding up the sale last week was taken on the petition of John Harlem Amen, special assistant to the attorney general. At that time the court ordered that Thomas Nelson Perkins and John R. Hazel, trustees, be directed to ascertain and report to the court the names of prospective purchasers of any or all of the common stock in order that the court might determine whether the transfer would violate any of the terms of the consent decree handed down at Wilmington some time ago in the Government's anti-trust action against Fox, which owned the stock prior to its transfer to General Theatres Equipment Corporation and Harley L. Clarke with the aid of Chase National financing.

Saul E. Rogers had pointed out to the court several days before the Knox injunction that an absence of prospective purchasers for the stock threatened to give Chase, holder of $4,000,000 of defaulted Film Securities notes, possession of the stock and that with Chase in control of Fox, Loew's would come under the same control if the block of stock were allowed to revert to the bank. This, Mr. Rogers charged, would create exactly the same situation which led to the Government's anti-trust action against Fox in 1931.

At Tuesday's auction the stock first was offered by Adrian H. Muller & Son, auctioneers, in the 131 individual blocks of 5,000 shares each and one block of 5,900 shares. No bids were received for any of the individual blocks, however, so the auctioneers offered the entire 660,900 shares as a unit and the noteholders' bid was the only one received. The $18,300,000 Film Securities notes will be turned over by the holders in payment for the stock.

The Loew's stock thus disposed of was Film Securities' only asset.

DE MILLE FAVORS STAR SALARY CUTS

An opinion in favor of reduction of stars' salaries was expressed by Cecil B. DeMille last week in Washington, where he was effecting an adjustment of his income tax dispute with the government. "Stars are getting too much money at present," he said, "and that makes it difficult for a producer to keep turning out pictures in proper style. When the box office justifies, high salaries should be paid, but not now."

Warner Officers Are Re-Elected

Morris, vice-president; Herman Starr, vice-president; Albert Warner, treasurer; Samuel Carlisle, assistant treasurer; W. A PICTURE AS BIG AS THIS

MOTION PICTURE DAILY'S HOLLYWOOD PREVIEW

"Gallant Lady"

(20th Century)

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 5.—"Gallant Lady" is big and fine. A thrilling picture, throbbing with a measured beat of human sympathy.

Audiences will meet, know, and be pulling for as swell a group of human beings, led by Ann Harding and a stellar cast, as have graced the screen in some time.

Not since "Holiday" has Miss Harding been accorded such a genuine, sincere and meaty role. She handles it with feeling and telling effect.

The story concerns a girl courageous. Her fiance, killed in a take-off on a trans-Atlantic flight, forces her to have her child adopted. Her attachments to three men, her business success, her yearning and quest for her baby boy, and her final break for happiness are meager highlights of an absorbing plot.

Charged with quiet power, suffused with poignant pathos, the picture reveals dramatic heartbreak in a touching and tender mood. Sigh and sob are broken by smiles and laughs. Ann Harding softly etches a portrait that engraves itself on one's memory.

Clive Brook, as a social outcast, elevates human frailty superbly. Tullio Carminati is gay, Otto Kruger is dependable, and both give quality performances as the two other men in Ann Harding's life. Janet Beecher, rich in stage experience, turns in a warm, competent and sincere portrayal. Dickie Moore is a lovable, regular fellow. Betty Lawford, as the female menace, handles a tough job nicely.

Gregory La Cava's direction, keeping the human values well in front at all times, is expert in all departments. Sam Mintz's screen play is a model of craftsmanship.

"Gallant Lady" explores the heartaches and gropings of real people. Its soft symphony reaches the hidden springs of emotions and plays wholesome music on the heartstrings.

Appealing to all classes, "Gallant Lady" may well be considered outstanding, should do standout business where Ann Harding's name pulls and should rejuvenate her popularity elsewhere.

FEE CLAIMS ARGUED IN PARAMOUNT CASE

Rogers and Zirn Charge Claims of Receivers, Attorneys and Accountants Are "Excessive"; Elihu Root, Jr., Defends Costs

Claims for fees of nearly $300,000 by receivers, attorneys and accountants, during the 12-week period last winter when the now bankrupt Paramount Publix Corporation was in receivership, were protested as exorbitant, "excessive and vague," at a hearing Monday before Referee Henry K. Davis in New York. Saul E. Rogers and Samuel Zirn, attorneys for separate groups of bondholders, were among those who contributed the most strenuous protests.

Mr. Rogers not only objected to the size of the fees claimed, but said that the receivership itself, "one of those friendly little proceedings," was unnecessary and designed "to keep those in power who were in power."

The attorneys met before a special creditors' meeting called by Mr. Davis to hear the petition of Charles D. Hilles and Adolph Zukor for authorization to pay $296,053 for expenses incurred during the period of the corporations' equity receivership from January 27 to March 14.

Given Until December 22

Attorneys from several of Paramount's largest creditors neglected to record either their approval or opposition to the petition Monday. These were given until December 22 to do so.

Elihu Root, jr., of the law firm of Root, Clark & Buckner, counsel for the trustees in bankruptcy, defended the receivership costs as "reasonable and moderate." Mr. Root's firm is the largest single claimant, asking $125,000 for services as general counsel for the receivers, Mr. Hilles and Mr. Zukor. Out of the total of $296,053 asked for allowances, $211,718 represents allowances for the receivers, their counsel and accountants; $38,100 was for fees for firms acting as counsel to the corporation and to the plaintiff in the receivership action, and the remainder represented expenses and disbursements.

Opposing payment of the $296,053 were, in addition to Mr. Rogers and Mr. Zirn, Victor House, attorney for a group of Paramount bondholders; Samuel Kramer, counsel for a group of general creditors, and S. W. Landon, counsel for a group of creditor banks.

Mr. Rogers declared that on the basis of the equity receivership costs, "fees of $5,000,000 might be expected for the period of the bankruptcy." Mr. House and Mr. Zirn requested an oral hearing on the petition with an opportunity to examine the receivers and their counsel on the costs. Referee Davis overruled this petition and held that only written affidavits might be submitted. Mr. Zirn thereupon filed his affidavits, which included the charge that the equity receivership was "illegal."

Rogers Questions Hilles Claim

Out of the allowance for the receivers, counsel and accountants, the sum of $30,000 was asked by Mr. Hilles, while Mr. Zukor requested $23,047, representing what he would have received for the period in salary from the company. In reply to the protests of Mr. Rogers on the claim of Mr. Hilles, Mr. Root said Mr. Hilles had come into the situation from the outside and had "made a tremendous effort" in familiarizing himself with the corporation's complicated affairs.

"Do you mean," Mr. Rogers asked, "that a man who is without any education in an industry, who was not invited in by the creditors, is entitled to charge them $2,500 a week, or at the rate of $125,000 a year, while he is getting an education?"

Mr. Root said he thought the application was reasonable.

In reply to a question as to why Adolph Zukor should be listed for only $23,000, Mr. Root replied that Mr. Zukor "didn't want to ask for more than the amount his reduced salary gave him, just prior to receivership."

About 98 per cent of the money to be used in the purchase of Publix Enterprises' assets by Famous Theatres Corporation will revert to the Paramount-Publix estate, it was indicated at a hearing Wednesday.

In Boston this week Harry Le Baron Sampson and Samuel Pinanski asked the superior court to continue their receivership of the Olympia Theatres circuit, bankrupt subsidiary.

Cash improvement for the circuit and the Olympia Operating Co., since February 1, when the two receivers were named, amounts to $203,765, according to the second financial statement submitted by them this week. From July 2 to September 30, Olympia Theatres received $215,711, disbursed $129,171, and now has on hand $86,539, against $38,788 on hand on February 1. Olympia Operating Co. received $1,081,966 from operation of theatres; $25,331 from funds under attachments, and $175,912 cash on hand July 1, totaling $1,283,211. Disbursements were $1,022,724, leaving a balance of $260,486.

Federal Judge Marcus B. Campbell in Brooklyn Monday ruled that Realty Associates Security Corp., a bankrupt with a large creditor claim against Paramount Publix, and its affiliated companies must deposit with the clerk of the court sufficient funds to cover a $849,000 consolidated tax lien filed against the concern last week by the federal government.

Miss Pickford will appear four times daily and five times on Sunday in a part of the first act of "The Church Mouse," a play which she had been rehearsing in Hollywood. She expressed pleasure at being "back with Mr. Zukor," for whom she made many pictures in bygone days.

Moulin Rouge

(UA-20th Century)

Romance with Music

A snappy romance idea rather than music is the outstanding showmanship feature of this picture. Because of the theatre atmosphere of the theme, music and girl dance features are necessary, but in view of the number of attractions on the screen affording those values, best results with "Moulin Rouge" should come from emphasizing the comedy romance premise which motivates the story. Naturally the fact that Constance Bennett sings and dances should be called to public attention as it has a definite novelty value.

Here's the plot. Helen wants a musical career. Douglas, her husband, wants her to be a home wife. A French girl (dual role played by Miss Bennett) is imported for the role as Helen and Doug split up. Years before, the two girls, very much resembling each other, played small-time vaudeville as a sister act. It is easy for Helen to persuade the other girl to go on a love nest rendezvous with gigolo Ramon, as she fits into her show role. Both Doug and LeMaire, the producer, are entranced by the counterfeit French vision; a note of comedy injected as LeMaire begs Doug to plead his cause. The expected developments ensue, both the lovers acclaiming her a great artist both for her musical ability and her love-making proclivities. Hot as Doug gets for the exotic creature, memories of the missing Helen cool him off, and as the show opens with the Frenchman dragging his wife out of the theatre, Helen goes on to a triumph, finally revealing to LeMaire and Doug who she really is, with the on-the-spot Doug coming up with the tag gag, "I knew it all the time."

While zippy, the situations avoid becoming too daring as an air of suspense which audiences will understand complicates matters for Bennett's principal supports. The modern idea of the theme quickly suggests that the picture be sold with a modern appeal. Exploitation that suggests the comedy value of a man in love with his own wife, but thinking that she is some one else, can be gagged and tricked in all sorts of intriguing ways. Two song numbers, "Your Kisses in the Morning" and "Boulevard of Dreams," basis for the girl-dance sequences, which Miss Bennett sings, supported by Russ Colombo and the radioing Boswell Sisters, can be tied advantageously on to the comedy romance idea.

For the show's character, cast names are of more than ordinary importance as advertising assets. Miss Bennett's singing should prove a new attraction for her regular fans, and should make it possible for exhibitors to stir up a new interest in this personality. Tullio Carminati, recently in "Gallant Lady," and Franchot Tone in comedy roles, should be given a hefty plug, and Colombo and the Boswells, while appearing only in atmospheric bits, should be capitalized to the fullest extent.

Merchandising of the girl-spectacle eye appeal should be guided by patron reaction to the chain of musicals. If your audiences go for it, sell it enthusiastically. But if you are interested in getting a novel appeal into advance curiosity creating publicity, don't permit folk to be fooled by the title, but get that "wife or no wife, I'll be there tonight" tinkle in your ads in the most intriguing and colorful ways possible.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Miss Fane's Baby Is Stolen

(Paramount)

Drama

Here is a great picture, probably one of the most timely and impressive stories ever brought to the screen. A kidnap picture, it's packed with emotion stirring values. Poignantly realistic, and as indicated by the tensely-charged atmosphere at the preview, it is the type of thrilling, sympathy-arousing entertainment that should assure tremendous popularity with all classes of patrons in every type theatre. It is finely and convincingly presented; acting, direction and photography are excellent. A natural woman's picture because of its tear and sob qualities, it also is one that every man should see, as well as being of unusual value as a juvenile feature.

There is no drama in this picture other than the drama of real life, the mother love of a great picture star for her baby—the pride, joy and happiness that is hers while she is with him, the shivering terror that grips her when he is stolen. There is the fear that deters her from notifying the police, the fear that calls into action every recovery medium, and the heartlessness and menacing fear that saps the reckless bravery of the kidnapers. There's also the glorious courage of the poor woman, who, not considering her own safety, steals the child from the kidnapers to restore him to his mother, the thrill of swift, sure, legal justice, the happiness of a home where joy supplants tragedy. The picture is not depressing. Numbers of situations involving the children bring easing smiles and laughs.

Though this picture is motivated by the kidnap racket, it rises far above it. Naturally there will be a strong tendency to capitalize on current headline publicity. To a certain extent that advantage should be taken. But, remember that to many people, particularly women, the subject of kidnaping is anathema. Too heavy a concentration on that angle is quite apt to kill business to which the picture is logically entitled. There are other showmanship values that should receive more attention. Emphasize the heart-throb interest, the mother love, and handle her tragedy delicately. Build an advance campaign, one that bespeaks sincerity and dignity. Seek the cooperation of every influence-creating medium you command. Line up newspapers, public officials, social and civic leaders to ballyhoo the show. Impress them with the value of the production and request them to cooperate with you in calling it to the attention of the rank and file.

Recall that this picture is based on a Rupert Hughes' Cosmopolitan Magazine story, that the screen play was written by Adela Rogers St. John, writers noted for their studies of social conditions. If "Torch Singer" meant anything to your patrons, remind them that Alexander Hall, who made that picture, directed this one. The stricken mother is Dorothea Wieck of "Maedchen in Uniform" and "Cradle Song." Alice Brady is the poor farmer woman who rescues Baby Le Roy from the kidnapers, Alan Hale, Jack LaRue and Dorothy Burgess. "Spanky" McFarland of Our Gang note is the smart-cracking, sans pants little son of Alice Brady, who provokes so many smiles and laughs. They are the principals, finely supported by the other members of the cast. In story and cast value, "Miss Fane's Baby" offers everything to stimulate praise, honestly and legitimately, as a medium of stimulating patron appreciation. Big houses for the first showings should bring effective word-of-mouth advertising throughout the run.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Beloved

(Universal-Zeidman)

Music, Drama, Comedy

Serious entertainment, but beautiful and sincere, "Beloved" is the life story of a man who had two loves—good music and his wife. It is completely off the beaten track of the current musical trend. Classically motivated, it does not lack any of the entertainment elements in drama, thrill, topical comedy, the attraction of good music as contrasted to jazz, that leave lasting impresses on serious minded folk.

Carl Hausmann is born into a world of fine music, in Austria. Revolution drives the widowed mother and boy to America's old south. Dedicated to art, Carl woos Lucy, daughter of an aristocratic family. Soldier for the Lost Cause, he returns, claims his bride and goes to New York. His ambition to write the American Symphony, inspired by the country's growth and his war experiences, forces Lucy to work while he composes. A baby to be born, Carl becomes a music teacher, later a freak concert attraction, poison to his soul, a role he quits to become Bowery barroom piano player. The son Charles has no love for music, and as years pass, he wounds his father's artistic heart by seducing a young girl. Married, he dies in the Spanish-American war. Carl's grandson, Eric, being born as the mother dies. More years, Carl, aging, is a successful music teacher, his Symphony partly written. Eric has inherited his grandfather's love for music. But it is new music, the "Alexander's Rag Time Band" type, anathema to Carl. In the World War, Eric undergoes his grandfather's experiences, feels the muse of a new music. Home, he is a successful composer of jazz. Tragedy comes to Carl as Lucy dies, and as his publisher intimates that he is only copying Eric's style. Through Eric's influence, after his grandfather has left his house, he arranges for a rendition of Carl's symphony. It is an artistic and commercial success, but the old man dies in the Concert Hall in his moment of triumph, before he knows his glory.

This picture is high class entertainment, a prestige builder, but at the same time possessing sufficient value to command both exhibitor and audience appreciation. "Little Women" has amply demonstrated that theatregoers are receptive to clean, wholesome, inspiring entertainment. The mood of this picture is very similar to that of "Little Women." There is exciting color all the way through. Action, counterbalancing the dialogue, is interpreted by music that includes Chopin, Negro spirituals, martial Civil War tunes from "Roaming in the Gloaming," which transforms the bleary-eyed barroom mob into a group of soft-hearted listeners, down to the jazz of today.

"Beloved" affords an unusual opportunity to interest the lovers of good music in a motion picture. Every effort should be made to contact music schools, clubs, etc., not only promising them splendid entertainment, but obtaining their cooperation in arousing general interest, from the old folk right down to the children.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Comedy

Fast moving farcical and romantic comedy with plenty of fun in both action situations and dialogue indicates that this picture is strong program material with plenty of "sleeper" quality. While cast names are none too powerful, the various characters have been spotted ideally in roles which bring out the best features of their special talents. Continuously light and frothy, there is little seriousness in the picture, and even when the situations threaten complicated drama they are only further premises for smart, surprising fun.

The story plot is simple, yet permits much novel entertainment. Josef is Von Rommer's valet, well trained in the art of gay philandering by his noble master. Mistaken for the Count by Marie, a lady's maid whom Josef thinks an aristocrat, he gives her a merry time in the Count's Monte Carlo villa. Peppy and intriguing action predominating, situation builds its tempo as the Count escapes an embarrassing situation with the Countesses' husband to appear in the midst of Josef's love-making antics to assume the butler role. Eventually, the true characters are revealed, much to the surprise of the players and delight of the audiences.

The lively theme apparently exerted an inspiring influence on the players. Elissa Landi, particularly, appears to better advantage than in previous pictures. Similarly Paul Lukas and Nils Asther swung into the bubbling spirit.

That audience appreciation of the show should be reflected at the box office in a satisfying manner depends on how the picture is sold locally. Merely reiterating the "gay Viennese Monte Carlo romance" line won't do the full job. Tabbing it a "sleeper" for your information may suggest to you possibilities of smartly handling it in ways that accentuate its solid entertainment values. Get your patrons into a mood of expecting something smart and clever rather than torrid, by using the Elissa Landi, Lukas, Asther names to lure the ladies and by combining the title intent with lines that emphasize the sparkling romantic content. Concentrate heavily on the feminine contigent with tricky curiosity-creating lines in all exploitation media.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Wine, Women and Song

(State Rights—Chadwick)

Musical and Melodrama

A musical of stage life, yet a picture in which considerable emphasis is placed upon the plot, the exhibitor here has for sale a story of a mother's sacrifice of her life to protect the honor of her daughter as well as to give her an unclouded right to success.

The title, one brimful of familiarity and pertinent to the new era of legalized liquor, has a timely note and carries an atmosphere that fits the picture to the extent that Lew Cody is in the role of the producer who hands out starring careers for amorous value received, with champagne to make the conquest easier. Lilyan Tashman is the burlesque queen who cheats him with a deadly drug in the wine glass. These marginal notes in themselves reveal the melodramatic turn.

In those names—Lilyan Tashman and Lew Cody—are the billing cues, but the exhibitor should soft-pedal the problem of the over-melodramatic murder and suicide that takes off the two of them. Letters to "What the Picture Did for Me" department from time to time indicate the unfavorable reaction of patrons to gloomy demises of central characters.

Marjorie Moore, as the daughter, also represents excellent casting, with an appealing and sympathetic role as well as personality, which should draw the menfolk as well as the women.

Lilyan Tashman, inured to the hard road of burlesque and publicity, asks that Marjorie Moore, novitiate at St. Cecelia, be sent to her when her father dies. Marjorie arrives at the theatre just as a raid is pulled off, at the star's instigation and for publicity. Marjorie is taken in hand by a friend of her mother, and has an opportunity at once when one of the leads goes temperamental, at rehearsal.

Lew Cody, who owns the show, sees her and decides to build her up for stardom—at a price. Cody gets her intoxicated at a party. Miss Tashman spoils his plans but is taken with a heart attack and on doctor's orders cannot be removed from his apartment. The physician prescribes a powerful stimulant which would be fatal to a healthy heart. Miss Tashman agrees to let Cody have Marjorie, but not until after her big chance at success at the opening of the musical show. Marjorie is a triumph. Miss Tashman breaks a phial of the drug into his drink, and dies with him, leaving her daughter free to go on, with the faithful Mattie Kemp, dance director who gave her the first chance.

There are tuneful melodies by Conrad Mitchell and Gottler that can be promised to the patrons, in addition to the headliner names and the melodramatic story.

It is a picture for adults.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Jimmy and Sally

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

The popular and lively Jimmy, otherwise known as James Dunn, has built for himself a reputation for amusing, punchy portrayals which should permit the exhibitor to sell this picture without difficulty, particularly with the younger generation. Succeeding Sally Eilers as the other half of the team in this instance is Claire Trevor, attractive and blonde, who pairs well with Dunn.

As the would-be "big shot" advertising and publicity man for Marlowe Packing Company, Dunn gets himself in and out of trouble with remarkable rapidity, it all being conducive to lively entertainment. It is good program material, not unusual but well sprinkled with amusing situations.

The publicity stunts which Dunn develops should give an opportunity for similar stunting in the selling of the picture, making them as attention-attracting as possible, no matter how absurd they may be. A selling point lies in the vocalization by Dunn of a catchy and tuneful song number, which he handles in a likable manner, with a good voice. Reproduction of the number in the lobby via loud speakers should bring attention.

Dunn lives across the court from Miss Trevor. They are more or less engaged, and Miss Trevor is his assistant in the Marlowe publicity department, where she does most of the work aud supplies most of the ideas for the not too ambitious Jimmy. She sticks by him despite the efforts of their boss, Harvey Stephens, to usurp Dunn's place in her heart.

When Jimmy's job is in danger, she thinks of a great publicity idea, which turns out unfortunately when an elephant runs amuck. Jimmy is fired, while Miss Trevor is named to replace him. Jimmy, ever the great bluffer, opens a sumptuous suite of offices, but when the installment dealers strip the place, the two quarrel and Jimmy leaves town. In the East he takes a job shipping beef in another packing house, recovers considerable self-respect, and learns a lesson. Meanwhile, not hearing from him, Miss Trevor becomes engaged to Stephens. Dunn returns, and Marlowe promises to give him another chance, telling him to report to the publicity department. There Miss Trevor is coldly impersonal, until he begs for a chance to retrieve himself. The fadeout comes when he removes Stephens' ring from her finger and replaces it with his own.

There is a laugh sequence when Dunn, handling publicity for "a friend" of Marlowe's, a cabaret singer, Lya Lys, has the story spread that a handsome racketeer is her favorite. Three racketeers appear at the cabaret, and it's a case of may the best man win, with Dunn and Marlowe landing on their backs in the gutter.

It is typical James Dunn material, which should indicate to the exhibitor what he has to sell. Miss Trevor should be well billed, since she undoubtedly will meet expectations. Exploitation based on Dunn's job and the "accidents" to his stunts, with a bit of emphasis on Dunn's singing, should attract patronage.—AARONSON, New York.

If I Were Free

(RKO Radio)

Drama

Immediately apparent, as far as the exhibitor playing to the regular run of motion picture patronage is concerned, is this picture's strong cast on the one hand and its sophistication and lack of action on the other. Exhibitors should make the most of the cast in the selling of the film.

It is drama of the nature of a stage play with setting transformed to the screen, for the most part indoor and with little opportunity taken for achieving the broad backgrounds possible. It is a problem play on the screen, with able performers handling their roles intelligently. In short, it is good drama, but lacking in action. The origin of the picture, the play, "Behold, We Live," by John Van Druten, in all probability will mean little to the patronage, but it may be mentioned in the selling.

Two strong marquee names head the cast, Irene Dunne and Clive Brook, supported by Nils Asther, Laura Hope Crews, in a minor role, and Henry Stephenson. The story revolves about the mental struggle of Brook and Miss Dunne, with Asther as one cause of the trouble but appearing in only a few sequences in the picture.

The story opens in Paris. At the apartment of Miss Dunne and her husband, Asther, is the incongruous scene of Asther attempting, at the point of a gun, to force Miss Dunne to accompany him to Cannes, there to meet Asther's mistress. Brook is seen with his friend, Stephenson, wandering the cafes. It is understood he is a promising London attorney, separated from his wife and with no aim in life. Brook and Miss Dunne meet that evening, as Asther goes to Cannes, and the two decide to leave for London, seeking a new lease on life. Miss Dunne obtains a divorce, sets up as an interior decorator and the two become increasingly attracted to each other, though Brook's wife refused to divorce him.

Stephenson seeks to break their friendship, fearing gossip as an obstacle to Brook's elevation to the bench. Miss Dunne acquiesces, and Brook learns he has but one year to live, unless an operation, with odds against him, is successfully performed. Miss Dunne changes her mind when she learns Brook has left for the hospital, and goes there with Miss Crews, Brook's mother, who is friendly toward her, and there meets Brook's wife. Recognizing her defeat, the wife leaves, and Miss Dunne, singing at the bedside, brings Brook to recovery.

The rehabilitation of two lives forms the central theme of the picture, both disturbed by unhappy marital conditions, both seeing no way out, until they meet, and finding a way out together, despite obstacles. That theme is obviously more apt to appeal to women than men, and on the women the exhibitor should concentrate for his draw at the box office, relying on the feminine contingent to bring in the men. It is exclusively adult material, best played in a midweek position.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. Directed by Elliott Nugent. From the play, "Behold, We Live," by John Van Druten. Screen play by Dwight Taylor. Associate producer, Kenneth MacGowan. Editor, Arthur Roberts. Photographer, Edward Cronjager. Art directors, Van Nest Polglase, Charles Kirk. Sound, George D. Ellis. Musical director, Max Steiner. Release date, December 1, 1933. Western

The exhibitor here should be able to promise satisfactory entertainment to audiences which derive an hour's enjoyment from the yarns of the fast-riding, quick-shooting, whoop-'em-up cowboys of the screen's great outdoors. It is cut to pattern, but so are they all to a certain extent, and this has enough excitement, enough punch and sufficient action to fill the bill for the regular run of "western" patronage.

The physically attractive John Wayne has the lead, supported by a young newcomer, Nancy Shubert. Lane Chandler, Yakima Canutt, Wally Wales, Robert E. Burns are among the others, all western standbys.

Wayne supplies all the riding thrills the fans want, hopping from saddle to ground—and other men's necks—and back to the saddle with regularity. Of necessity it will have to be sold along more or less conventional lines for the type of film it is, with what angles the exhibitor may be able to work up out of a resume of the story.

Wayne, sentenced to prison for a murder he did not commit, escapes and goes west, in search of the man whose silence was the cause of the erroneous sentence. Pursued by the sheriff, he makes good an escape with the aid of a stranger, who takes him to an outlaw camp, there to join the gang. The two, Wayne and Chandler, become fast friends, and both are attracted to Miss Shubert, the daughter of the storekeeper in the neighboring town. Wayne learns that Chandler is the man he has been looking for, and also discovers that Chandler's failure to save him was due to lack of knowledge of Wayne's predicament. Wayne forestalls two holdups on the part of the gang and tries to steer Chandler straight. Chandler thinks Wayne has double-crossed him and sends him into a gang ambush, but learning the truth from Miss Shubert, sends her for the sheriff, while he rides to head Wayne off.

The exhibitor may well promise his audience an hour of fast action and plenty of the gun play, hard riding, good scenery and scraps that make up the backbone of the western. The week-end is the spot to play it, of course.—AARONSON, New York.

Musical Moods

(Audio Productions)

Excellent Material

Audio Productions, putting into fact an idea which is in effect an exhibition innovation, is producing a series of 13 short subjects, under the general title "Musical Moods," of which the first five were shown this week. Based on the belief that a change of pace in program subject matter should be of value in quieting an audience, settling it for the feature, and for a moment offsetting the fast pace of the average program, they have reproduced these musical masterpieces, with a visual accompaniment. In other words, a screen background appropriate to the mood of the music in each case. The five are "Waters of Minnetonka," by Lieurance; "Dance of the Hours," by Ponchielli; "Ave Maria," of Bach and Gounod; "Waltz in A Flat Minor," of Brahms, and In the first, the "visual accompaniment" is in two-color Technicolor, with beautiful scenic effects. The others are black and white. "Ave Maria" is accompanied with shots of the interior of a cathedral. The Brahms piece has a graceful classical dance by Desha, and the last a group of Hula dancers against a background of the sea. In every case the musical reproduction is flawless, and the screen accompaniment of most unusual quality. The idea, and its reality in this series, would appear to be very definitely worth close attention and experimentation on the part of the enterprising exhibitor. The subjects vary from three to 10 minutes each.—AARONSON, New York.

Manhattan Clock-tale

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

There is entertaining music and vocal material, plus a touch of comedy, in this lengthy subject of the musical variety. Norma Terris, radio singer, is the number's star, and her daily round is pictured from rising to retiring. The subject opens with a chorus number based on the clock theme, then Miss Terris is seen, avidly pursued by a persistent swain, as she goes from broadcasting studio to department store, where she autographs records, to the studio again, the theatre where she is starring, a night club where she does two impersonations and then home, finally to succumb to the suitor in the wee hours of the morning. It is a novel idea, well and entertainingly executed and enjoyable.—Running time, 30 minutes.

Scouring the Seven Seas

(Fox)

Sea Drama

The drama of the terrible sea disaster, and the havoc which is so often wrought on sea coasts the world over by the crushing power of the ocean, is here recorded in thrilling highlights from the inevitable newsreel, in one of the Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman series. The burning of the S. S. Atlantique off England, shots on the deck of the ship in a heavy sea, a destroyer on the rocks, a flaming oil tanker, typhoons, all are here in the drama of actuality. Racy dialogue by Lew Lehr keeps pace. Unusual stuff worth unusual exhibitor attention for a short subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Pathe Review

(Radio)

Interesting

There is considerable general interest and appeal in this, Number 2 of the Review series, which is highlighted by a pictorial description of the theory of the birth of the earth and other planets; the rabbit who becomes friendly with various other animals in highly entertaining fashion. The other subjects are a lecture on the sneeze by Robert Wildhack and a group of girls yachting off the British Isles.—Running time, 10 minutes.

THE BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS FOR NOVEMBER

● Seven productions are ranked as the Box Office Champions for November, and of these, four share their positions, two being tied in third place, and two others in fifth. Brother Can You Spare a Million
(Columbia)
Amusing

Considerable amusement in situation makes this comedy an amusing number. Burlesquing financial investigations, with Ken Murray as the featured player and big banker, the short is set in an investigation chamber. The spectators at the hearing applaud the remarks of the prosecuting attorney and Murray, while a scorekeeper keeps check. Boys sell peanuts and pop, Murray's 20 partners go into a quick huddle when necessary, and the defense and prosecuting attorneys indulge on occasion in a fast few minutes, with an attendant handling the bell and stop watch. Timely and fairly well executed, the short should evoke audience laughs in considerable quantity.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Big Casino
(Universal)
Fair

Various entertainers have their moments on the screen in this Mentone film for Universal, in the setting of a racketeer's apartment. Rex Weber, as the big shot, hears about a Greek who can produce "pineapples" of unusual quality. When a threatening letter arrives from a rival gangster, he decides to await the pineapples, meanwhile having entertainment brought to him at the point of guns. Among them are the Donovan Sisters, Tita Guizar, Charles Lawrence, Mary Francis, the Chester Hale Girls and several others. Weber himself sings a number as the Greek arrives—with real pineapples. The gangster burlesque has little enough to it, while the successive entertainers are fair, each with a minute on the screen.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Laughs in the Law
(Vitaphone)
Novel

Something of a short subject novelty is embodied in this subject. A group of youngsters are before the court for playing baseball on Sunday. The attorney for the defense points out the absurdity of the law and numerous others still on the statute books of numerous states. In burlesqued short sequences is shown what would happen if they all were enforced. It is a novel idea, fairly well executed, and should prove salable particularly in those communities where such legal anachronisms still exist.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Paramount Pictorial
(Paramount)
Interesting

Highlighted with a pictorial gem in the form of a group of shots depicting night scenes in and about Manhattan Island, this, Number 4 of the series, contains material of rather normal interest. Seen also are the several varieties of crab, in their native habitat on the floor of the sea, with a clear indication of the manner in which nature has provided camouflage and protection for the crawling inhabitants of the sea. Good for a short spot on almost any bill.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Island of Malta
(Fox)
Interesting

Of rather usual interest is this pictorial description of the Island of Malta, British crown possession and impregnable Mediterranean naval base of His Majesty's fleet. Though Fox, in this new group of the Magic Carpet of Movietone series, has introduced some small measure of enlightening dialogue, which enhances the subjects, a policy of permitting the picture to speak for itself is still followed to a large extent. On the tiny rock-bound island are seen the bustling, active inhabitants, girls making the famous lace of the island, the armory, in which are still preserved the armour of the Crusading Knights of the Maltese Cross, the fleet steaming into harbor, and a shore review. An interesting subject, well executed.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Meeting Mazie
(Universal)
Poor Comedy

The timid, nervous boy, meeting and being mauled by the big, husky blonde, from chair to settee and from settee to floor, plus the usual chase by the irate, shooting husband, forms the not too enterprising or novel yarn about which the comedy is drawn. Sterling Holloway, who is more entertaining in occasional bits than in two reels, wrings his hands about the set, as he puts his foot into it trying to help Eddie Nugent out of a difficult spot with his sweetheart. With comparatively few laugh spots, and containing much in the nature of slapstick, the comedy rates as rather weak.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Here Comes Flossie
(Vitaphone)
Good Comedy

As comedies go, this rates as amusing material, with Ben Blue, comedian, as the handy man of frozen face and "dumb" action, on the farm. The farmer's two sons receive $50 each from the old man, one orders a wife, the other a prize cow, and both are named Flossie. When they arrive Blue gets directions slightly mixed, putting the girl in the barn and the cow in the guest room. The old man tricks the boys, both of whom want the girl, by planning to run away with her, but Blue crosses them all by doing it himself. A number of laughs, and an amusing situation, serve to make it a good comedy.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Conquest of the Air
(Fox)
Air Excitement

Into the air for this number of the Adventures of the Newsreel Cameraman went the picture box to get these shots hot from heaven, and they pack punch and thrill as the cameras catch bombers at work on sea and land targets; parachute jumpers, free and in chairs; army formations, stunting close to the earth, all from unusual angles. There is a laugh in odd experiments of would-be birdmen, and a breathless gasp in a few crashes, of a racing plane, Captain Fonk's crackup, a fatal glider flight, and the landing plane which crashed into a group of cameramen. Unusual, spectacular, these exciting subjects are worth exhibitor attention.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Harry Warren, Composer
(Vitaphone)
Fair

One of the musical numbers, introducing a popular song writer, in this case Harry Warren, whose most noted recent melody was "42nd Street." In the setting of a sumptuous living room, a party in progress, Mr. Warren at the piano plays numerous of his well known melodies, while vocalization and a bit of dancing enhance the effect. Warren's name should make the short salable.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Out of Gas
(Universal)
Uncomic Comedy

Louise Fazenda, who once had her bright comedy moments, labors valiantly in this supposed comedy, but fares badly, what with a yarn which has as its most conspicuous characteristic an utter lack of laughs, in situation and dialogue. Something about a blind date, who turns out to be a roughneck, peeping iceman; a walk home, mustard footbaths, a closing bed and the professor in the adjoining apartment, plus considerable unfunny roughhouse, comprise the ingredients. It is all not very entertaining, and certainly not funny.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Death Attends a Party
(Columbia)
Salable

Based on a syndicated newspaper feature, Minute Mysteries, by H. A. Ripley, this series, produced for Columbia by Bray Pictures, presents salable material in that it may be used to intrigue the attention of the audience, challenging their powers of detection. A situation, facts, clues are pictorially presented as a criminologist examines the scene of what appears to be a suicide. He declares it murder, and the audience is given 10 seconds to discover why, mentally, before the detective divulges the reason. It is the kind of short subject material which can be sold.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Cocoon to Butterfly
(Principal)
Interesting

Nature again under the microscope as the evolution of the multi-colored butterfly is traced before the seeing eye of the motion picture camera. From egg to caterpillar, then to cocoon and finally the emergence of the butterfly is pictured with care and attention to detail. School children might well be drawn into the theatre if the attention of authorities is called to the subject in connection with their studies. There are, as well, elements of general interest in the number.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Autobuyography
(Radio)
Fair

A fairly amusing comedy in which Leon Erroll of the undependable legs is lured into the lair of an automobile salesroom, and there "taken for a ride," to the tune of a $2,000 car. The new acquisition very soon is in trouble, and various towing complications result in the car being taken away in two separate parts. When he gets a lift, he finds a smoothly running automobile, and its owner boastful, then discovers his own traded-in car. Not many laughs, but a fair comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Hollywood on Parade
(Paramount)
Fan Interest

There is approximately the usual amount of film fan interest in this number of the familiar series. Seen in various poses and odd moments are Jack Oakie, heading a bevy of girls on bicycles; Roscoe Ates leading them in exercises, and flashes of Will Rogers, Ann Dvorak, John Boles, Dorothy Jordon and others. The short ends with a toy automobile race between Jackie Cooper, Groucho and Harpo Marx. The sort of things fans are apt to like.—Running time, 11 minutes.

Yeast Is Yeast
(Vitaphone)
Fair

Tom Patricola and his pal, sailors aboard a ship, are wrecked, marooned on a desert island, where "natives," men and girls, go through various of the dance routines popular in the cinema musical comedy of today. The comedy is considerably weak, lacking punch, pep and real laughs in any quantity, but the dance numbers are effectively done. The pair usurp the throne of the incumbent, being enormously taken with the "natives." It all makes for fairly diverting entertainment.—Running time, 20 minutes.

As the new year approaches optimism reigns along Film Row over the prospects for 1934. Exchange managers are encouraged over the fact that studios are turning out better pictures and exhibitors are happy that reemployment under NRA will make itself felt at the box office.

There's plenty of enthusiasm over at the Warner offices for the "Go-Id Getters" drive which opens January 1 and runs to February 24. On a Manchurian trip, Mr. Hummel consummated deals with first runs in Dairen, Harbin, Mukden and Ksinking, the Manchurian capital. In Shanghai, the Warner executive arranged first run deals for Shanghai, Hong Kong, Canton, Tsientsin and Peiping. He also supervised the opening of the new Shanghai exchange.

Breen Causes 780 Script Changes on Coast in Week

Joe Breen, representative of the MPPDA in Hollywood, and substituting for Dr. James Wingate, has caused approximately 780 changes in film scripts in preparation and in scenes already made for films now in production within one week after beginning activity. Step Up

YOUR MAN POWER

Greater opportunities exist today for producers and distributors of Motion Pictures to augment their organization with experienced, capable and resourceful publicity men, than at any time in the past ten years.

Industry events, mergers and decentralizations have created a situation where active companies may select unusual man-power during this brief re-adjustment period.

Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., in full understanding of all circumstances, are seeking diligently to raise the standard of motion picture publicity and advertising in all branches of our industry.

Men of experience, some of whom in the past have handled outstanding, profit-making attractions, are being recommended by the AMPA to employers who have the vision to take advantage of the current unusual condition.

Our committee has a registration bureau ready and eager to give advice and assistance to those who will take advantage of the present opportunity to "step up their man-power."

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 203.—(A) By what means are lenses corrected for chromatic and spherical aberrations? (B) Just why does a lens pin point of surface offer an entirely different viewpoint, as seen by opticians, from every other pin point on the surface of the same lens? (C) Assuming a glass to have perfectly even density, will or will not a ray of light travel in a perfectly straight line from surface to surface, once it has entered the glass? (D) Why is it imperatively necessary to perfection of action that lens surfaces be optically perfect, and perfect in curvature? Explain. (Note: Some questions will be very difficult for those not owning or having access to a Bluebook. However, for the benefit of the few non-owners, I will make optical questions as simple as possible.)

Answer to Question No. 197

Bluebook School Question No. 197 was: (A) Quote the law that deals with light intensity at different distances from an open light source. (B) By what simple demonstration, available to every projectionist, is it possible to prove the correctness of this law? (C) Explain the action illustrated in Figure 27-A, page 126, volume 1 of the Bluebook, as applied to light collecting power of a condenser collector lens or mirror. (D) Name and describe the various elements of the projector optical train.

The following made good: S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; L. Van Buskirk and E. Kroll; H. H. Menefee; D. Danielson; J. Wentworth; K. Dowling; P. Gaeth, Jr., T. VanVaulkenburg; H. Edwards; W. Coates; L. B. and D. H. Palmer; U. L. Danielson; S. N. Tailor; T. H. Morton and F. B. Klar; G. M. Michelson; W. T. Granger and A. Wythe; H. Rogers; D. Danielson and H. Pilson; L. M. Richards; K. L. Hess; L. G. Gregeson and J. Hendershot; D. L. Sinklow; F. L. Benton; B. J. Lyons; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; F. L. Granby; L. Grant and R. Geddings; D. Little and J. H. Rathburn; L. Jones and B. L. Banning; D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant; H. D. Tyler; M. Henderson and D. Singleton; J. L. and F. Hanson; M. F. Fallon; G. Tinlin; R. L. Mitchel; T. Turk; L. Jacobs; L. D. Rubin; M. R. Lovejoy; H. True; L. M. Oglesby and Son; W. and S. F. Love; M. L. DeVoy.

We will let S. Evans and C. Rau answer Section A. They say, "The law dealing with light intensity at different distances from an open light source reads: 'Light intensity decreases inversely as the square of the distance from its source'."

(B) The following is correct and is set forth in more than six hundred answers, though in different words and with varying base dimensions:

"The correctness of the inverse square law may be demonstrated as follows: By holding a small square of opaque material at different distances from an open light source, such as an incandescent lamp or a candle located several feet from a wall or screen, it will be found that as the distance of the object from the screen or wall is varied within certain limits, the resultant shadow cast will conform in area exactly with the law. For example, if the light be nine feet from the wall, and an object six inches square be held 27 inches from the light and square therewith, the shadow will be 96 inches square, or 16 times as large as the object. This would only hold precisely true with a point light source, but with a candle flame or incandescent filament the variation would be but little."

(C) D. Danielson answers thus: "Light from a point source travels in straight, diverging lines so long as the medium be transparent and of even density, hence the further the distance from the source the less of them would be incident upon or pass through any given area, which of course means that as distance is increased, illumination per unit of area is decreased. In Fig. 27-A, page 126, volume 1 of the Bluebook, this action is made clear. Counting the lines representing light rays, we find 31 of them are incident upon screen A—the one nearest to the light. At screen B, located farther away, we find that only 19 of them fall upon it, hence the illumination can be only 19-33ds as much as at screen A. At screen C collects only 13 rays, or 13-33ds as much light as screen A. All screens are the same size, but B is twice as far from the light source as A, and C three times as far."

(D) D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant say: "The projector optical train is a two-element optical system, one of which receives its light from the other through an aperture of restricted size, and through openings in a rotating shutter, which eliminates approximately fifty per cent of the total light.

"The first system may consist of a two-lens condenser, of any one of several types, one of which collects diverging rays from the light source, and sends them forward to the other, which converges the light into a beam that is concentrated upon the projector aperture. Or it may consist of a spherical elliptical or parabolic mirror which collects the light and reflects it back, either in a parallel beam to a thin, one-lens condenser which converges it upon the spot, or directly back in a converging beam upon the projector aperture and colling plate.

"The second system consists of a compound lens, usually of four elements, contained in a suitable holding metallic casing or 'barrel.' This lens is highly corrected for spherical, chromatic and other aberrations. It receives cone-shaped beams from each tiny point in the film photograph and so acts upon them that they are all sent forward and focused at a spot on the receiving screen corresponding to a magnified duplicate of the spot in the film photograph they passed through, so that, since thousands of these beams go forward, each to exactly its appointed spot (if the lens be a good one), we have upon the screen a magnified duplicate of the photograph at the projector aperture."

DEAR HERALD:

Being cooped up in the house day after day and week after week, with nothing to do but listen to the canaries cussing one another, the radio squalling out some jazz selection with a crooner bringing up your blood pressure, while April Shower is shivering outside waiting for you to come out and warm her up, is not the most pleasant occupation in the world. Jevver try it? Well, don't do it. We warn ye, don't do it.

But here comes a letter from our old friend, Gene Yarnell, manager of the Ionia theatre at Ionia, Mich., and drags our mind back over an expanse of years to the days of the "rag operas" and the days of the "kerosene circuits" when a bunch of ham actors were "just off Broadway" and only playing the "tanks" to fill in some time.

Do We Remember!

Gene was the managing agent of several "Broadway Successes" and wants to know if we still remember when he played our house with "The Wolf," "Tess of the Storm Country," "The Arab," "House of a Thousand Candles," "The Divorce Question" and "The Climax"? Do we remember them? Yes, and we also remember "Uncle Josh Spruceby," "Along the Kennebec," "Tilly Olson" and a score of others, and we'd like to go back to those days again and play some more of those old favorites and praise 'em, or burn 'em up, in the Opera House Reporter.

Do you remember the old Opera House Reporter, Gene? And Bill Bruno and George H. Bubb, who guided the destinies of that famous sheet, and L. C. Zelano, who performed the last sad rites over its emaciated remains? Boy, those were the days that "tried men's souls."

Then came the "canned opera." John Bunny and Flora Finch shone forth in all their glory. Broncho Billy would kill five in the first reel and seven in the second. Alkali Ike would cut up capers that would throw the audience into hysterics, and the jingle of dimes and nickels at the box office brought joy to the manager's heart and the future looked bright and rosy.

Service for $18 a Week

We bought our service for $18 per week with a daily change if desired, and we could have six reels or a dozen, and we took a T-bone steak home for dinner, while today a chunk of liver would look like a Thanksgiving feast.

But time moved on apace. Came the time when D. W. Griffith gave us "The Birth of a Nation" with Henry B. Walthall, our old shooting pal, as "The Little Colonel," and then "The Battle Cry of Peace," which pictures grossed so much coin that producers began setting their sights in the clouds, and pyramiding started.

But why deal with the past? "Let the dead past bury its dead." Yet comparisons may be in order. Last night we saw "Meet the Baron" with Jack Pearl and "Snozzle" Durante and it brought our blood pressure up 20 points, and that's too high. Further than that we're sound asleep.

Gene says that two years ago we came within 18 miles of Ionia and didn't come and call on him. He says he and his wife had framed up a surprise for us and had prepared a regular "Homecoming" for us.

That's too bad, Gene, but you know we can't hit all the spots, no matter how hard we try, but look out for us next summer: we hope to be in to see you. Give our regards to Mrs. Yarnell, who you say was one of the Lambert sisters, but you didn't say which one, and we are wondering if she is the one who threw a water pitcher at us once for giving the star dressing-room to another actress. You know those stars sometimes did not, that's why we have always been such a good dodger.

Speaking of what people had to be thankful for last Thanksgiving, James Cunningham in his "Asides & Interludes" says, among other things, that we were thankful for "Letters from Exhibitors." Oh, yeah! Well, that wasn't all we had to be thankful for, Jimmy; we were thankful that we could still read your "Asides & Interludes," something we hope to never miss, and something everybody ought to do.

Says Stettmund

Ho ho! Oklahoma speaks. Our old sidekick, Gerald Stettmund, of the Odeon theatre at Chandler, comes across with a letter and says he is sorry to learn that we are laid up and hopes for our speedy recovery. (Pardon us, Abner, if we digress right here to say that there are a lot of you guys who are too doggone lazy to even write us a postal card.) Gerald says he thinks of us twice a week, once on Mondays when his HERALD fails to arrive, and once on Tuesdays when he gets it and turns to our page to see where we are and what we've got to say. Well, when they only think of us twice a week it looks like the depression had hit our stock and it had taken a nosedive into the cellar. What's the matter with you birds? Have you all turned "Bears" on our stock?

Gerald says that the increase in price of cotton has made business better than it has been in three years. That's good news, and we hope that is the condition all over the cotton belt, and we hope that Gerald mends his ways and stops fussing with his wife because she don't bake him a huckleberry pie every day. There's no sense in a man acting that way. And we hope also that he still has his cellar well stocked with the "vintage of '93" as he usually does.

And the Code—

Well, at last the "Code" is here. It has been hashed and re-hashed, cussed and discussed until it looks like everybody in the business has had something to do with its birth except the exhibitors. They can prove an alibi. Eddie Cantor says it is all right, that he has looked it over and approved it. Eddie ought to know, and we are now assured that we are not going to "drift back to slavery days," a thing we have feared all along. It's a great document, but it fails to mention Moses leading them out of the wilderness.

And now Christmas is only two weeks away, and by the time this is in print, if it ever is, it will probably have come and gone, but we are sending our best wishes to you all for peace, prosperity and happiness for the coming season. We have made a lot of mistakes in the past, and so have you, and there is no use for you to deny it, but the mistakes of the past may serve to strengthen us for better things in the future. We hope for you all the good things you are entitled to, and that ought to be aplenty; therefore,

Since Christmas comes but once a year,
We hope you all feel gay.
But from whiskey, wine and gin and beer
'Tis best to keep away.

But if "Tom and Jerry" comes around
To make you all feel fine,
Just keep both feet upon the ground
And sing "Sweet Adeline."

It's not the most pleasant thing to do to sit in the house with nothing to do but read until your eyes get tired while all the rest of the world is out planning for the Christmas festivities. But that's our case, and about the most satisfying thing we can do is to think of the pleasant times we have had with exhibitors, here, there and everywhere scattered over this mundane sphere.

Some one expressed our feelings when he wrote:

"ALL TO MYSELF"

"All to myself I think of you,
Think of the things we used to do.
Think of the things we used to say,
Think of each happy yesterday.
Sometimes I sigh, sometimes I smile,
When I think of each olden, golden while
All to myself."

But speaking of Christmas and the Christmas season, we are wont to say—

When Christmas comes we hope your cares will be Just like the leaves upon the forest tree,
That flutter lifeless to the ground
When old Jack Frost doth make his round.
We hope that you will thrill again
To "Peace on earth, good will to men,"
And we hope that you will all feel fine
Again this year at Christmas time.

BRITISH CONTRIBUTION TO HO-HUM COLUMNS

London's Board of Film Censors, after viewing "The Power and the Glory," affirms it for public exhibition, but took exception to the title. Said it was blasfeemious or sump'n.

So Fox took out the definite articles, rechristened the picture "Power and Glory," and the censor said okay!

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

ABOVE THE CLOUDS: Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Wilson—Nice program picture with Cromwell and Robert Armstrong delivering their usual good acting. Plenty good action and thrills. Columbia is "regular." Business great. Played Nov. 29-30.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

AIR HOSTESS: Evalyn Knapp, James Murray—Good air picture with different slant.—M. P. Foster, Granade Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

DANGEROUS CROSSROADS: Frank Albertson, Chic Sale, Diane Sinclair—A dandy Friday and Saturday program. We need more pictures of this type.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

FURY OF THE JUNGLE: Donald Cook, Peggy Shannon—A little gruesome, but seemed to please.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson,, Iowa. Rural patronage.

HELLO TROUBLE: Buck Jones—Typical Jones picture. Good business. Everyone pleased.—Harold Carson, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

LADY FOR A DAY: Warren William, May Robson—As fine a picture as was ever made. May Robson proved herself a capable actress. Good support. Drew good business and pleased everyone.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MASTER OF MEN: Jack Holt—A very good Friday and Saturday picture for us. Not so much action, but a good tense story that holds one's interest. Drew fair business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Nov. 24-25.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MASTER OF MEN: Jack Holt, Fay Wray—Was fairly well received.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

RUSTY RIDES ALONE: Tim McCoy, Barbara Weeks—Another good western from Columbia.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

SO THIS IS AFRICA: Wheeler and Woolsey—This picture pulled us out of a bad hole and we had a stock company in a tent for opposition, so there's nothing else to say. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 12.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Mining country.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey, Anita Page—A splendid aeroplane picture. Good story and great work by both stars and whole cast. Good program picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SOLDIERS OF THE STORM: Regis Toomey—Fairly good picture. Played on midweek to good business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

WHAT PRICE INNOCENCE?: Jean Parker, Willard Mack—A wonderful picture that should be shown in every theatre in America. We showed it to adult patronage and stacked them in. However, there's nothing in the picture to warrant excluding children. Running time, 64 minutes. Played Nov. 19.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Mining country.

WRECKER, THE: Jack Holt—Just fair. People like Holt in pictures with more action. These triangle affairs are not suitable for this good star, in my opinion.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa.. Rural patronage.

Empire

SALLY IN OUR ALLEY: Gracie Fields—Not up to the standard of "looking on the bright side," but good entertainment nevertheless. Suits old country audiences best, as they can appreciate the type of humor throughout the picture. No better than average business. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Nov. 24-25.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

First National

BUREAU OF MISSING PERSONS: Lewis Stone—One of the best program pictures we have played in a long time. Story very interesting. All the cast extra good. Lewis Stone great and wonderful cast to help make a very entertaining program. Played Dec. 5-6.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ELMER THE GREAT: Joe E. Brown—Fair Saturday business. (That doesn't mean much any more). I call this good entertainment. Played Nov. 17-18.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

FEMALE: Ruth Chatterton—This is Chatterton's best. Deals with the old problem of sex in the office but reverses it by having the girl the boss and the innocent young thing the man in the case. It has humor and a real lesson well told. I thought the direction superior but am dub enough to have forgotten who directed it. Universally enjoyed.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SHE HAD TO SAY YES: Loretta Young—Played this with "Life in the Raw" on a double bill Saturday and gave good satisfaction. Both pictures are very good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WILD BOYS OF THE ROAD: Dorothy Coonan, Frankie Darro—This is a great show. Along the same line as "This Day and Age," though not as big a picture. It should be shown in every C.C.C. camp in the country. It will interest old and young. —Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

Fox

ADORABLE: Janet Gaynor, Henry Garat—I was very agreeably surprised in this production, as I had heard so much criticism. This is a fantastic story and I would not want too many like it, but found it a welcome change from the over-sophisticated plays and the audience seemed to like it. Fine music, good acting and plenty of comedy. The skating scene is especially good. What I call an excellent production. Running time, 83 minutes. Played November 29-30.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BONDAGE: Dorothy Jordan—Some say it's good, others bad. It won't please many. With a strong cast it would be a good show. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 6.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

CHARLEY CHAN'S GREATEST CASE: Warner Oland—A murder mystery that pleased. Although at times the action seemed to drag, the suspense is maintained to the end. Charley Chan's quaint sayings are good for a number of laughs. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Dec. 8-9.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Neighborhood patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—A very fine picture for small town patrons from every standpoint. Drew well against very strong competition. Some said they liked it better than "State Fair." The Fox program is pleasing our patrons. The Fox Cleveland branch office is giving us as near 100% service as is humanly possible. Running time, 77 minutes. Played Dec. 5-6.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

HOLD ME TIGHT: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—A good little program picture. Gave general satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HOOPLA: Clara Bow—Hello Clara, thought you said goodbye a long time ago. You did as far as my patrons were concerned. Picture just so-so. Same old '76 type of story. Some liked it, others said nay, and many said "I can't see Clara Bow." Maybe my patrons are tough in their likes in this little spot, but this is how I found it. Running time, 80 minutes.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

HUMANITY: Boots Mallory, Alexander Kirkland—Not a special, but a good, clean picture that pleased the family night attendance. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 6-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LAST TRAIL, THE: George O'Brien—a good western that drew some extra business. Not as good as "Life in the Raw," but so much better than the westerns produced by other companies that it is outstanding. The comedy relief furnished by El Brendel is amusing. My patrons are in hopes that George O'Brien's action in selling his ranch, horses, etc., last month, does not mean that he is abandoning westerns. Running time, 61 minutes. Played Nov. 17-18.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Neighborhood patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—One of the best pictures O'Brien has ever made.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LIFE IN THE RAW: George O'Brien—Played this on a double bill Saturday with "She Had to Say Yes" and gave good satisfaction. Both pictures are very good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

ME AND MY GAL: Joan Bennett, Spencer Tracy—Absolutely no good. Dirty all through. Why, oh why, do they try to make a picture out of such. With such a picture and pictures it's no wonder that the exhibitors are fighting block booking. There will come a day when each picture will have to be sold on its merits. Then such as "Me and My Gal" will remain in a nice tin can where it belongs.—Russell C. Dey, Reedville Movies, Reedville, Va. General patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey—Drew well and pleased ninety per cent of my audience. Plenty of good laughs and an abundance of beautifully dressed girls. Charles Butterworth ran away with the show. Fox's new star, Lilian Harvey, is easy to look at and has a pleasing voice. She will improve with experience. Running time, 74 minutes. Played Dec. 1-2.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

MY WEAKNESS: Lilian Harvey, Lew Ayres—Book this before "My Lips Betray" and it will help the latter, as Lilian Harvey is a new type and they'll like her in this musical comedy romance. No dancing, but good songs, a fashion show and plenty of laughs. Light stuff about a scrub girl made beautiful with clothes and a ready made personality.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

OLSEN'S BIG MOMENT: El Brendel—If Olson had a big moment, I don't know where it was. My audience failed to find it. To my mind just a waste of film. If this is the best Brendel can do they had better keep him in bits. Running time, 67 minutes. Played November 26.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

POWER AND THE GLORY: Spencer Tracy, Colleen Moore—The much heralded narratage picture. It is a good picture all right, but it did not do business for some reason. The narratage business is not so hot. They did not go for it very strong as far as these big pictures such as "Power and the Glory" and "Pilgrimage." I'll take a "Rafter Romance" and smart comedies for mine and the box office too. "Power and the Glory" flopped the worst of any except "Pilgrimage." Two in a row.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—Here's a little picture that is chock full of entertainment. Had several regular patrons say it was the best picture for a long time. It's fast in action, clean and wholesome. Miss Trevor is excellent, and Jimmy good as ever. They make a fine team. Hope we have them together again. Jimmy made a hit with his song. Played December 3-4.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—A dandy little picture of the type of "Hold Me Tight." Claire Trevor played her part very well and is a very able actress. Running time, 68 minutes. Played December 2.—J. N. Creswell, Opera House, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

JIMMY AND SALLY: James Dunn, Claire Trevor—

They will all expect this to be Dunn and Eilers but he has Claire Trevor for "Sally." Typical Dunn stuff, three good songs. Their disappointment in not finding Dunn and Eilers together hurts this picture.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

SMOKE LIGHTNING: George O'Brien—Very good western. Average business.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Oil field and ranch patronage.

SUNNYSIDE UP: Charles Farrell, Janet Gaynor—This one went over fair. Too many people had seen it. Played on Friday and Saturday to average business. The only thing my patrons kicked on was the length. It's about four reels too long. Running time, 13 reels. Played Dec. 8-9.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

WALLS OF GOLD: Sally Eilers, Norman Foster—Sell Kathleen Norris and Sally Eilers and put on plenty of shorts and this will go over. It did for us, although it's really just the same old stuff. We go heavy on shorts, even with big drawing cards.—M. P. Foster, Grenada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

WORST WOMAN IN PARIS: Benita Hume, Adolphe Menjou—Title misleading. Very fair little picture. Miss Hume's voice does not record; at any rate she's mighty hard to understand at times. Menjou a back number. You will find it does not draw. Music throughout the picture, and it's too loud. Played December 7-8.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

Freuler

WHEN A MAN RIDES ALONE: Tom Tyler—Not a bad western. Fair Saturday business. Played Nov. 24-25.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

M G M

BEAUTY FOR SALE: Otto Kruger, Madge Evans—An excellent picture that everyone liked. Entertaining story, good acting, good recording and last, but not least, good at the box office. Una Merkel almost steals the show with her Southern drawl and hardboiled wisecracks. Step on the advertising on this one for it is worth it. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 2-3.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BLONDE BOMBSHELL, THE: Jean Harlow, Lee Tracy—A big disappointment here. Ran on Friday and Saturday and could have taken in more money with a western. Lee Tracy very good for his part but Jean Harlow is about as close to being an actress as she ever will be. Plenty good to look at, but no acting ability whatsoever. Running time, 88 minutes. Played December 8-9.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood, Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

BOMBSHELL: Jean Harlow, Lee Tracy—This is a great entertainment. Gave good satisfaction. Both stars fine. Lots of good comments on the picture; all the cast splendid. Don't know whether the story was based on actual facts or not, but if we can believe all we read about the industry, I should say it is true. Kept them busy to make it and keeps us exhibitors busy to make film rental out of them. It is a great game if you don't weaken. Played Dec. 3-4.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

BOMBSHELL: Jean Harlow, Lee Tracy—Outside of being about 1 reel too long and a lot of hysteria in the dialogue, this is a good picture but Tracy and Harlow scream at each other all during the picture. There is a lot of smart dialogue and laughs. Tracy talked his fastest. I'll say they will miss this boy that got into trouble in Mexico. He is one actor that could keep up with Harlow in this one and it took some speed at that.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

BROADWAY TO HOLLYWOOD: Alice Brady, Frank Morgan, Madge Evans, Eddie Quillan, Jackie Cooper, Jimmy Durante—Some show. They don't make them better than this one, for it has about everything in the line of entertainment. Acting is all fine while the ballet of the Albertina Rasch dancers in color is the highlight of the performance. The scenes from the old time shows pleased the old folks, while the Hollywood scenes went over big with the young folks. Running time, 89 minutes. Played December 9-10.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FAST LIFE: William Haines—Plenty of action, thrills and spills in this one. Everyone went out satisfied. Running time, 85 minutes. Played November 25.—J. N. Creswell, Opera House, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

FLESH: Wallace Beery—Very good.—J. N. Creswell, Opera House, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

HELL BELOW: Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans—An excellent picture from Metro's last year's program. If you have not played it push it up.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez—A very good program picture. Gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

20 REPORTS AT ONCE FROM NEW REPORTER

When M. P. Foster of the Granada theatre at Monte Vista, Colorado, determined to give as well as receive, in line with the spirit of the season, by contributing reports to "What the Picture Did for Me," he took the proper step forward by commenting on 20 pictures in his first communication. They all appear in the department in this issue.

MIDNIGHT MARY: Loretta Young, Ricardo Cortez—Fair program picture, that's all. Use it with your serial or giveaways and it will satisfy.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: John Barrymore, Clark Gable—This picture has too many stars for the parts they play. Played to the best Monday crowd in some time. The men all liked it. The women didn't. With such a cast the people expect too much. Business was good on it so we can't kick. Running time, nine reels. Played Dec. 11-12.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

NUISANCE, THE: Lee Tracy—Good, but Tracy's stuff is a little too brash and fast for the family crowd.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Myrna Loy, Max Baer, Primo Carnera, Walter Huston, Otto Kruger—Here is excellent entertainment for all ages and sexes. Miss Loy sings. Miss Loy is wonderful throughout the entire picture. You can get behind this. It will stand up. Played November 30-December 1.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

PRIZEFIGHTER AND THE LADY, THE: Myrna Loy, Walter Huston, Max Baer—Here's one that does justice to the prize ring. Includes old timers of ring history. Well got up. Has musical numbers. Max Baer is quite a movie star at that. Play it and boost it. Old man winter kept many away from seeing it. Running time, 110 minutes. Played December 10-11-12.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

REUNION IN VIENNA: John Barrymore, Diana Wynyard—Another one of those nine-reel foreign stories that they won't go for, regardless of the cast. My people did not like it.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

STAGE MOTHER: Alice Brady, Maureen O'Sullivan—Just fair. It is another epic of the stage, the ups and downs that are in so many pictures at this time. Brady does a good job in her role but the picture is a little too highly emotional in some spots and the younger element had a tendency to razz it. They were dragged out too much. O'Sullivan has a nice voice and she can dance, so it was not a complete washout. One good dance number that is very good, but the picture drags in too many places to be a knockout, as some have reported. That was our audience reaction. Alice Brady had a bad makeup on her mouth. It looked to be clear across her face and it was not that way in "When Ladies Meet."—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STORM AT DAYBREAK: Nils Asther, Kay Francis—A story of the late war with the setting for the story in Serbia and Hungary. Makes a good entertainment, although a trifle dragged out. Has three good stars which helps to sell it. Poor business. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Nov. 27-28.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Miriam Hopkins, Franchot Tone—Here is a picture that is rural in its setting and it is a pleasure to play it. Drew second night and good comments by everyone who saw it. Lionel Barrymore is the whole show, and what a show he is. There should not be but one Barrymore and that should be Lionel. O. K. Good, play it.—Russell C. Dey, Reedville Movies, Reedville, Va. General patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Miriam Hopkins, Franchot Tone—Step on the fact that it is by the author of "State Fair." It's great for the rural trade, but the title is bad. Plenty of comedy, good cast, but you must step on it and the longer you run it the more your word of mouth advertising will help it.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

STRANGER'S RETURN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Miriam Hopkins—The warm weather has closed our mines in this valley and the show business is suffering from it. It is a shame to show pictures like "Stranger's Return" to the small crowds we had, but, those who saw it talked plenty for it. Played Nov. 26th.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Mining patronage.

TUGBOAT ANNIE: Marie Dressler, Wallace Beery—A sure kick at the box office. Some won't like it, or say they do not, but they are there with those that do, so that is all that counts. We say it is good and then some, and boy it will get them in that you never saw before. By all means play it and treat yourself.—Russel C. Dey, Reedville Movies, Reedville, Va. General patronage.

TURN BACK THE CLOCK: Lee Tracy, Mae Clarke—A mighty good entertaining picture. Gave good satisfaction to all. The star certainly showed his talent in this one.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—This is more suitable for an adult audience. The conversation is inclined toward the risque but it is good entertainment however and the audience liked it. Average business only. Running time, 85 minutes. Played Nov. 30th.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

WHEN LADIES MEET: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—Sophisticated and classy talkie comedy romance. The laughs put it over.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

WHISTLING IN THE DARK: Una Merkel—I don't know why they made this picture, but some people liked it so it must be okay. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 22.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

Monogram

PHANTOM BROADCAST: Ralph Forbes—Fair. People don't like tragedies. Recording poor on film.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SAGEBRUSH TRAIL: John Wayne—This is another good western picture from an independent producer. However, this is not as good as Wayne's first picture, but will please any western fans. A good story, full of thrills and action. John Wayne is becoming a drawing card at our box office and we wish him success. Come on, Monogram, show the major companies how to make good pictures. Business very good. Running time, 60 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI: Mary Carlisle, Buster Crabbe—Here is one of the sweetest and most entertaining pictures in many moons. Just seems to hit the public taste. Bubbles over with romance, good music and youth. Yes, one can see a few flaws of imperfectness, but who cares. It's one of the most satisfying to all classes in a long time. Grab it and play it up like you would one of the big boys "Mortgage-your-House" attractions. Thanks Monogram. Keep this up and you'll grow. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Thanksgiving.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

Paramount

BIG EXECUTIVE: Ricardo Cortez, Elizabeth Young—Just got by. Fair program picture.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

COLLEGE HUMOR: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie—One of the good ones and it's sold before you put up your first piece of advance paper.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

CRADLE SONG: Dorothea Wieck—Another picture so good it is doomed to failure without showmanship. "Gold Diggers" will make money for any theatre any time if you show it. "Cradle Song" will make you proud of yourself and the industry. Will make money for you if you can break into some church organization—preferably the Catholic ladies. Preview it and ask for help as "too fine to cheapen by usual methods." Then pray people who see it will appreciate it and talk.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Duck Soup is right. It was Duck Soup for Marx Brothers and Paramount. And talk about your unmitigated gall, this picture was sold with a heavy grab-off of the gross and the running time is exactly 67 minutes, which means that the "Exi-bitter" must furnish almost half of the balance of the show with his own dough for the "Wisecrack Brothers" and Paramount to share on. As to the picture, less void of good music than former Marx pictures. Harpo don't harp and Chico don't tickle the ivories. Just a lot of gags and chatter that did not appeal to the masses. Draw was much less than previous Marx releases even though we played it right on the nose (November 19). Personally I don't give a rap if the Brothers do retire from Paramount and go to the Old Folks Home. Running time, 67 minutes. Played November 19.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

EAGLE AND THE HAWK, THE: Cary Grant—Two hard-boiled aviators in action. One of the best war pictures yet. Running time, 72 minutes. Played

Nov. 30.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

FROM HELL TO HEAVEN: Jack Oakie—Gunmen, murders, horse races and comedy. What more could you ask of one picture? Will get money if put over right. They eat this kind of stuff up down here. Running time, 80 minutes. Played Nov. 19.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen—This was a fine story and a well produced picture but the box-office suffered from the fact that most people felt it was propaganda rather than entertainment.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—A swell show for the rural communities. Gives the lowdown on the strike situation. Played it when the strikes were in full swing so it did good business. Bad storm hurt some.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

GOLDEN HARVEST: Richard Arlen, Chester Morris, Genevieve Tobin—Very good movie of the farmer's life. Excellent cast. Play it and boost it. Clean entertainment. Let's have more of this every day life stories. Most patrons come to be amused not thrilled. Running time, 8 reels. Played December 9.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

HER BODYGUARD: Wynne Gibson, Edmund Lowe —As Edmund Lowe is a favorite star this will go over good because Wynne Gibson and Lowe certainly put over some fast entertainment. Fair business resulted. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 27-28.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—Tell the world you have the best "hooch dancer" in the world on your program and they will all come out to see it and go home happy. Mae may be nice, but she sure acts naughty and does a lot of beautiful action stuff for the box-office. I have shown no picture on Sunday for months that I liked less and have done less business every Sunday for over two years. They want what you give them, Mae, and we are both disappointed in them for it, but come again soon.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—Excellent of its type. Best box-office receipts in over a year. Played November 29-30-December 1.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Oil field and ranch patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West—A lot of small town exhibitors will be disappointed in the box office results on this picture. Opening night was slightly above average but the next two nights were terrible. Used plenty of paper and ads on this but just could not convince people that they wanted to see this. Mae West not the type for a small town. Don't pay too much for this one. Running time, 87 minutes. Played December 3-4-5.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Kansas. General patronage.

I'M NO ANGEL: Mae West, Cary Grant—This is a wonderful picture—both in box office receipts and entertainment value. A clean picture, with the exception of the first ten minutes, but will please everyone. The gowns worn by Mae West are gorgeous and add much to the picture. Play this picture and then take the profits and have a merry Christmas. Played two days to capacity business. Running time, 87 minutes. Played Dec. 7-8.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAN OF THE FOREST: Randolph Scott—A Zane Grey that ranks near the top for good action westerns. Noah Beery makes a fine bad man. Scott is well liked by the ladies. Running time, 63 minutes. Played Dec. 2.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper, Fay Wray—An exceedingly good picture. Drew good business and satisfied. Frances Fuller very good.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Gary Cooper, Frances Fuller, Fay Wray—A picture that pleased 100%. Cooper and Fuller both good. You can't go wrong by boosting this one. Running time, 70 minutes. Played December 6-7.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

ONE SUNDAY AFTERNOON: Fay Wray, Gary Cooper—Something different. I call this one real good. People as they used to be. If you don't like this one you are hard to please. Play it and boost it. Running time, 8 reels. Played December 5-6.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

SITTING PRETTY: Jack Haley, Jack Oakie, Ginger Rogers—Good semi-musical. Clever tuneful songs and well liked although the draw was not so hot because of the "again" cycle of musicals and semi-musicals, although this type will survive better than the big out-and-out musicals. Ginger Rogers and Jack Haley grab the grapes in this. Oakie good, but Jack why don't you wipe the grease paint off your million dollar mug. Have noticed this little fault in several of your pictures of late. Running time, 75 minutes. Played December 10.—Joe Hewitt, Lincoln Theatre, Robinson, Ill. General patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—This qualifies as a highbrow picture. It is a beautiful produced production. Those who like this type of heavy story will like this very much. It is worthy of the best selling effort and a much cleaner show than the nude pictures would lead one to expect.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—Drew better than average Monday-Tuesday business, and pleased very, very much. Most every one considered it the best picture this star has ever made. Her portrayal of the shy little country girl was very appealing. Running time, 92 minutes. Played Nov. 27-28.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—This drew capacity business for me. What drew them is a mystery to me, as the picture is not big. Seemed to please them all so I should worry.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

SONG OF SONGS: Marlene Dietrich—Pretty thin stuff, and family trade don't go for Dietrich and Chevalier. Never made a penny on any of their pictures. The nude statue stuff won't go so well with the family, and it's in the advertising and trailer too. —M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

TAKE A CHANCE: James Dunn, June Knight—We played this Thanksgiving, and our people liked it very much. Did a nice business.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THIS DAY AND AGE: Charles Bickford, Judith Allen—Didn't do so much business (bad weather) but had a lot of very favorable comments on this picture. Played Nov. 12-13.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

THIS DAY AND AGE: Richard Cromwell, Charles Bickford, Judith Allen—Fine picture. Pleases the young people.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

THIS DAY AND AGE: Charles Bickford, Judith Allen, Richard Cromwell—Very good entertainment. Enjoyed by all who came but hard to get them in. Advise that you play it on one day only. Running time, 82 minutes. Played December 4-5.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert—Went over very nicely for me. A little silly but these types of stories go better in these times than the over-dramatic ones, in my opinion.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert—Clever comedy drama of family life. Pleased Saturday business. Played December 2.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert. Richard Arlen—This is only a fair picture, but not up to the standard of Paramount. If you saw the "Royal Family," then you have an idea of what to expect. Our patrons did not like this and several walked out before the show was half over. If you play this one day you may get by with it. Come on, Paramount, give us better pictures than this. Played one day to fair business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played Dec. 6.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

THREE CORNERED MOON: Claudette Colbert—A different role for Claudette Colbert, and a relief from her crying spells. A goofy picture, but not too silly, and they liked it, according to the second night's business.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth —Good comedy. Some don't like Fields, but business was pretty good at that. Very short. Will take lots of extras to fill out.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

TILLIE AND GUS: W. C. Fields, Alison Skipworth —It will get by for one day showing. Fields' stage success is not known in the sticks, and he is no drawing card. Played December 5-6.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott—This is a dandy western show made only as Paramount makes westerns—and that remark is quoted from a salesman selling westerns made by another firm who sat beside me while we ran this show. It is trimmed with real settings and a real cast and story. It classifies as a "western" only in that it has more adventure and action than romance and immorality.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

TO THE LAST MAN: Randolph Scott—Zane Grey stories do very well for me. This is a very good show. Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby—A great musical show. Better than "Gold Diggers" but did about half the business. Everyone liked it. Crosby is fine and Oakie, Gallager and Green are great.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Jack Oakie —A natural for the small town. Had capacity business. Will please anywhere where they like Crosby. —Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

TOO MUCH HARMONY: Bing Crosby, Judith Allen, Jack Oakie—Splendid musical comedy. Pleased. Justified their Class A rating. Played November 30-December 1.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—A weepy drama with a happy ending. Good work by everybody concerned. Fair Sunday business. Three cute kids in this. Played Dec. 3-4.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—A wonderful picture. Claudette Colbert marvelous. A large crowd was loud in their praise on this picture.—Harold Carson, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert — Patrons seemed to like this one. Good acting by her, but why must actresses smoke, drink on the screen? We didn't see this a few years ago. Why must we now? Play it! Running time, 8 reels. Played December 7-8. —Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

TORCH SINGER: Claudette Colbert—Tearful and tuneful and an eyeful. Good all through.—M. P. Fos-

WAY TO LOVE, THE: Maurice Chevalier—The best picture Chevalier has made for some time. Average business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

Principal

TARZAN THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—Drew pretty good business with a storm both nights. However, it disappointed people and falls away short of being worth the money they ask for it. If you can buy it reasonable, it will do some business, but take my advice and advertise it as a continued picture. It will please better.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

TARZAN THE FEARLESS: Buster Crabbe—This is a new idea. Four episodes of serial shown as a feature, and it clicked with me. I have been doing better on my Friday-Saturday dates and the first showing did more than usual feature business. I didn't mention the serial idea until after the people had paid their money to see the first feature and it worked out. The first feature is sufficient within itself.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

VIRGINS OF BALI: And can I talk about this one! This simple little native story slipped into my program with fear and trembling and sold as highbrow travelogue stuff. Too good to be shown in the average theatre but so good that our patronage is certain to enjoy it. Holds my house record for Wednesday nights for the last two years. Sold as entertainment it would be questionable, but it went over beautifully sold as highbrow. I made a month's salary trying it, so recommend it to you.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

RKO

ACE OF ACES: Richard Dix—Richard Dix in a good air picture that will be big for latter part of the week, but good any day; we ran it on Sunday, with plenty of musical and comedy shorts.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne—A good show that agreeably surprised me at the box-office. People wanted to see it. Cast is fine, direction is good and story well known. People who looked for the evil or low tone of the story missed it. More power to Hollywood.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne, Walter Huston—Real entertainment for the small town. Miss Dunne excellent and Huston as usual is real good. Running time, 72 minutes. Played December 8-9.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C. Small town patronage.

ANN VICKERS: Irene Dunne, Walter Huston—Irene Dunne no draw, and if they remember "American Tragedy," neither is Theodore Dreiser. Nobody cares about the story of a girl's life anymore on the screen. unless she can dance or show the audience a good time, at least. It's good, but not what they want.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

BED OF ROSES: Constance Bennett—Surprisingly entertaining of its kind and better liked than anything this overpaid star has done for years. It had a clever story and the people come for names. They actually enjoy the story.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

CHANCE AT HEAVEN: Joel McCrea, Ginger Rogers—Nice, clean, sweet little show that pleased all on family night.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

CHANCE AT HEAVEN: Joel McCrea, Ginger Rogers—Another good one from RKO. Played to a good crowd and they all liked it. The people around here go for Ginger Rogers in a big way. She is always good for us. Running time, eight reels. Played Dec. 6-7.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

CROSS FIRE: Tom Keene, Edgar Kennedy—Good picture, but Keene pleased my audience better in regular "cow horse opera." Westerns for Friday and Saturday are our salvation in this territory. Business good. Played Dec. 1-2.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

DOUBLE HARNESS: Ann Harding, William Powell—Did not draw very well, but gave splendid satisfaction. It's one of those intense love stories that appeal particularly to women. Running time, 70 minutes. Played Nov. 20-21.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FLYING DEVILS: Arline Judge, Bruce Cabot—Good action picture. Cliff Edwards a great help with his comedy. Running time, 60 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

HEADLINE SHOOTER: William Gargan, Frances Dee—Not much cast to boast about, but something different and if you can get them in, they'll like it. Running time, 60 minutes.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

KING KONG: Fay Wray, Robert Armstrong—Good business on a very gruesome picture. Played Dec. 1-2.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE WOMEN: Katharine Hepburn—This picture is in a class all by itself. It should show in every town and village of the U. S. A. Even some of the hard boiled babies in the bold bad city might run it and air out their theatres. It is as sweet and pure as a spring breeze and brings a smile and a tear to everyone who has heart enough to know that families used to love the home and fireplace and the neighborhood, before they had movies to take them away from home. Best business for four days ever. Everyone pleased.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MELODY CRUISE: Charles Ruggles—Swell entertainment with many honors to Ruggles and the nieces. However, Phil Harris is about the poorest actor ever placed in a leading role. No looks, can't act or sing. A flop in every scene he made his appearance. Still the picture pleased. The skate dance on ice was wonderful. Fair business. Played Dec. 6-7.—J. W. Gunter, Royal Theatre, Blackshear, Ga. Small town patronage.

MIDSHIPMAN JACK: Bruce Cabot—An ideal Saturday picture for us. Action, comedy and love interest blended just right. Did average business, and pleased immensely.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MORNING GLORY: Katharine Hepburn—Our first picture with this star, and it did a beautiful flop. Didn't even take in film rental and we tried hard to put her over as we are sold on her ourselves. Perhaps after "Little Women" she will have drawing power. She is certainly a wonderful actress. Running time, 78 minutes. Played Nov. 13-14.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ONE MAN'S JOURNEY: Lionel Barrymore—From the story "The Doctor." Beautifully told in a picture that will please everyone you can get in to see it. It is box-office for the big city but it would be a natural for the small town as it deals with the well known small town character, the country doctor. He is too close to the small town person, however, just everyday life. A fine show to tie up with any organization.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SWEETHEART: Norman Foster, Ginger Rogers—All my patrons seemed to like it. Ginger Rogers is a comer in this type of story.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

TOMORROW AT SEVEN: Chester Morris, Vivienne Osborne—Just average mystery.—M. P. Foster, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

Remington

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS: Polly Walker—This is the best musical comedy to come out of England this year. I found that my people not only came out to see it when I told them that, but that they actually liked it. It has nice music, clever songs, dancing and a plot that is interesting. Polly Walker is lovely. The show is worth more than you have to pay for it used on any screen.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

United Artists

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft—A great audience picture. Rough and hardy. We played it on Sunday and they liked it. Parts made to order for Beery, Raft and Jackie Cooper.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

BOWERY, THE: Wallace Beery, George Raft, Jackie Cooper—Enjoyed by old and young. Business only average but film rental nearly double our average cost. Played December 3-4.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Oil field and ranch patronage.

BROADWAY THRU A KEYHOLE: Constance Cummings—Excellent picture and a good drawing card. Gangster angle with songs and dances in night club. Music catchy and excellent. Give this preferred time. —C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor—Yes, I know it is two years old. Any exhibitor who shows it now has the competition of "Roman Scandals" publicity to fight but what do you expect from New York? The picture makes money, is real entertainment and has no age limit on its pleasing properties. —Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

Universal

BE MINE TONIGHT: Jan Kiepura—Although this did not even do average business we surely enjoyed showing it. There was no appeal among regular movie patrons, but we did get the women's clubs and the D. A. R. out on it. When this star makes his first American picture with some well known leading lady it should be a big hit.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FIDDLIN' BUCKAROO: Ken Maynard, Gloria Shea—Good picture. Drew good business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

HER FIRST MATE: Slim Summerville, Zasu Pitts—Not so suggestive as their previous pictures, which was all to the good. Taken from a stage play, the roles didn't exactly fit these stars. Played Nov. 19-20.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KING OF THE ARENA: Ken Maynard—Very good picture for bargain night. Recording on film very poor.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Leo Carrillo and Mary Brian—A sweet little musical to fair Sunday business. It seemed to please everyone. Played Nov. 26-27.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Leo Carrillo—A plenty good show that drew slightly above average attendance. Everyone who came liked it fine and the second night was almost as good as the first. Should make money if bought right. Running time, 85 minutes. Played December 6-7.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT AND PRETZELS: Mary Brian, Leo Carrillo—This is one of the best musical pictures we have played. We played it behind all the rest of them and did not get as good box-office results as we should but it gave good satisfaction. The music and songs as good, if not better, than the rest of musicals.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—An average football picture that drew average business. It can't compare with this company's last year's picture "All American." Running time, 72 minutes. Played Dec. 6-7.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SATURDAY'S MILLIONS: Robert Young, Leila Hyams—The very kind of football picture you would make if you were making one. It could not be any better even if it was the real thing. There are many folks in this that deserve special mention and Andy Devine takes care of the comedy with the assistance of Mary Carlisle. There is a mighty punch in the scene where the two fathers (old grads) meet after 40 years. Average business, four days, first part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

S.O.S. ICEBERG: Rod La Rocque Gibson Gowland—Pretty good story and some marvelous wild scenery. Filmed on west coast of Greenland. Played December 3-4.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

STRAWBERRY ROAN: Ken Maynard—This is a bang up western and this star pulls. Don't let anyone tell you that the westerns are passe if they are any good at all. The cheap ones are no good, the trouble has been that they just slapped them together without rime or reason and branded them westerns. I am speaking only for the small towns, but it is my guess that good westerns with a popular star will again be a bet, when and if the farmer comes into some money. I know that I have personally paid four times the money for rental and not had the business that westerns pulled in the good old days. You can't give them for a steady diet as we used to, but one about every six weeks I have found to do business, if they are good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TERROR TRAIL, THE: Tox Mix—Mix still does the biz. Wish he wasn't quitting the pictures.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

TERROR TRAIL, THE: Tox Mix—A good western tale appealing to the youngsters and teen age patrons particularly, but then a lot of us grown-ups are teen-aged when it comes to western pictures. Sufficient to say they all enjoyed it. Average business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played Nov. 24-25.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Warner

BIG STAMPEDE, THE: John Wayne—Very good western with a title that gets them in. Business okay on this one. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Nov. 18.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

COLLEGE COACH: Dick Powell—This is a dandy show with a good plot and a good moral and a fine cast. Can be used on a Friday, Saturday date as title would indicate though there is more romance and less football than might be expected.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

EVER IN MY HEART: Barbara Stanwyck—This is a beautiful story with a good cast that is worth showing on any screen. People liked it and more than I expected came out to see it.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

EVER IN MY HEART: Barbara Stanwyck—One sweet picture, especially appealing to women. Not suitable for jazz audiences but an ideal family night picture. Average attendance. Played November 28.—M. R. Williams, Texon Theatre, Texon, Texas. Oil field and ranch patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—This picture is so big and good, you have got to see it to appreciate it. Wonderful entertainment. We have had too many of these good musical pictures in past months to make any money on them. Now we are back where we were when they killed them before people could get too much of a good thing.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: James Cagney, Joan Blondell, Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—If you have not bought this one, better take it easy. As good as any of the musicals but will not get the dough that "Gold Diggers" got. Better think a long time before you give Warners a fat percentage for this. The cast is fine, the musical numbers are okay, but all come in a bunch. Should have strung them out all through the picture instead of right at the last. Picture slightly draggy the first five reels. Running time, 100 minutes. Played December 10-11-12.—Warren L. Weber, Ellinwood Theatre, Ellinwood, Kansas. General patronage.

FORTY-SECOND STREET: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell—I can't add anything to the praise that has been heaped upon this picture and the fact that our mines are closed kept us from making any money out of it. Going to bring it back again if the weather ever turns cold. Running time, 100 minutes. Played Dec. 1.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Mining patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1933: Ruby Keeler—This is a great show and will please them all. They can't improve on this title. The show is along the same line as was the original, so those who came knew what they were getting and liked what they got. It is box-office plus.—Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE: William Powell, Mary Astor—Here is a very good detective story and one that will please all who see it. Full of thrills and will keep interest from start to finish. This is a wonderful picture with Powell in his most popular role, with a great supporting cast. The word "murder" in the title seemed to keep our patrons away. Played two days to only fair business, but pleased all who saw it. Running time, 73 minutes. Played Dec. 4-5.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MAN FROM MONTERAY, THE: John Wayne—A mighty good action picture. None of them has anything on this man in this type of pictures. Everyone we have played has been good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MAYOR OF HELL, THE: James Cagney—A very strong story. Fair business on a special midweek date. Played Nov. 29-30.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

NARROW CORNER, THE: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.—This picture is a little different. Was well liked. Drew very good crowd. Running time, 71 minutes. Played Dec. 1.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

PARACHUTE JUMPER: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Leo Carrillo, Bette Davis—As nice a picture as any exhibitor should want for week-end showing, or any other time, as it has action, drama, love interest and what not. This boy McHugh is plenty good, so is Bette Davis with her Alabam' drawl and Doug, Jr., of course is just fitted for his role. You won't have to hide after showing this one. Running time, 80 minutes. Played December 7-9.—B. A. McConnell. Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Mining country patronage.

PICTURE SNATCHER: James Cagney—Made to order for action lovers. The scenes where the police are shooting it out with a gang leader are the best since George Bancroft made "The Underworld." Running time, 72 minutes. Played Dec. 3.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

RIDE HIM COWBOY: John Wayne—A good western. Business just so-so. Played Nov. 10-11.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SOMEWHERE IN SONORA: John Wayne—Played to the smallest business that we have ever had on week end picture, but it wasn't the picture's fault as I heard more praise for it from the few who saw it than any western we have ever shown. Running time, 60 minutes. Played Nov. 24.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Mining country.

SOMEWHERE IN SONORA: John Wayne—Wayne is fast becoming the favorite western star here. Very good picture to big business.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

BLUE BLACKBIRDS: Moran and Mack—One of the funniest comedies of the year. Produced plenty of laughs.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

DORA'S DUNKING DOUGHNUTS: Andy Clyde—Best Clyde comedy to date, this year.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

FEELING ROSY: Andy Clyde—This is another good comedy of Andy Clyde. This starts off a little slow, but the finish is plenty good. Full of laughs and will please everyone. Clyde has a good draw here and we get many comments on his shorts. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

JEALOUS LOVER: Terry Toon—Fair. Running time, 6 minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Opera House, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

KRAKATOA: Special—One of the finest short subjects ever made. Many patrons said it alone was worth the admission price. Brought more favorable comments than any short subject that ever played our theatre. Running time, 25 minutes.—W. J. Powell, Lonet, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

STATIC: Tom Howard—Phooey! Very few laughs. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Opera House, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

TORCHY TURNS TURTLE: Ray Cooke—These Torchy comedies are always good. Make more of these and profit. Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

TORCHY'S LOUD SPOOKER: Ray Cooke—Torchy is not very funny as a rule, but this was a good comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

Fox

ANIAKCHAK: Special Subject—Here's another short subject that brought many favorable comments from patrons. It was furnished us in four reels. By eliminating reel No. 3, we speeded it up considerably and lost very little of interest. Running time, four reels.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

MGM

ASLEEP IN THE FEET: Zasu Pitts, Thelma Todd—A good comedy from Zasu and Thelma but I can always count on them for plenty of laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Colortone Musical Revues—Too much beer in evidence and too much drinking of beer. With me it only produced a thirst, but it offended many of my patrons. Producers should remember that in small towns exhibitors enjoy a large patronage of children and have no desire to make a beer bill-board out of their screens. Running time, two reels.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

BEER AND PRETZELS: Colortone Musical Revues—Fine. A big addition to any program. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

DIRTY WORK: Laurel and Hardy—A fairly good Laurel and Hardy comedy. Very funny in spots, with a surprise ending that brought many laughs. Running time, two reels.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

FALLEN ARCHES: Charley Chase—Charley at his best. A scream from start to finish. Running time, 18 minutes.—J. N. Creswell, Opera House, Cedarville, Ohio. General patronage.

FALLEN ARCHES: Charley Chase—If there is a laugh in this one my patrons failed to detect it. Just two reels of good film gone wrong. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

FINE FEATHERS: Oddities—In color and went over good because Pete Smith was the announcer. All about birds.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark. Small town patronage.

HANDLEBARS: Oddities—My patrons got a lot of kick out of this one. Running time, nine minutes.—J. E. Weber, Princess Theatre, Chelsea, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HANDLEBARS: Oddities—This was our first "Oddity" and it proved to be an excellent short subject. Had more laughs in it than four out of five two-reel comedies. Running time, one reel.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

KID FROM BORNEO: Our Gang—One of the best Gang comedies this year. Kids and adults ate this one up.—Lloyd Pearson, Menard Theatre, Petersburg, Ill. Small town patronage.

MIDNIGHT PATROL: Laurel and Hardy—Imagine Laurel and Hardy as a couple of dumb cops and imagine them better than usual, and you have this one. Running time, 20 minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

NERTSERY RHYMES: Colortone Musical Revues—A Colortone Musical that will get the laughs. Running time, 18 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

NERTSERY RHYMES: Colortone Musical Revues—Another fine Colortone Revue that received as many compliments as the feature. These colortone shorts are great. Not a poor one in the series. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

NEW ZEALAND: FitzPatrick Travel Talks—These subjects are O. K. for the highbrows of whom you have but few in small towns. They are of too much educational nature for kids and the average goer had as soon leave them off. Running time, eight minutes.—C. A. Pratt, Texas Theatre, Smithville, Texas, Small town patronage.

RHAPSODY IN BREW: Colortone Musical Revues—See report on "Beer and Pretzels." Running time, two reels.—W. J. Powell, Lonet Theatre, Wellington, Ohio. Small town and rural patronage.

I EATS MY SPINACH: Popeye the Sailor—Popeye sure makes a hit every time. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

I HEARD: Talkartoons—Don Redman in a clever cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

I YAM WHAT I YAM: Popeye the Sailor—A good cartoon that will please young and old alike. Running time, one reel.—H. E. Newbury, Y. M. C. A. Theatre, Ware Shoals, S. C., Small town patronage.

KENNEL KINGS: Grantland Rice Sportlights—Every one who likes a dog (And who doesn't?) in your audience will thank you for showing this reel. It's a Sportlight devoted to all the different breeds of dogs and it's good. Running time, one reel.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MARRIAGE HUMOR: Harry Langdon—Good comedy.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MORNING, NOON AND NIGHT: Rubinoff—Clever cartoon. Opened with Rubinoff's Orchestra, shifted to Betty Boop. Running time, one reel.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

ROAMING ROMEO, A: Harry Langdon—One of his best.—D. E. Fitton, Lyric Theatre, Harrison, Ark Small town patronage.

SING BING SING: Bing Crosby—A good two-reeler musical for filler.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

THREE LITTLE SWIGS: Leon Errol—A good comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

RKO

FIREMAN, THE: Charlie Chaplin—Terrible—terrible—terrible. Running time, two reels.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FITS IN A FIDDLE: Clark and McCullough—Clark and McCullough in the poorest comedy we have played from them. Just gets by. To bad RKO does not give these clever comedians good stuff.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FLIRTING IN THE PARK: Elliott Nugent—Thank heavens for a good two-reel comedy that is a comedy without being vulgar slapstick. This is the first of a series called "Blonde and Red Heads" and I do hope all of them are this good.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

KICKING THE CROWN AROUND: Clark and McCullough—Our first comedy with this pair. Liked fairly well, and think they will prove popular. Running time two reels.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MY BRIDGE EXPERIENCES: Ely Culbertson—Let me tell you about My Bridge Experiences! Sold to me at 50% higher rental, and I tied up with bridge clubs all over several towns, usual advance display, gave away (tried) books and cards, had a Culbertson Bridge teacher arrange a talk on "The Origin of Playing Cards" to follow the short, and tied up with stores on Bridge stuff, and had poor business for the first one, even with a good and suitable feature. People either left or went out and smoked while it was on, and I cancelled the talk, nobody wanted the books or cards, and I had few bridge players. I tried the second one, with same result, and am cancelling the rest due to the kicks from non-contract players and general patrons. Personally, I don't like this type of short, and if people are taught to do things that keep them away from theatres, I am more opposed to anything like it. I had the same experience with Bobby Jones' golf last year. This is a bridge-mad community, so after reading this my advice is "Don't run 'em," even at 50c a reel!—M. P. Fisher, Granada Theatre, Monte Vista, Col. General patronage.

QUIET PLEASE: Edgar Kennedy—All his comedies are good. Poor Edgar certainly can take it. Let's have more of them, RKO. Running time, 18 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

United Artists

KING NEPTUNE: Silly Symphony—These cartoons are always pleasing and entertaining for the kiddies. Running time, 8 minutes.—Edmund M. Burke, Fort Plain Theatre, Fort Plain, N. Y. General patronage.

MICKEY'S GOOD DEED: Mickey Mouse—This is another good cartoon comedy. If you can play this on Christmas day, it will go over good. This one is not as good as the last one, but will please the kiddies. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

MICKEY'S MECHANICAL MAN: Mickey Mouse—Up to standard. Goes over well with grownups and kids. A featurette worthy of a spot on any program. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

OLD KING COLE: Silly Symphonies—A beautiful fairy tale in dainty color enfolds before your eyes in this. Make a dandy short in a holiday program, but book it anyhow. Running time, seven minutes.—William A. Crute, Victoria Theatre, Vancouver, B. C. Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

ALIAS THE PROFESSOR: James Gleason—Gleason is good in any picture. A good comedy. Running time, 20 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

ALL AT SEA: Mentone No. 2—The captain's concert on board an ocean liner introduces clever songs and dances. Pat Rooney, Ethel Barrymore Colt and others making a most entertaining short. Running time, 18 minutes.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ALL AT SEA: Mentone No. 2—One of the Mentone Musicals. Good. Running time, 21 minutes.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

FIVE AND DIME: Oswald Cartoons—A fine cartoon from Universal. Good enough for your best time.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

FIVE AND DIME: Oswald Cartoons—Oswald revives "I Found a Million Dollar Baby in a Five and Ten Cent Store" with enjoyable effect.—A. N. Niles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LUMBER CHAMP, THE: Pooch Cartoons—Very funny cartoon.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PICK ME UP: Bert Roach—A thrill packed comedy full of fun. Running time, 20 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

SHOULD CROONERS MARRY? Frank Albertson—They try to shoot this one. Am sorry they missed aim. Some people laughed at this (picture).—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

Warner Vitaphone

BEAU BOSKO: Looney Tunes—This is a very good cartoon comedy and will please the kids and the adults alike. Many laughs and eight minutes of good clean entertainment. Running time, eight minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

CLOSE RELATIONS: Fatty Arbuckle—This is a very good comedy of the slapstick variety from Vitaphone. Not as good as the last one of Arbuckle, but will please just the same. Hope the others are as good as the previous one. Running time, 19 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C. General patronage.

EDDIE DUCHIN AND BAND: Melody Masters—Another dandy hot band act with the chorus on skates. A dandy.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HOT COMPETITION: Melody Masters—About the poorest of the Melody Masters. Running time, one reel.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Emerson, Ark. Mining country patronage.

"NO" MAN, THE: Broadway Brevities—Pretty good. Running time, 19 minutes.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PLEASURE ISLAND: Broadway Brevities—A snappy comedy made with natural colors. These color comedies are all good. Running time, 21 minutes.—Albert S. Rains, Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas. General patronage.

ROCK-A-BYE-BYE WITH DOCTOR ROCKWELL: Pepper Pot—Just another reel of wasted film for us. Even the kids thought it was silly. We think Warner has the best two-reelers on the market, but the one-reelers are poor. Running time, nine minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

SPEAKING OF OPERATIONS: Broadway Brevities—Just good enough for any spot! The title is misleading until you see the picture and hasn't any drawing power, but the patrons fully enjoyed it and the majority stayed to see it through the second time. Running time, 2 reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Mining country patronage.

THEN CAME THE YAWN: Jack Haley—Seemed to be enjoyed. Heard a few laughs. Running time, two reels.—B. A. McConnell, Emerson Theatre, Hartford, Ark. Mining country patronage.

TURKEY IN THE RAW: Gus Shy—One of the best comedies of the year. If the people fail to laugh at this one they had better see the doctor: there's something wrong with them. Running time, 20 minutes.—J. E. Ross, Jr., Strand Theatre, St. George, S. C. Small town patronage.

WORKERS OF THE WORLD: World Adventures—A rather interesting and educational one-reeler, showing scenes in India, Iceland and many other countries of the world. This series of shorts are not very well liked here, but, just the same, they are rather good. Running time, 10 minutes.—J. J. Medford, Orpheum Theatre, Oxford, N. C.

Serials

Universal

GORDON OF GHOST CITY: Buck Jones—Am just finishing this serial. It has proved to be very good and pleases the farming trade. Did not have any extra draw, as it should have had.—Harold Smith, Dreamland Theatre, Carson, Iowa. Rural patronage.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE QUIGLEY AWARDS

Of course we are very pleased with the immediate response to the first announcements of the Quigley Awards made in these pages last week. From home offices and from the field come fulsome endorsements of distribution and advertising heads, exhibitors and managers, who praise the determination of the Motion Picture Herald to make it possible now for able showmen to receive worldwide recognition of their exploitation efforts. Indeed, do they agree with Martin Quigley that "the public must be adequately informed about the coming product—and that it is informed in an arresting manner."

Encouraging comment from many sources is carried on succeeding pages in this issue. More will be run next week. These meaty statements are not only to be read, but studied, for they represent a true cross-section of what the industry agrees to be most necessary in the successful conduct of our business in the future.

At no previous time in the history of the motion picture has the need of skilled exploitation been more evident. 1934 is to be a significant mile post on the recovery road, and theatres are already doing yeoman work in helping to pave the rutted path to better times. Almost every Club issue chronicles the activities of theatre men who inaugurate merchants, shopping and other community "days" that hasten the spending tempo of entire cities.

Intensive exploitation of all sorts and for every purpose is in the ascendant. It is therefore befitting that the accomplishments of skilled showmen responsible for much of it, go no longer unacclaimed.

The announcement of the Quigley Monthly and Grand Awards for 1934, therefore, is the first broadside in the barrage to knock over every bushel basket under which talented theatre managers, perforce, hide their light.

COPPING OUR STUFF

Speaking further on the ever-increasing spread of exploitation in the advertising of businesses outside the theatre, we call your attention to the splurges made this month by department stores who, as part of their holiday sales promotions, have calmly appropriated to build up their "box-offices" all the tried and true devices utilized by theatremen.

Offhand we might mention a few of the gags put on by these smart advertisers with advance broadsides of newspaper displays, radio hookups and all the other run-of-the-mill showman stuff that had the crowds running madly to join the festivities built around the arrival of Santa Claus. The famous old gent came via street parade, plane and dog team; he settled down in toy departments surrounded by, in person, the Mickey Mouses, Betty Boops, Popeyes and a legion of other animated cartoon screen characters, and all this of course ballyhooed to the skies that helped considerably to boost store sales.

Which makes us wonder if managers cannot learn somewhat of a lesson from the bold and profitable use department stores are making of these stunts originally created and developed for theatre promotion. That hard-boiled merchandisers are copping our stuff and blowing the bankroll to put it over is something to be given deep thought by those who do not see the box-office possibilities in well-seasoned bally.

IN DEFENSE OF BALLY

For a while it seemed as though no one had a word to say in disagreement with Charley Bassin's blast against ballyhoo in a recent issue. Those expressions we received and published from members all forcefully agreed with him, and the atmosphere began to suggest exit music for Old Man Street Stunt and all of his gag relatives.

But in the nick of time comes thundering a stalwart defender in the person of Sid Holland, of Elkhart, Ind., who nimbly springs—on a succeeding page—to the defense of bally, and we welcome his opinions. It helps to keep the pot boilin' and we do relish a good argument. Though quite a bit has been said, the subject is far from exhausted and rates more discussion from the membership.

If, as we have already stated on this page, exploitation is to count heavily in 1934, then now is the time to take it all apart and do a real job of remodeling to fit the times.

Always pleased to publicize the fortunes of those members stepped up the ladder, we add to the growing list the names of Ed Selzer, Warner Brothers, and Joe Weil, Universal, former exploitation heads of those companies. They go to responsible executive posts where their field experience should stand them in good stead. Joe becomes assistant to Mr. Carl Laemmle, Sr., and Ed is now publicity chief at the Warner Bros. Hollywood studios. On behalf of the membership, gentlemen, we extend to you every good wish.

Quick Approval Given Round Table Announcement Of Martin Quigley Plaques for Most Meritorious 1934 Exploitation; Judges Now Being Selected; Opportunity to Win Monthly and Grand Awards Open to Every Theatre Manager in Every Land

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Hearty endorsements from all quarters are greeting the announcement made last week of the inauguration of the Quigley Awards, through the Managers' Round Table Club, to be given one a month starting Jan. 1, 1934, for the most meritorious picture exploitation campaign selected by the judges, in addition to the Grand Award to be presented at the end of the year for the campaign judged to be the best submitted within that period of time.

Unanimous is the accord from different branches of the motion picture industry. Distribution and advertising heads, as well as theatre exhibitors and managers voice their appreciation of the plans of the Motion Picture Herald on succeeding pages.

MANY LEADERS HAVE ALREADY ACCEPTED APPOINTMENTS TO JUDGES' COMMITTEE

Leaders from various departments of showbusiness have been asked to serve as judges. A gratifying number have immediately consented, and their names, together with others who will make up the entire board will be published in the next issue.

Great care has been exercised to make this group representative to insure the highest consideration for every campaign, big or small. As stated, the judges will be changed each month, so that full advantage can be taken of every fresh viewpoint in the weighing of the effectiveness of different exploitation angles.

Every manager everywhere is invited to try for these Awards. First or subsequent run, neighborhood or deluxer, small town or big city managers are all eligible.

QUIGLEY AWARDS TO ADVANCE WORLDWIDE RECOGNITION OF THEATRE EXPLOITATION

Imagine what it will mean to be the winner of a Quigley plaque; to be selected from the hundreds submitting campaigns in this most important competition in the the history of theatre exploitation. It's worth while fighting for and far-seeing managers are already preparing their campaigns.

Theatremen are alive to the realization that every practical opportunity must be embraced to get their slice of next year's business. By the same token, the position of the able manager is therefore strengthened, and the Quigley Awards are aimed to further advance the recognition long due the talented showman.

The Award rules are few and easy to follow. Read them in column to left, and start now to plan your first campaign.

ROUND TABLE'S EXPLOITATION DRIVE

CARTER BARRON

Loew's City Manager
Washington, D. C.

I endorse enthusiastically the establishment of a monthly award for exploitation ingenuity. That it will be an honor which all will strive for there is no doubt. Neither is there a doubt that with everyone striving, the attendant efforts will benefit tremendously our ever-striving industry.

Congratulations to your enterprising department for inaugurating a needed "Hall of Fame" that ought to have us all "hitting on all eight" 365 days each year.

CLAYTON E. BOND

Head Film Buyer
Warner Bros Theatres

I think this is a splendid idea and will be glad to lend any assistance which you may desire. I assume you have a comprehensive plan for enlisting national interest in these contests and so far as the managers of the theatres in the Warner Circuit are concerned, I will be pleased to take any action you desire to bring this matter to their direct attention.

MORT BLUMENSTOCK

Advertising & Publicity Director
Warner Bros. Theatres

Anything that will stimulate uncostly exploitation has my endorsement. I am very willing to act as a judge and am confident that the Warner men in the field will form the hardiest competition in the bid for Quigley awards.

LOUIS CHARNINSKY

Manager, Capitol
Dallas, Texas

This is a mighty good idea and I'm for it 100 per cent. I believe if every theatre manager feels the way I do, they will step out and do more hustling for the theatre, the fronts, and the exploitation campaigns. I am already planning my January campaigns.

E. S. C. COPPOCK

Manager, Paramount, Stapleton, S. I.

I am particularly enthused over the plan of MOTION PICTURE HERALD to award plaques for outstanding efforts in theatre merchandising. Recognition in this manner sets a standard of comparison among managers and is a recognition of lasting value to the individual in his desire for self-advancement. We need something to wake us up and encourage us to work.

I for one am making a New Year's resolution to "bring home the plaque."

NED E. DEPINET

Vice President
RKO Distributing Corp.

I shall be very happy indeed to serve on the Judges' Committee as at all times I am very glad to do anything within my power to encourage bigger and better exploitation of motion pictures. Of late there has been a revival of real showmanship, but I feel that considerable more can be done in the way of intelligently and intensively selling productions to the public.

The Quigley Publications are to be heartily commended, and particularly the Managers' Round Table Club for spurring the theatre managers of this country on to greater activity and originality. The awards should put every live showman on his toes, and it should be considered a great honor to become the recipient of one of the silver plaques, which your organization is so generously offering.

OSCAR A. DOOB

Advertising & Publicity Director
Loew Theatres

Your plan to give recognition each month to theatres having the best exploitation campaigns sounds like a good move to me. You've picked a good time for it, too. To the veterans who have gone thru good and bad times, the value of exploitation and the importance of keeping at it need hardly be sold.

Your attempt to encourage exploitation at a time when the uptrend in business is getting under way should have fine results. And the exploitation, thus encouraged, will have constantly improving box office reaction, too, as sales resistance lessens. I'll be glad to cooperate all I can.

BERT ENNIS

Advertising & Publicity Director
Majestic Pictures Corp.

Will be glad to act as one of the judges, providing it is not necessary to wear a long black robe and carry a gavel.

I think the Award idea is excellent, as a long experience has taught me that good exploitation, while always necessary, receives less recognition than practically any important factor in our business.

AROUSES ENTHUSIASTIC COMMENT

EDWARD M. FAY

Fay's Theatres
Providence, R. I.

You hereby have my consent and services to act as judge in presenting the Quigley Awards for the most meritorious theatre exploitation campaigns submitted.

FELIX F. FEIST

General Sales Manager
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures

Shall indeed be pleased to serve on the committee referred to in your letter for I believe the Managers' Round Table Club is doing a great job.

JOSEPH FELDMAN

Managing Director
Earle Theatre, Phila., Pa.

I believe that everyone handling this sort of work is doing his best to put over his proposition but it takes a contest of this kind to spur one to greater achievement. I for one will be very happy to contribute and am sure you will receive wholehearted cooperation all over the country.

WILLIAM R. FERGUSON

Exploitation Director
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures.

Will be glad to accept the honor to serve as one of the judges of the Quigley Awards for the most meritorious theatre exploitation campaigns submitted to the Managers' Round Table Club.

Permit me to state that I think this is an excellent idea and will positively prove of great value to both exhibitor and distributor.

GEORGE J. SCHAEFER

Vice President - General Manager
Paramount Pictures Distrib. Corp.

I shall be glad to act on the Committee in connection with awarding the prizes for the most meritorious theatre exploitation campaign. I believe it is most important that theatre managements be encouraged at this time, to present quality product in an intelligent manner to the public. This is more necessary today than ever.

HERSCHEL STUART

Theatre Management Corp.

I will be pleased and honored to serve on your committee. The Quigley Awards should be the means of stimulating managers to greater efforts.

WALTER MORRIS

Manager, Metropolitan
Washington, D. C.

I like the plaque idea.

In instituting it, Mr. Quigley will doubtlessly endear himself and the institution he heads to the industry, managers and exploiteers. There has long been a need for material recognition of meritorious work in the field of exploitation, and the far reaching influence of open competition between showmen for an award will naturally prompt everyone to struggle harder to create more outstanding campaigns and in the end produce greater results.

Mr. Quigley and yourself are to be saluted for this emblematic recognition of merit. It will be inspiring to showmen the world over.

EDWARD FINNEY

Advertising & Publicity Director
Monogram Pictures Corporation

Will be most happy to serve on the committee of judges you are now forming to pass on the outstanding campaigns of the month with a view to giving prizes for those adjudged the best. I think this a constructive thought and feel privileged to be able to have a hand in making the exhibitors more exploitation-conscious, and to help the Managers' Round Table Club carry on what I believe is one of the most constructive services in the tradepaper field.

HAL HORNE

Advertising & Publicity Director
United Artists Corporation

First of all, permit me to congratulate you and the Quigley Publications as well as the Managers' Round Table Club, on what I believe will be one of the most stimulating drives for business in several years. I think that the Quigley Awards will be an effective stimulant to theatre men to get behind each and every picture to the fullest extent, towards the end that the producers, distributors and theatres themselves will profit accordingly.

It will be a real privilege and honor to serve on your committee. You can count on my every cooperation.

G. S. YORKE

Advertising Manager
Fox Film Corporation

I shall be pleased to serve on the committee of Judges in connection with the Quigley Awards for the most meritorious theatre exploitation.

Showmen Clicking On "I'm No Angel"

Campaigns on the latest Mae West record-breaker are being received with every mail. Showmen everywhere have taken advantage of every opportunity the picture presents. Here are some of the high lights on the selling drives from various sections.

E. E. Collins, City Manager
Bob Kelley, Ad Chief
Raymond Jones, Majestic Theatre
Interstate Circuit, Houston, Tex.

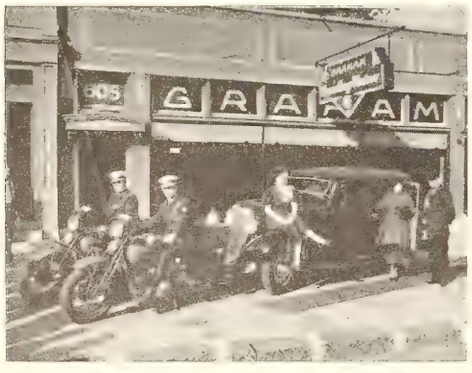
These members cooperated on a number of selling angles that filled the Majestic, Kirby and Metropolitan Theatres on the opening day, and two midnight showings the night before. Among the many things put over was a tieup with leading department store which ran a full-page story on the coming date in their house magazine sent to a mailing list of over 10,000. Many prominent stores plugged the Mae West fashions and the picture in newspaper ads, and a full window display on the Lux tieup was promoted in the busiest drug store.

Hundreds of grocery stores placed theatre heralds in every package, tying in with an auto contest giveaway promoted by Royal Gelatin, retailed by these stores. The press book wisecrack contest and West double stunt were also put on, a sound truck Bally and a series of radio talks, written by a local dramatic critic who also did the announcing were some of the other slants used by these fast moving showmen.

J. J. Musselman
Rialto, Louisville, Ky.

A fireworks display including bombs and red fire was used by this member to signalize his opening, and extensive advance campaign calling this to the attention of his patrons. Weeks before the date, Musselman tied in with 25 leading stores on all the Mae West fashions which the merchants ordered and advertised strongly. A West double was driven from store to store, ads announcing the time of her arrival in each spot. This was put on with motorcycle police escort and footmen (see photo), who unrolled carpets from car to store entrance. The bally also visited schools, factories, mills, etc.

"J. J." received some extra publicity from a prominent police case in which the defendant announced she was adopting the star's name. Drug stores tied in on the press book makeup suggestion and various sizes of colored posters, cutouts and stills were planted in windows of almost every well located store on the main street.



Musselman's Police Escort

Marvin S. Harris
Irvin, Bloomington, Ill.

One of the best features of this campaign was the special eight-page tab size newspaper, carrying merchants' ads and plugging some of the press book publicity stunts. Cost was nil, ads paying for everything, 7,000 papers being distributed house to house. All busses and street cars were bannered and in exchange for passes all cabs carried tire covers.

A midnight show was advertised with a street parade led by a boys' band and other striking ballys were taken from the press book private wardrobe gag and beaverboard flight of steps from the street to the marquee, with the "Come up and see me" copy.

J. J. Cahill
Brockton, Brockton, Mass.

Joe's outstanding street stunt was an antique auto in which a local "West" was driven around town and in the neighboring area (see photo). He also used the "flight of steps" gag from the street to the marquee and had a rug running from the curb to box office on which was lettered "Come up and see me."

Cahill's Antique Bally

The press book nickname contest was put on in the lobby where artists worked on painting of star's head. Patrons were asked to suggest names on special cards provided and these were pinned to the drawing. Both sides of entrance were covered with 24s, with the jewels on star's costume flittered by house artist to make them seem real.

Vic Gauntlett
Fifth Avenue, Seattle, Wash.

Vic reached way out into the country on this one by planting a number of 55-foot banners across the highways at the city limits of many towns within the drawing area, topping these with one almost twice as large adjacent to one of the town's busiest traffic corners. Theatre head usherette dressed as Mae West was introduced at big movie ball at prominent hotel and the girl also covered leading stores and other spots.

Parachutes were released over football stadium, each one carrying different copy to advertise the picture. Washington University band played in front of theatre for the opening and searchlights and other illuminations were also used.

In above campaigns, as in those publicized in last issue, little has been said regarding the splendid newspaper publicity of all kinds, syndicated stuff, press book stories, etc., obtained by these showmen. This angle played an important part in building up the big grosses in all dates.

Ace Exhibit Sells Coming Attractions

Searching about for a different idea to sell the new season's product, Division Supervisor Claude F. Lee worked out something distinctly out of the ordinary for the Florida Theatre, Gainesville, Fla., by renting a vacant store a short distance away and installing therein what he called "The Florida Theatre Exhibit of 1933-34 Screen Productions."

The thought came to Lee while he was looking over the pages of one of the announcement production books, and he figured that if it was good enough to interest him, it should do likewise for the average picture fan. He immediately acted by arranging for the store space and wrote each film exchange requesting two copies of their annual so that both sides of each page could be used.

Upon receipt the art department dissembled these books and mounted the displays on what appeared to be black mat board, but in reality was the backs of old window cards painted black. These were placed against the walls of the store, which were covered with unbleached cloth, this also stretched from wall to wall in modernistic angles.

A large date book was made from compo board (see photo), the edges made to appear as pages in a book, and upon the face of the book were lettered in the coming pictures and their dates. Decorations such as rugs for the floor, wicker furniture, etc., were promoted in addition to floor lamps and lighting fixtures.

The entire front of the store was covered with a compo board front in modernistic design appropriately lettered with names of many of the coming attractions and an invitation for passersby to enter free of charge. Uniformed ushers were in attendance at all times to explain the exhibit, and further attention was called to it by screen trailers, newspaper stories and lobby posters.

Each visitor was asked to sign a registration blank stating what coming pictures they were most interested in and naming their favorite stars. Space on the blank was left for names and addresses and each night a few of the blanks were drawn and free passes given to those signing them.

Lee reports the length of the run as three weeks, the attendance over 7,000, with 3,500 registration blanks filled out, and the entire cost of the stunt was $52.

The exhibit idea as put over by Lee is a very smart one in our opinion, and its possibilities might be studied by other members for big campaigns.

First, Monogram came through with "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," it could have been an accident, we thought. It was excellent entertainment however and we tagged it accordingly. Next came "Broken Dreams," another swell piece of entertainment and we tagged it "Worthy of the label of any major producer." Now, third on the list, comes "He Couldn't Take It," Monogram's most entertaining picture to date and we are doffing the chapeau to the Monogram organization.

ROUND TABLER DEFENDS BALLY

World's Fair Contest Winner Refutes Chas. Bassin's Statements On Weaknesses of Exploitation

by SID HOLLAND
Warner Theatre, Elkhart, Ind.

"What's Wrong with Ballyhoo" has been covered and dismissed with dispatch in the small space of one page of text in the November 25th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD by my friend and brother theatre operator, Charles Bassin, of good old New England.

Charlie and I operated theatres in Massachusetts and Rhode Island some five years ago and I'm sure he will take the few following friendly remarks in the spirit they are written.

Mr. Bassin states that the public, by advance information from the many fan magazines, has schooled itself in the approval or disapproval of pictures, and therefore doesn't wait for the theatre man to tell them about the picture. We wonder if Charlie has ever picked up a few of these so-called fan magazines and noted the diversified "alleged" criticisms of these "mushroom" pamphlets.

If the movie going public takes serious stock in the picture comment in fan magazines as they are published today, we should see the ludicrous picture of men and women with one foot in the direction of a theatre playing a particular attraction and with the other foot in the opposite direction. The criticisms in these "rags" almost invariably contradict themselves once or twice in each review.

Keep the Faith

The writer honestly believes that where the local theatre man has kept faith with his public and has not sold every picture as the "greatest attraction of the year" ballyhoo means the same and has the same advantages as in any other era of showbusiness.

The trouble does not lie with ballyhoo, but with the purveyors of ballyhoo.

I do not mean that it is good policy to take an average or mediocre picture and say, "Mr. and Mrs. Moviegoer—Today we present a mediocre picture—and would suggest you attend the Opposition Theatre." We do say, however, to take this just "so so" picture, announce the cast and title and some point or points of value in the "mess" which you feel would appeal to your particular clientele. Then when you sell the "specials"—and make "the sky the limit" you'll cash in! You have not lied to your public! They have no reason to doubt the value of your "special."

Charlie further states that a "wary public dislikes being sold. It wants to buy." Do I understand him to mean that we are to sit by while the public is being sold on all sides by the local Little Theatre, The Boston or Chicago Opera Company, guest artists at the local high school, the Firemen's Ball, etc., etc., and trust and pray that above the din of all this sales effort around us, the public will hear the little peep of the quiet announcement of our outstanding attraction?

No Siree! Charlie then states "The bargain seekers of entertainment cannot be 'hoked' into spending their money for pictures they do not want to see."—and he is right—but, we must not minimize the value of the smash campaign that hits your prospective patrons in the eye and ear no matter where they may go!

Repititio est mater studiorum. That is just a little Latin phrase "Repetition is the mother of learning." And how true it is! The twenty-four sheet, the window card, the radio, the mails, the newspapers, the trailers! I'd hate to see them go!

Don't Kill Bally

Kill the Old Ballyhoo and kill Showbusiness with it. Once more I want to repeat—that if we have kept faith with our public—they will tear down the doors to see what we're yelling about! But let's be sure we don't yell at the wrong time.

In the early portion of Charlie Bassin's story he says, "No longer is it necessary for you to extol the virtues of each attraction to your patrons. Just tell them what the picture is and they will flock in." Charlie later contradicts his own statement when he says, in speaking of the theatre manager—"He must saturate his potential trading area with a forceful campaign engendering legitimate sales fire." Pray tell, my friend, what is this legitimate "sales fire" to be if you are not "extolling your merchandise." I'll stick to the present-day method of exploitation. It is bringing me satisfactory results.

What, Mr. Bassin, do you question the veracity of that statement?

Vas you dere, Sharlie?

Nichols Executes Sound "Missing" Campaign

For a well rounded campaign that included a number of ideas and displays, adapted from those put over successfully in other spots, we cite you the effective broadside put over by Don Nichols, head man at Warner's Broadway, Charlotte, N. C.

The scarehead type press book newspaper ads were used in advance and a classified tieup with the morning paper ran three days before and first two days of the showing. A more than usual front was also constructed, in which some of the already proven crowd stoppers were given prominence, as can be seen in the accompanying photo, which included the live carrier pigeon page gag placed above the box office.

Nichols availed himself of some excellent billboards without cost by promoting a number of temporarily vacant 24 stands and sniping in and around the city with three and one-sheets. Newspaper publicity was both generous and well spotted, and his campaign during the run of the picture was also well handled.

Thus the engagement was successful, proving that ideas and stunts on one picture that have helped in other locations may be utilized profitably by showmen smart enough to realize their value.

Louie's Kid Club Sponsored by Merchant

A kiddie club tieup which he is putting over to exploit the Buck Jones' serial, "Gordon of Ghost City," in conjunction with some of his Christmas activities, is reported to be functioning successfully by Round Tabler Louis Charninsky, who keeps the folks down in Dallas aroused with his doings at the Capitol Theatre.

The entire cost was undertaken by a local shoe repairing company who were allowed to sponsor the club in return for which 50,000 membership cards were printed to be given to each child visiting any of their stores. In addition, radio programs and daily newspaper ads over a period of 14 weeks were also contributed. Two weeks in advance, the repair company printed heralds advertising the club and distributed these at all schools.

Louie's plans include a free show the morning before Christmas, and to each child who has attended the theatre each week since the inauguration of the club will be given a free toy and Louie has also laid off the cost of these through a tieup with another sponsor.

Charninsky is smart enough to realize that live-wire merchants are willing to avail themselves of the possibilities in this sort of activity, and are willing to pay the necessary costs of adequate exploitation and advertising, which of course are aimed to boost the gross.

Manager Breaks Into Popular Comic Strip

Having his name included in a nationally known comic page is the distinction accorded Sonny Shepherd, popular skipper of the Mayfair, Miami, Fla., who sends along a tear sheet of the well known "Brutus" funnies character, in which the proud name of Shepherd and the theatre is inscribed on one of the backgrounds in the strip. The gag came about through the friendship between this Round Tabler and Johnny Gruelle, the artist who spends his winters in the resort city.

Sonny is very busy superintending the many new features of his unique theatre, which include Spanish tropical garden, sidewalk cafes and folding doors which take the place of the entire front, pictures of which will no doubt be run in a coming issue of "Better Theatres."

Among his recent theatre activities, Sonny put over the "Lady for a Day" stunt to the expected big returns, using as he says, an 83-year-old young member of the Three Score and Ten Club, a tourist organization of elderly visitors of 70 years and over.

Addison "Parlez-Vous" On Chevalier Advance

The activities of Round Tabler H. M. Addison, Cleveland Loew Theatre chief, in some of his recent campaigns present a number of interesting angles, and one that is pointed to stir up a little different curiosity is a throwaway on "The Way to Love" at the State, containing a sentence in French with free tickets given to the first 25 mailing in the correct translation. The card is labeled "How's your French today?" with the tiein copy of course having to do with the picture. Illustrated with a typical shot of Chevalier, it makes up a nice teaser ad.

Addison's Chevalier Cutout

Accompanying photo shows a novel bally put on in the lobby of the dark Ohio theatre, next door to the State. A blow-up of Chevalier, eight feet high was used and a four inch heart in red pinned to his breast. Darts were distributed to onlookers and those piercing the heart from a distance of twenty feet were awarded passes.

On the "Torch Singer," Addy pulled another contest by offering 25 admissions to those guessing the names of famous screen vamps of former years, whose pictures were placed on a blotter shaped card which also carried theatre and picture mention. A further gag was a full length shot of Claudette Colbert on a sticker pasted to all packages delivered by a leading dry cleaner.

We also like the crepe paper Thanksgiving lobby display at the State in which coming attractions were illustrated by some very well done turkey art, a background of orange toning up the flash.

Builds Sandbag Trenches To Plug War Picture

To stimulate the war atmosphere on his showing of "Forgotten Men," Manager Garry Lassman, Avon Theatre, Utica, N. Y., not only built a sandbag trench effect on the sidewalk in front of his theatre (see photo), but at intervals during the engagement set off barrages of fireworks, which he reports aroused plenty of curiosity.

An American Legion night, smartly publicized, brought a very fine response as the two posts in Utica attended in a body, led by their respective drum corps and their officers. To advertise this, and also used in advance of the date, was a sound truck that covered the city and surrounding territory, in addition to the local foreign sections, the residents of which were advised of the showing in Lassman's local foreign press.

House to house distribution of special heralds, special war front prepared by the theatre sign shop, and a number of other profitable slants were used by Garry.

IMPROVING YOUR PROJECTION

Second in the Series on Better Screen Vision and Better Sound Written Specially for Managers

by F. H. RICHARDSON

Suppose, for example, we believe our picture to be very steady, but in some other theatre we see a screen image just about absolutely immovable, insofar as has to do with movement of the picture as a whole. Instantly our mind inquires the reason. Where should we look for the seat of our trouble?

First, there is the film itself to consider. New film is today to all intents and purposes mechanically perfect in the matter of perforation. First of all we will examine our films critically for worn sprocket holes, pulled or strained or cracked sprocket holes and as to how perfectly splices are made. To do this in the best way we must have a good, strong magnifying glass—not necessarily a microscope, but something in the way of a powerful reading glass. This glass should be fixed in permanent position on a flat top wooden block in such way that when the film is pulled across the top of the block under the lens, it will be magnified to the maximum power of the glass. I would in fact strongly recommend the installation of such a device in every projection room. It would not only enable the projectionist or manager to examine films as suggested, but also it would provide means for critical examinations when some dispute arises between theatre and exchange concerning damage to film.

Reject Poor Films

If the films we are using show signs of appreciable sprocket hole edge roughness or wear, if sprocket hole edges show signs of strain or are cracked, we need look no further for the cause of movement of our screen image as a whole. The remedy is plain. Don't use such films, or accept the movement as inevitable so long as you do use them. If we find poorly made splices, stiff splices or too-wide splices, we may expect the screen image to move or jump more or less when one of them passes over the intermittent sprocket. True, it may not happen, but it probably will. The remedy is to take the matter up with the exchange, demanding that such splices be eliminated, or else to pay our projectionist a reasonable sum in addition to his regular wage to attend to the job.

If our examination shows the fault to not be in the film itself, we will proceed to the projector. First of all, we must make sure there is no vibration or movement in the projection room floor, since any such vibration or movement will of course set up movement of the screen image, which may be largely magnified up and down if the movement be such as will impart to the projector a teetering motion.

If the floor be solid and without movement, as most projection room floors now are, we will next examine the intermittent movement and sprocket of the projector, since in one of these two things the cause of the trouble must lie. It may be lost motion in the intermittent movement; too much wear in the intermittent sprocket shaft bearings; an intermittent sprocket improperly fitted to its shaft or loose upon its shaft; an intermittent sprocket shaft sprung slightly out of true, in which case the movement will be up and down regularly four times to each revolution of the crash shaft, or it may be due to a worn intermittent sprocket. Of course, it also may be found in a combination of two, or more of these possible causes.

Suppose, on the other hand, we find the lighting of the picture in another theatre to be superior to that of our own. The illumination is more pleasing or easier on the eyes or more even all over the screen. What should be done?

Visit Other Theatres

Well, I would first of all try to find out what sort of screen surface the other house had, how old it was and its exact condition, which latter could of course only be done by a personal examination and a comparison with some surface such as plain white paper. Unless it seems possible to take the manager of the other theatre into our confidence, any real examination of the screen would be impractical. However, if the theatre be not a direct competitor of our own, its manager will doubtless be glad to render us any aid possible.

Having gotten all the available data, we would go home and, first of all, carefully examine the screen surface of my own theatre, testing it with white paper—the same piece used in the other theatre if a test be made there. Or if the path of wisdom was followed when our own screen was installed, and a sample of its surface secured, wrapped in black cloth and stored in a dark, dry place, I would use that for testing.

If it is found that the surface has lost largely in reflection power, or if it does not compare well with the white paper, it will be best to get the surface into first class condition. How that might be done would of course depend upon circumstances. Perhaps by cleaning, perhaps by recoating, perhaps by painting kalsomining, perhaps by installing a new screen.

Nice Work, Kenneth

With his application for membership, Manager Kenneth A. Grimes, Warner, Morgantown, W. Va., enclosed two full-page co-op ads that are very well done, the mats furnished by a Los Angeles engraving company.

These were put over on "The World Changes" and "Little Women," seven local merchants sharing the cost of each page, with a sizable space in the center for the theatre ad. Grimes states that he finds this type of page easy to sell, which we can believe as the layout and art work are high grade in all respects, and also sell.

Smart Showmanship on "Footlight" Showings

Working the girl street stunt from a different angle, Gene Fox, Metropolitan Theatre ad head, Boston, Mass., planted a couple of gals in a bannered Chinese rickshaw pulled through the streets by a man in coolie outfit (see photo). A portable victrola was carried which played the song hits, while heralds were distributed. Gene put on another click stunt with a number of costumed girls on the marquee, each holding a card that spelled out the title. Still another street stunt consisted of five girls in pajama costume on roller skates who also handed out heralds on the streets.

Fox's Rickshaw Bally

Prominent in the Newark, N. J., campaign put over at the Branford Theatre by Warner zone manager Don Jaycocks and ad head Jules Curley was an 85 foot long banner hung along the front of the theatre from the roof with huge burgees suspended beneath. For the first time permission was received to suspend a street banner from the theatre to the opposite side of the street.

In addition to other street stunts, the outstander was a truck carrying a sky writing device (see photo) which flashed the title and theatre on clouds, sides of buildings, etc. Girls on roller skates and bannered bicycles were also used as was the traveling dressing room stunt.

A stocking parade in a large department store window featured the advertising at the Capitol, Salt Lake City, Utah, with a group of seated girls going through a tap dance in back of a satin drape hung knee high, upon which the title and theatre were lettered. At intervals each girl would remove her hose, put on a new pair and then model behind a special strip of foots, after which the chorus would again go through their dance routine.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1933, unless otherwise specified.

EASTMAN Background Negative is winning wide acclaim among the many producers and cameramen who have already discovered its possibilities. Its remarkably fine grain meets the prime requirement of background shots that are to be projected and rephotographed. Other qualities . . . particularly a surprising degree of speed . . . give it a potential versatility that may well lead to finer photography in other directions. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)
